Mr. Chairman, I yield the rest of my time to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. ALLEN].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. ALLEN] is entitled to the floor for nine minutes.

Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, the members of this House know how amiable I am and what a sweet disposition I have. [Laughter.] They know, therefore, what a painful duty it is to me to antagonize the pet schemes and projects of my brother members—a thing I would only do in response to my conception of my duty. But, sir, in view of what is being said and done here with reference to these bills for public buildings, and the further fact that the few of us who oppose much of this legislation have been unable to get a yea-and-nay vote, so as to place ourselves upon record, I desire to make a few remarks on the pending bill, and to express some views on the general subject of the erection of public buildings.

The responsibility of leadership resting on me [laughter] makes it proper that I should put on record my disapproval of much that is being done in this direction, for those of us who accept the honors and privileges of leadership must not shirk the responsibility of our positions. [Laughter.] As has been stated here, there have been introduced in this Congress one hundred and thirty-nine bills for the erection of public buildings, asking appropriations amounting in the aggregate to nearly $25,000,000.

Three months of the session have not yet passed and the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds have reported bills favorably amounting to more than $8,000,000, all of which will pass readily if a vote could be had on them, if we are to judge by what we have seen here for the last few days. We seem to be in the midst of a great public-building boom. From the activity exhibited here on the floor by the friends of these various measures in the hustling around to get a quorum and suppress opposition, we can readily imagine what a pressure has been brought to bear on the committee to get favorable reports on these various bills.

That some of these measures are meritorious, I do not deny. That many of them are extravagant in the amounts called for, and some of them wholly unnecessary, I firmly believe. The proposition submitted in the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] a few days ago, by which he proposed to establish a rule for the government of the House for the purpose of checking this growing evil, was in my judgment a wise one. That is, that we should only pass these bills where the executive officers of the Government recommend them and show the necessity for them, or in cases where rentals paid by the Government would make it a matter of interest to the Government, on economical business principles, to build instead of renting. Let us examine, now, the bill before the House.

It appropriates $50,000 for the erection of a public building at Bar Harbor, Me., for the suitable accommodation of the post-office and other Government offices at that place. I have read the report prepared by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. MILLIKEN] carefully, and suppose he has stated the case as strongly as the facts will justify. The post-office seems to be the only Government office there.

The entire receipts of the post-office for the year 1887 were $6,310.62. The postmaster receives a salary of $1,700. It appears to be a town to which some people resort during the heat of summer, and to which fact it owes its chief importance. We are also told it has an abundance of pure water and bracing air.

Now, Mr. Chairman, what sort of a showing is this for the erection of a $50,000 building? Of all people who have little use for a public building it would seem to me that those who are lounging at a summer resort would have the least. [Laughter.]

It is true the considerations of bracing air and pure water are not to be overlooked. The question of an abundance of pure water, I admit, sir, is a growing question. [Laughter.] But exactly why bracing air and pure water bring into requisition a public building, I am not able to see.

When you have erected a public building at a cost of $50,000 and appointed the customary number of employés to take care of it, and add to that the expense of lighting, heating, and repairs, and deduct the salary of the postmaster from the entire receipts of the office there, and if the Government does not come out badly behind on Bar Harbor, then I am a poor book-keeper; yet we are told by the committee that economy demands this appropriation.

For one, Mr. Chairman, in the interest of an overtaxed constituency, I must enter my protest against all such appropriations, and I desire here and now to dissent from the utterances we have been listening to on this floor for the last few days from gentlemen who contend that this is the proper way to dispose of the surplus in the Treasury.

This is not my idea of the proper solution of this surplus question. Of all the extravagance-breeding and demoralizing conditions of this Government, I know of none more vicious and prolific of ill-advised and extravagant legislation than the condition we have of an overflowing Treasury.

It is used as an excuse in justification for appropriations that have no other merit than that of taking money out of the Treasury. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BROWNE] in his advocacy of the proposition to appropriate $25,000,000 for public buildings told us the other day that there was dropping into the till of the Treasury $100,000 each hour of every day. My solution of this question lies in an opposite direction from that suggested by gentlemen who favor this system of extravagance.

This money is collected by taxation from people a large majority of whom have a hard struggle to get it and are illy able to pay it, and so long as I have a voice or a vote as a member of this House I shall favor reducing taxation to the lowest possible limit consistent with a good, business-like, economical administration of the Government. I do not wonder that gentlemen who vote for such bills as the one now under consideration object to and vote down propositions for the ayes and noes.

I believe there are many of those who compose the grand army who have been passing through the tellers to vote for this sluice of public-building bills within the last few days who, if they had been required to go on record, would have refused to vote as they did. I for one think the distinguished gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] is entitled to the thanks of the country for his manly fight against the public-building boom.

While it may have resulted in preventing some meritorious measures from being reached, it was plain to be seen that enough members had pooled their interests to have passed every public-building bill on the Calendar without any discrimination between the good and the bad.

I understood the chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds to say in the debate the other day that all these bills reported by the committee had been estimated for and recommended by some Executive Department of the Government.

I remember, Mr. Chairman, during the Forty-ninth Congress the Chief Executive of the Government frequently by his veto messages remonstrated against the passage of just such bills as the one under consideration, and many others that have passed this House in the last few days, and I think the great mass of the people in this country indorse those vetoes, and unless he has changed his mind, it might be well for him to look after some of those under him in the Administration if they are making recommendations so antagonistic to his ideas of good policy.

Mr. DIBBLE. I will take the floor and yield for five minutes to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. MILLIKEN].

Mr. MILLIKEN. Mr. Chairman, I do not need more than one minute, for I do not want to disturb the effect of the chaste and delicate wit of my friend from Missouri [Mr. BLAND], nor the lucid and luminous eloquence of my friend from Mississippi [Mr. ALLEN]. [Laughter.] The speech of the gentleman from Missouri I have heard so many times in this House, and it has been answered so often since these public-buildings bills came up, that I feel it is unnecessary to make further reply to it.

That gentleman is something like the old woman who had been borrowing a kettle all her life. At last, after forty years, she got one of her own, when she resolved never to borrow or to loan any more. My friend has obtained an appropriation of $146,000 for his little town of Jefferson City, not of so much importance as Bar Harbor nor growing as fast, and now he does not want any other place in the country to have an appropriation to put up a public building. [Laughter.] And as to my friend from Mississippi [Mr. ALLEN], I know he would oppose the erection of a public building at any place where the diet is simply pure water. [Laughter.]

Mr. DIBBLE. I move the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. BLAND. I move, in the first section, to strike out "$50,000" and insert "$25,000;" and also to make the same amendment in the second section.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I accept that amendment on the part of my friend from the West.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can not accept the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TAULBEE. I move to strike out the enacting clause of the bill.

Mr. DIBBLE. Is that in order?

The CHAIRMAN. The committee can recommend the striking out of the enacting clause to the House.

Mr. TAULBEE. I move to strike out all of the bill after the enacting clause.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 18, noes 114.

Mr. TAULBEE. No quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order being made that no quorum has voted, the Chair will order tellers.

Mr. TAULBEE and Mr. DIBBLE were appointed tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 10, noes 155.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, $40,000 is enough for this in all seriousness.

Mr. DIBBLE. Why it is only $25,000 now. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. BLAND. Well, I am very glad of the change. I did not know it had been accepted, and withdraw the amendment. [Renewed laughter.]

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

APPRAISER'S WAREHOUSE, NEW YORK.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1661) for the erection of an appraiser's warehouse in the city of New York, and for other purposes.

The bill was read, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

"That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to purchase a site, and cause to be erected thereon a substantial and commodious fire-proof building, for the use of the United States appraiser, and for other Government uses, at the city of New York, in the State of New York. The site purchased shall embrace an area sufficient, in the opinion of the said Secretary, for the purposes above mentioned; and the said site shall be selected after an advertisement for at least ten days for proposals in six of the leading newspapers published in said city, and shall not exceed in cost the sum of $850,000; and the building to be erected on said site, when purchased, shall be plain and without porticoes, towers, or needless ornamentation, but shall contain the necessary accommodations and appliances for an appraiser's warehouse, sufficient to insure the examination and appraisal of imported merchandise with facility and dispatch, and shall not exceed in cost the sum of $650,000; nor shall any plan for the said building be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury involving an expenditure exceeding the said sum of $700,000 for said building completed for use, including heating apparatus, approaches, and other incidental expenses; and the sum of $850,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated for the purchase of a site as aforesaid, and the sum of $650,000 is hereby appropriated for the erection of the said building out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

"SEC. 2. That the said Secretary is hereby further authorized and directed, in his discretion (in lieu and stead of the purchase of a site for an appraiser's warehouse only), to purchase a site embracing an area sufficient for the purposes mentioned in this section for the erection of a new custom-house building, in addition to said appraiser's warehouse; or the said Secretary of the Treasury may, in his discretion, purchase two sites in the vicinity of each other in said city of New York, suitable for both of said purposes of the appraiser's storehouse and custom-house; and then and in that event the said single site for custom-house and appraiser's warehouse as aforesaid, or two sites in the vicinity of each other, as the case may be, shall not exceed in cost the sum of $1,500,000, which sum, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated for the purpose, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated (in lieu and stead of the sum of $800,000 hereinbefore appropriated), and is to be available only in case the said single site for both custom-house and appraiser's warehouse, or two sites in the vicinity of each other, shall be purchased as herein set forth.

"SEC. 3. That no part of said sum or sums shall be expended for any site until a valid title to such site shall be vested in the United States, nor until the State of New York shall cede to the United States exclusive jurisdiction over the same, during the time the United States shall be or remain the owner thereof, for all purposes except the administration of the criminal laws of said State and the service of civil process therein.

"SEC. 4. That in case of the purchase of a single site for both custom-house and appraiser's warehouse, or of two sites in the vicinity of each other, as provided in section 2 of this act, then the appropriation of $700,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary for the erection of an appraiser's warehouse, shall be available for the purpose, in like manner as provided in section 1 of this act."

Mr. DIBBLE. I desire to call attention to some clerical errors which I ask to correct before we proceed with the regular consideration of the bill.

In line 18 of the second section of the amendment the sum $800,000 should be $850,000, to conform to the provisions of the bill. Again, in line 4 of section 4, $650,000 should be inserted instead of $700,000, as it appears in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the verbal amendments suggested by the gentleman from South Carolina will be considered as adopted.

There was no objection.

Mr. DIBBLE. Mr. Chairman, I would state very briefly that this bill, while not identical in words, is identical in substance, barring some minor details, with the bill which was unanimously reported by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds in the Forty-ninth Congress, after a visit of a subcommittee to the city of New York for the purpose of inspecting the necessities there existing, after a full conference with the collector and appraisers, after full conferences with all the members representing the city of New York in Congress, on which occasion Mr. Hewitt went around with us for half a day, and other members of Congress from that city were with us and conferred with us from time to time; that it then had the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, and that it represents probably the most pressing necessity for a public building now existing in the United States.

The appraiser's warehouse in New York is a rented building. It has been leased for a short term of years under an agreement that at each renewal there shall be an appraisal of the premises by a commission appointed, one by the owner, one by the Government, and an umpire by the two.

The last appraisal of this property—and it should be remembered that this is quite an old building, almost in ruins; it is an old sugar-house or something of that sort converted into its present purposes by temporary repairs—at the last appraisement the value ran from $750,000 up to $1,000,000, but finally, when they called in an umpire, it was appraised at $810,000. Under the terms of the lease the Government has to pay 8 per cent. of that amount, or about $64,000 rental; and, in addition to that expense, whatever money is necessary for repairs, and owing to the dilapidated condition of the building this item forms a considerable addition to the rental.

The building is inconvenient, not adapted to the purpose at all. It is such a great distance from the custom-house in New York that the business of importers is delayed in the transmission of papers from one to the other; and I believe it is the unanimous opinion of everybody who has any means of determining the necessities of the case that the custom-house and appraiser's warehouse should be near to each other, at convenient places selected; and if the Secretary of the Treasury should be able to find a single site, or two sites, near to each other, for this purpose, why, then, with this appropriation he will be able to build the appraiser's warehouse, and the money for which the present site of the custom-house in New York would sell to-day, which is admitted by good judges to be one of the most valuable pieces of ground in the city—the Government paid for it when it bought it years ago $1,000,000, and it is estimated to be worth at least three millions to-day—the sale of that site in Wall street for business purposes will probably pay the expense incurred in the proposed new structure, and in fact, after finding a new site and building the appraiser's warehouse and the custom-house, ultimately I doubt if the Government will have to spend any money at all, or if it does, but a very small sum.

Mr. DUNHAM. Will the gentleman yield for a question? How far do you require this building to be from any other building?

Mr. DIBBLE. The proposition contemplates buying a square of ground, so that it will have a street on each side.

Mr. DUNHAM. Have you any clause in the bill to that effect?

Mr. COX. Yes, I think so.

Mr. DIBBLE. If there is not, I would certainly consent that it should be put in. I presume there would be no objection from any quarter to that.

Mr. DUNHAM. I ask the gentleman for information. I know that in other bills the committee are requiring that no building shall be within 40 feet of any other. I want to know if you have put that requirement in this bill. I think that is the demand of the Treasury Department for all.

Mr. DIBBLE. It is a proper provision, and I have no objection to its being put in this bill if it is not already there. But I may state that whether it shall be a single site or a double site it will be a site with a street on either side, which provides for the requirement which the gentleman has referred to.

Mr. DUNHAM. The gentleman from South Carolina knows I do not think that the 40-feet provision is necessary; but the committee are requiring that in other bills, and that is the reason why I ask the chairman of the committee if it is provided for in this bill.

Mr. DIBBLE. I see it is not in the bill. It was left out by inadvertence in the redraught. I am willing the gentleman should move an amendment to have that provision inserted.

Mr. DUNHAM. I suggest that since the committee expressed itself as determined that no building should be put up by the Government unless there was a distance of 40 feet from every other, the gentleman himself should move that amendment. I have tried to get something through the committee which would allow us in the city which I have the honor in part to represent to have a fire-proof building without that requirement. But the committee would not allow it. I do not know why a building should be put up in New York without a specification of that kind any more than in Chicago.

Mr. DIBBLE. The committee have no objection to the amendment suggested, and I will insert it in the usual words.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. BLAND. Does this close the debate on the pending bill?

The CHAIRMAN. No gentleman had arisen to oppose the bill. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. DIBBLE. I reserve the balance of my time. How much time have I?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has four minutes of his time remaining.

Mr. BLAND. I did desire to be recognized, but the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KERR] informed me that he wished to be heard at this time.

Mr. KERR. I am much obliged to the gentleman from Missouri for permitting me to make the remarks I desire to make on this bill and on all the bills before the House proposing the erection of additional public buildings. I for one am not in favor of expending $25,000,000 in the erection of public buildings in this country at this time until the line of policy in reference to our taxation shall be adopted and be permanent.

There are different theories now existing and striving for ascendency in this country as to the methods of taxation. On one side it is contended that all the Government revenues should be raised by taxes upon the imports into this country. If that system should be adopted, which I think it ought to be, there would then be no necessity for nearly all of the public buildings that are being asked for in this Congress.

The other day a bill went through practically without opposition, asking for the appropriation of several hundred thousand dollars for the erection of a building in a city formerly the home of the present Executive of the United States, simply for the purpose of purchasing the ground; and it was shown in the report accompanying that bill that the buildings which have been erected recently in that place have been erected mainly for the accommodation of the internal-revenue offices of the United States. I hold that it is a waste of money to appropriate for erecting buildings for that purpose. I hold furthermore that it is in violation of the express pledges of the party now in power in this Government; and not only that, but it is in opposition to the traditional policy of the Democratic party in this country.

I wish to read now from an authority that ought to have some force. I mean the Federalist, thirty-sixth number, and coming from so eminent authority as Alexander Hamilton. He states in this number the objections that have existed in this country all the time to the creation of these internal-revenue offices:

Many specters have been raised out of this power of internal taxation to excite the apprehensions of the people, double sets of revenue officers, a duplication of their burthens by double taxations, and the frightful forms of odious and oppressive poll-taxes have been played off with all the ingenious dexterity of political legerdemain.

Now, this eminent authority was simply quoting what was the argument of the Democratic party in this country for the first hundred years of its existence; and even Mr. Hamilton never imagined that this system of taxation would be a permanence. He says:

As to the first point, there are two cases in which there can be no room for double sets of officers: one, where the right of imposing the tax is exclusively vested in the Union, which applies to the duties on imports; the other, where the object has not fallen under any State regulation or provision, which may be applicable to a variety of objects. In other cases the probability is that the United States will either wholly abstain from the objects preoccupied for local purposes, or will make use of the State officers and State regulations for collecting the additional imposition. This will best answer the views of revenue, because it will save expense in the collection, and will best avoid any occasion of disgust to the State government and to the people.

This was the position of Alexander Hamilton. And yet gentlemen on that side to-day are going further in these enactments and in insisting upon these theories than ever was maintained by the strongest of strong government men.

As regards the position of the Democracy on this subject, the gentleman from Missouri said the other day that only that side was opposed to these measures. I tell the gentleman these public-building measures have been reported by the unanimous vote of the Democratic committee and the members of the committee belonging to the Republican side of the House, and every one of them that has been appointed by the Democratic Speaker of this House has a public building that he wants passed [laughter]; so that the country ought not to hold the Republican party responsible for these measures.

Mr. TIMOTHY J. CAMPBELL. I would like to ask the gentleman one question.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. TIMOTHY J. CAMPBELL]?

Mr. KERR. No, I do not. [Laughter.]

Mr. TIMOTHY J. CAMPBELL. I only want to know if this is a party question.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Oh, to be sure it is.

Mr. KERR. Certainly it is a party question. These bills are reported by the unanimous vote of a Democratic committee, and they are being pushed through by that Democratic committee, and those on this side who are opposed to them have had no opportunity to express their views on the subject.

Mr. LEHLBACH. I would like to ask the gentleman [Mr. KERR] whether he is speaking for the Republican side of the House or not?

Mr. KERR. I am. [Laughter.] Now, Mr. Chairman, the Republican side of this House, as I understand their position, and as they have declared it, are not in favor of continuing this system of internal taxation, putting upon the people of this country the burden of paying taxes on tobacco and upon whisky, and compelling them to take the entire responsibility of sustaining this Government.

We are to-day in this country raising $103,000,000 annually, every dollar of which comes upon the poorer classes of society, and we are maintaining a system of wealthy and unscrupulous men who are degrading public morals and injuring the nation. This system of taxation is being continued in violation of the pledges made by the Democratic party in the national campaign, because they said then that they were not in favor of continuing these war taxes any longer than was necessary, and they went on to say in their platform that sufficient revenue to pay all the expenses of the General Government could be obtained from customs duties.

Mr. TIMOTHY J. CAMPBELL. I would like to ask the gentleman what he did the other day when the Council Bluffs building was up here. The record shows that he voted for it.

Mr. KERR. The gentleman asks me a question. I propose to vote on every question that is before this House upon its merits. The gentleman suggests that I voted for the Council Bluffs appropriation. I voted for an appropriation of $10,000 for a building in Council Bluffs, because $350,000, as the report showed, was in danger of being consumed and destroyed unless $10,000 or $15,000 additional was allowed to protect it from fire.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. That is a very good defense.

Mr. KERR. I wish to say further, Mr. Chairman, that I am also in favor of all necessary public buildings; but I protest against the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] coming before this House to advocate the reduction of taxation and opposing these bills, and claiming that his position is sustained by the Democratic party, when this legislation comes to us by the unanimous report of a Democratic committee of this House, and when the record shows that there is not a single Republican on that committee placed there at the request of the House; they have all been selected by the Democratic Speaker of this House, and every one of them, with one or two exceptions, has been appointed at his own request. [Laughter.]

Mr. DUNHAM. Mr. Chairman, as I understand that this New York building is to be on a square by itself, surrounded by four streets, I have no desire to press the "forty-feet" amendment which I suggested a short time ago.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DUNHAM] is very just in making that statement. I will say to the committee that if this bill is passed and carried into effect we shall have in New York the custom-house and perhaps the appraiser's stores so near the water-ways as to be perfectly convenient for the merchants of that city; and the only object of this bill, which has been introduced here for some seven or eight years and has been indorsed by all the administrations of the Treasury, both in New York and in this city—the only object of this bill is to afford convenience to the mercantile community and to the people throughout the Union who are interested in the collection of our customs duties.

Why, sir, New York collects five-sevenths of all our customs taxes, and it is almost indispensable now for the convenient transaction of that great business that we should have commodious buildings situated near each other. We have struck out from the bill, for wise reasons, so as not to have any speculative tendencies connected with legislation, any provision for the location of the site by legislation, leaving it to the integrity of the Department to select the proper place for the custom-house and the appraiser's stores after getting the best judgment of our merchants. The present custom-house, the old Merchants' Exchange, has been in use for nearly fifty years, and it is badly ventilated, badly lighted, and utterly unfit for the business; but, in the mean time, the value of the ground has so increased that, even without the building, we can now sell for three millions what we bought for one million; so that if the Government were disposed to be economical and to make money out of the transaction instead of spending, it could build the new structures out of the proceeds of the sale of the old custom-house on Wall street.

So that, when we come down to business, as some gentlemen here have suggested, there never was a more meritorious case presented. It is a case to be determined by business considerations alone. It does not belong to parties; and it is utterly unfair to argue the question on either side from any party standpoint. I refer gentlemen on both sides to reports of Judge Folger and other Secretaries of the Treasury, including the present Secretary. I cite also the indorsement not only of the present Chief Executive, but also of the late President Arthur, who was at one time himself connected with the collection of customs. Year after year these high officials have asked Congress to give the merchants of New York this much-needed accommodation.

I feel, Mr. Chairman, as if I ought not to say much on this subject. I have pursued it a good many years. I pursued it last spring, seeking from what was supposed to be a dying bed to do what I could for New York City. The bill failed then, because of lack of time. Having served this House to the best of my ability in other relations, I have now the pleasure of asking it, not for any political reasons, but for large mercantile business reasons, to give to New York this accommodation, which in the end will cost the Government not one cent of money. [Applause.]

I take the liberty of appending to my remarks a letter on this subject from the naval officer at the port of New York:

PORT OF NEW YORK, NAVAL OFFICE, February 8, 1888.

MY DEAR MR. COX: I have your very encouraging letter of yesterday's date. I can not now lay my hands upon any printed copy of the numerous reports made by me and others regarding the inadequacy of the present customs buildings, at this port. I can, however, give you some points.

In a report made by a commission appointed by the Secretary of the Treasury in October, 1886, to inquire generally into the condition of the collector's office at this port occurs the following:

"Every effort for the better arrangement of the force has met its most serious obstacle in the antiquated edifice which is used as the custom-house of this port. It would be difficult to find a building of the proper dimensions less suitable for the purpose or one more positively incurable in its defects. Inclosed by lofty structures on all sides, it is deprived of needed light and ventilation, is destitute of decent sanitary appliances, and is so constructed as to afford the maximum of inconvenience with the minimum of accommodation."

In a communication to the Secretary of the Treasury, dated October 20, 1887, in alluding to the unfitness of the New York custom-house, I said:

"It was built originally for a different class of business; a hollow-square building facing four streets was intended to contain distinct offices to be rented, and within the square was erected a great circular rotunda as a merchants' exchange. Constructed after the disastrous fire of December, 1835, this building was made in the most massive style and out of the most durable and hardest materials. The offices were a series of vaulted cells, built of brick burnt to a flinty hardness, and were only accessible by granite staircases from the four corners, and in each instance leading directly to the streets and away from the rotunda and other parts. The window space is not one-half that given in modern buildings, and, the apertures being through walls nearly 3 feet thick, the quantity of light admitted is much reduced, and what does enter is largely intercepted by the massive brick piers supporting the vaulted ceilings.

"While it is probably more nearly fire-proof than any edifice at this port it is also more incapable of any alteration or improvement; thus it lacks light, ventilation, sanitary condition, and most other requirements without the slightest opportunity of amelioration in those respects. In this unsuitable building, a great part of the customs business at this port has been transacted during the past twenty-five years; within its dark, somber, crowded, unwholesome, and inconvenient quarters the United States Government has required a great work to be accomplished, a work so great of its kind that the world has never seen its like. Within the quarter of a century this building has been occupied for customs purposes there has been collected within its granite walls the almost inconceivable sum of $3,000,000,000 in gold or its equivalent. I have sought in history for any sum collected as taxes through the forms of law at any one place that would even approach this in magnitude, considering the period of time occupied. The greatest annual collection ever made in the whole United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland was in 1879 when it reached £24,824,578 or $120,810,008, and there are thirteen years since 1866 in each of which a greater sum than the above was collected at the single port of New York, and in the year 1872 it exceeded the above maximum of all the British ports by $33,000,000. Another astonishing illustration of this immense collection is shown by the sum of the aggregate collection of customs duties within the whole United States from their establishment under the Constitution to and including 1862, when the present custom-house was first occupied, a period of seventy-four years; this aggregate sum was $1,614,993,569.20, or comparatively but little more than half the sum collected in that edifice from the end of that period in 1862 to the present date.

"It would seem reasonable that the Government should provide suitable quarters for the discharge of such an important duty as the collection of this vast revenue. In addition to the unsuitable accommodations of the custom-house, there is a present annual expenditure of nearly $100,000 for rented buildings occupied by the appraiser, the public store, and the naval office. At the minor ports of Philadelphia and San Francisco commodious appraisers' stores, far beyond the business demands, have been erected at the public expense. At New York an inconvenient building is rented, and, in spite of the large expenditures by the Government, is insufficient in space accommodation, to the serious detriment of the public business and to the interests of the importers."

I will add that in the year 1876, some three years after the present appraiser's stores at this port were first occupied, the number of packages of imported goods examined there was 154,201, and the number examined there in the year 1887 was 328,153, an increase of 173,952, or over 112 per cent.

It is obvious that the customs business transacted at the port of New York materially increases in the successive years. Secretary Fairchild illustrates this increase by statistics, given on page 22 of his last annual report.

Whether the tariff rates be high or low, so long as customs duties are collected every package imported into the country will have to be entered at the custom-house and be officially identified and inspected. There is therefore no doubt that the customs business at the port of New York will continue to increase, and probably in a greater ratio than at present.

There have been projects to add to the space in the present custom-house by building additional stories. This could be done at great expense, but the area thus added would not be in the lower part, where it is needed, and would be inconvenient of access to the great and steady throngs of persons who pass in and out during the active business hours every day. These additions would not add a cent to the value of the building when necessarily abandoned within a few years and sold by the Government.

Delay in the matter will increase the difficulty in obtaining desirable sites and add to their expense, while no time to begin such a building could be more opportune than the present, when the Treasury is overflowing.

I am, sir, with great respect, sincerely yours,

SILAS W. BURT.

Mr. DIBBLE. I move that this bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to, followed by applause.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT CHARLESTON, S. C.

The next business on the Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4358) to increase the limit of cost for the public building in course of erection at Charleston, S. C.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the limit of cost for the public building about to be erected for the use of the United States courts, post-office, Signal Service, railway mail service, and other Government uses, at Charleston, in the State of South Carolina, be fixed at the sum of $400,000 instead of the present limit of cost.

The amendment reported by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds was read, as follows:

Strike out "four" and insert "three," so as to read, "three hundred thousand dollars."

Mr. DIBBLE. Mr. Chairman, having been during the last two Congresses a member of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds and having entered upon the same duties in the present Congress, I feel bound to say in reply to the gentleman who addressed the House in relation to the membership of this committee that when I was first selected by the Speaker for a position on this committee I had no public building to ask from Congress. When the Speaker did me the honor in the last Congress to appoint me the chairman of this committee, I was still in the same position. The reason why an application for a public building was presented to the House in behalf of the city of Charleston, which I have the honor to represent, was because of the visitation of a public calamity, which occurred while I happened to be the chairman of this committee. I have a grateful sense of the alacrity with which both Houses of Congress responded to the appeal of Charleston during her adversity. The Senate passed at the last session the bill appropriating $400,000 to erect at Charleston a building designed to replace two buildings which were wrecked by the earthquake. That bill coming to this House was speedily reported by the committee. It had, I may say, in the last Congress the accord of both sides of the House, with the exception of perhaps seven or eight members, but as the records will show, a member of this House seemed to regard it as his duty to interpose dilatory motions. The alternative presented to me was either to allow the bill to fail or to accept as the appropriation for the building a sum which the Architect then said would be insufficient to erect it. The estimate then made by the Architect was that this building would cost $400,000, but I was compelled by dilatory motions to assent to an appropriation of only $200,000.

At the beginning of this session I introduced a bill to increase the limit of cost to the amount which received the approval of the Senate in the last Congress, and which this House, on full discussion, was willing, with the exception, as I have said, of a very small minority, to grant. In asking that the limit of cost be fixed at $400,000 I followed the estimates submitted to the last Congress. Closer estimates made by the present Supervising Architect show, if his judgment be correct, that the sum of $300,000 will be sufficient. I therefore ask the committee to reduce the amount named in the bill and to report in favor of fixing the limit at $300,000. I hope, Mr. Chairman, that with this explanation the amendment of the committee will be adopted, and the bill laid aside to be favorably reported to the House.

Mr. BLAND. How much will the whole amount be?

Mr. DIBBLE. Three hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. BLAND. Including the $200,000 heretofere authorized?

Mr. DIBBLE. This bill authorizes the expenditure of an additional $100,000, making $300,000.

Mr. BLAND. That seems to be a reasonable amount. I do not think any gentleman here would be inclined to oppose restoring this public building to that stricken city. Certainly I am not. [Applause.]

The amendment of the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it pass.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT TEXARKANA.

The next business on the Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7262) for the erection of a public building at Texarkana, situated on both sides of the line between the States of Arkansas and Texas.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to purchase or otherwise provide a site, and cause to be erected thereon a substantial and commodious building, with fire-proof vaults, for the use and accommodation of the United States courts, post-offices, and other Government offices at the city of Texarkana in Arkansas and Texas. The site and building thereon, when completed upon plans and specifications to be previously made and approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, shall not exceed in cost the sum of $100,000; nor shall any site be purchased until estimates for the erection of a building which will furnish sufficient accommodations for the transaction of the public business, and which shall not exceed in cost the balance of the sum herein limited after the site shall have been purchased and paid for, shall have been approved by the Secretary of the Treasury; and no purchase of site, nor plan for said building, shall be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury involving an expenditure exceeding the said sum of $100,000 for site and building; and the site purchased shall leave the building unexposed to danger from fire by an open space of at least 50 feet, including streets and alleys: Provided, That no part of said sum shall be expended until a valid title to the said site shall be vested in the United States, nor until the States of Arkansas and Texas each shall cede to the United States exclusive jurisdiction over the same, during the time the United States shall be or remain the owner thereof, for all purposes except the administration of the criminal laws of said State and the service of civil process therein.

SEC. 2. That said building shall be constructed across said boundary line between said States in such manner as to provide for all necessary Government offices and for a post-office delivery in each of the States of Arkansas and Texas, and also to provide on the Arkansas side suitable apartments for holding the terms of the United States courts now required to be holden.

Mr. BLAND. Let the report be read.

The report (by Mr. DIBBLE) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom were referred House bills Nos. 1865 and 2010, for the erection of a public building at the city of Texarkana, situated on both sides of the boundary line between the States of Arkansas and Texas, report the same back with the recommendation that they be laid upon the table, and that the accompanying bill pass as a substitute therefor.

This dual city claims a population of about 15,000, and possesses all the elements of rapid and permanent growth, and promises to be a city of great importance as a manufacturing and railroad center. It is already the center of the railroad systems of Arkansas and Texas. It is about equally divided in business population and territory by State Line avenue, the line between the two States, and a separate municipal government, county seat, and post-office exist for each side of the city.

On the Arkansas side there are two terms of the United States circuit and district courts held annually, and offices maintained and kept open all the time for the deputy clerk and marshal for that division of the district. The gross receipts of the post-office for the year ended December 31, 1887, amounted to $6,856.44, and the total box rents to $781.80. The money-orders and postal-notes issued during the year ended September 30, 1887, were 6,356, and amounted to $72,469.56.

On the Texas side the receipts of the post-office are but little less than those derived from the office on the Arkansas side. The precise sum is not accessible to the committee at this time. The office on the Texas side was established only a few years ago, and the receipts are increasing rapidly.

Your committee has ascertained that Texarkana, Ark., and Texarkana, Tex., are both county seats, and therefore under the law a post-office is required to be established and maintained on both sides, or in each town.

Your committee are advised that on account of the proximity of these offices and the dual character of the towns much confusion and unnecessary expense result. It is believed by your committee that the public service would be greatly promoted by the construction of a public building at this place.

Your committee therefore recommend the passage of the substitute.

Mr. BLAND. I observe that United States courts are to be held in the building proposed to be erected. I would like to know whether the building is to be for the benefit of both States or only one.

Mr. DIBBLE. I will state, for the information of the gentleman, that the building is to be erected right on the State line. There is a wide avenue running through the town of Texarkana, and the middle of that avenue is the line between the two States. This location is tolerably central——

Mr. BLAND. Are the courts of both States to be held in the same building?

Mr. DIBBLE. So I understand.

Mr. HOLMAN. No; the court is to be held in Arkansas, not in Texas.

Mr. BLAND. What amount does the bill carry?

Mr. DIBBLE. One hundred thousand dollars. I move the bill be laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. Chairman, inasmuch as the gentleman from South Carolina has not occupied the whole of his time, I desire to say a word. In answer to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KERR], who addressed the House a moment ago, I wish to say that he does not represent me on the floor of this House; and I will say also to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND], who places himself in opposition to all these measures, that he does not represent me on this floor.

I am in favor of the passage of this bill, though it may be a measure that comes from Texarkana. I am in favor of redeeming a part, at least, of the pledges we made to the people of the United States. I call the attention of gentlemen on the other side of the Chamber to the fact that they came into this House ninety days ago, having made pledges to the people of this country. As to what single one of those pledges are you prepared to go back to the people and say to them, "We have redeemed our pledge?"

You are within ninety days of a Presidential convention, a convention which is to throw into the political arena a Democratic candidate, and yet I say the pledges these men made to the people of the United States are not to-day redeemed. They promised to disburse the surplus revenue in the Treasury amongst the people, and yet it stands there to-day, piled up, a mountain of gold and a mountain of silver. [Applause.]

They promised to do many things they have not done. Every day we see them opposing legislation from committees on that side of the House. Not only the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] throws himself in the way of just and proper legislation, but we still wait for the promised reports from committees of the House on bills which have been introduced and referred to them. Why, sir, no pension bill has yet been reported with $130,000,000 of surplus in the Treasury, while the soldiers of the Government are clamoring for that which was promised to them by the country in the hour of its need and the hour of its danger. Not only the soldier, but the widows and orphans of this land are asking a part of this great surplus of the Government, that it shall be taken and distributed throughout the length and breadth of the land to gladden their hearts. I would like, Mr. Chairman, to take a part of it and give it to the soldiers who preserved the Government. I would give a part of it especially to the men who lay in the prison pens during the war. We would then have at least a portion of the pledges made by Democratic members on the other side of the Chamber to the people of the United States redeemed by their action on this floor.

Whenever you take the surplus and put it into a public building—and I believe it is proper and right to erect public buildings wherever the Government of the United States needs them—whenever you take any portion of the surplus in the Treasury and put it into a public building, there is to that extent a public improvement. You thereby contribute to the labor of many men throughout the length and breadth of the land. You go into the stone-quarries, you go into the brick-yards, you go into the nail-mills, you go into every department of industry and labor. You scatter this money where it does the most good. You give thousands of men throughout this great land that which they need for their support. You give comfort to hundreds of thousands of firesides by distributing the money which now remains idle in the Treasury. [Applause.]

I am in favor of this bill. I believe it should pass. I protest against the gentlemen upon the other side of the Chamber remaining out of their seats, leaving these benches unoccupied in order that they may obstruct the bills coming before Congress.

Mr. Chairman, I call attention to the fact that three-fourths of the vote in favor of these bills come from the Republican side of the House. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I say that is true, and gentlemen may applaud, but let me tell them the people of the United States will sit in judgment upon them and their acts, and that judgment will be recorded in November next. [Applause on the Republican side.] And as sure as the sun rises and as sure as it sets at the close of that day, so sure will the people of the United States condemn the Democratic party of this country. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. DIBBLE. I simply desire to say to the gentleman who has just addressed the House that I consider the political issues dividing the parties of the country are of a graver and more serious nature than the discussion of what adds to the convenience of transacting the public business. I think both sides of the House, whatever their differences on party questions, can proceed to apply business principles to the necessary provisions for convenience of transacting the current business of the Government without getting into political questions. In my belief every member of this House is here to exercise his judgment as he may deem right and proper in solving these business matters for himself.

So far as I am concerned, in submitting these propositions to the House, we have submitted our judgment after a due investigation of the subject. In reference to the question of amendments, as far as that goes, it is perfectly legitimate and proper for any member to offer them, provided the amendments are made in a fair spirit and not with the object of consuming the time which the House has accorded to us for the disposition of the business of the committee.

I have had reason, I think, Mr. Chairman, to complain that, in some instances, the business of the committee has been interrupted with amendments which seemed to me, in spirit at least, to be simply dilatory, though perhaps not technically so. But I do not know that such obstructive action can be charged upon one side of the House, merely in the present instance. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

I hope we shall proceed to consider this as a business question, not in a partisan spirit, but in a business way.

Mr. KERR. I move to reduce the amount covered by the bill to $75,000.

Mr. CULBERSON. I hope the gentleman will not insist upon that motion.

The question being taken, the amendment was rejected.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

PUBLIC BUILDING, INDIANAPOLIS, IND.

The next business on the Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1325) providing for the purchase of additional ground in the city of Indianapolis, Ind., adjoining the post-office site, and for the improvement of the building thereon, and appropriating $125,000 therefor.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to purchase all the ground adjoining the ground owned by the United States in the city of Indianapolis and State of Indiana, upon which the Government buildings used for a post-office and court-house are situate, bounded on the west by Pennsylvania and on the south by Court street, and on the east by the alley running north and south between Delaware and Pennsylvania streets, and to cause such changes, modifications, and improvements to be made in the buildings situate thereon and such changes and modifications in the post-office building as in his judgment may be necessary to render the same suitable for occupation and use by the Government; and for the purpose herein mentioned, the sum of $125,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The committee recommend the adoption of the following amendment:

Insert after the word "purchase," in line 4, the words "or acquire by condemnation."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the committee.

Mr. HOLMAN. In the hasty reading of the bill I did not notice whether the provision in regard to condemnation is stated in the bill.

Mr. DIBBLE. That is the amendment now being voted upon.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

PUBLIC BUILDING, COLUMBUS, GA.

The next business on the Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1275) for the erection of a public building at Columbus, Ga., and appropriating money therefor.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to purchase a site for, and cause to be erected thereon, a suitable building for the accommodation of the post-office and other Government offices at the city of Columbus, Ga. The plans, specifications, and full estimates for said building shall be previously made and approved according to law, and shall not exceed, for the site and building complete, the sum of $150,000: Provided, That the site shall leave the building unexposed to danger from fire in adjacent buildings by an open space of not less than 40 feet, including streets and alleys; and no money appropriated for this purpose shall be available until a valid title to the site for said building shall be vested in the United States, nor until the State of Georgia shall have ceded to the United States exclusive jurisdiction over the same during the time the United States shall be or remain the owner of the same, for all purposes except the administration of the criminal laws of said State and the service of civil process therein.

SEC. 2. That the sum of $150,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, from any money in the Treasury of the United States not heretofore appropriated, to enable the Secretary of the Treasury to carry out the provisions of this act, which sum shall be immediately available.

Mr. BLAND. I call for the reading of the report.

The report (by Mr. BANKHEAD) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1275) for the erection of a public building in the city of Columbus, in the State of Georgia, having had the same under careful and mature consideration, report:

Columbus is at this time the center of six important railroads, at the head of steam-boat navigation on the Chattahoochee River, and is the seat of numerous factories, steam mills, foundries, iron works, and other industries of various kinds. Its population is rapidly increasing. A post-office building has at all times been rented, and the sum of $900 per annum is now paid as rental. The population of Columbus is about 20,000, being an increase of nearly 100 per cent. since the census of 1880, and, including the suburban population, it will exceed 30,000. It is a large manufacturing city, perhaps the largest in the State, including in this cotton and woolen mills, with 90,000 spindles, oil mills, bagging factory, iron works, fertilizing factory, and scores of other enterprising institutions, employing as many as 5,000 operatives. The annual cotton receipts of this place vary from 70,000 to 110,000 bales. A free-delivery system was here established in July, 1887. The number of pieces of mail matter handled in the first month of the service by public carriers was 47,010, and has increased healthily for six months thereafter until it has reached in round numbers 90,000 pieces handled monthly, not including much mail matter delivered from boxes and general delivery. The gross revenue of the post-office at this place for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, is $16,709, showing a very healthy increase over years previous. The money-order business will compare favorably with other offices supplying a like population. The population within the delivery of the office is fully 30,000. From this it will be very clearly seen that the prospects of a very rapid increase are reasonable.

There are six railroads running into this city. There are three more under contract, which are now being built, besides several others chartered. There is located here the largest iron foundry in the South, besides other foundries of lesser magnitude. With a banking capital of some $2,000,000 and a surplus of about half that sum, Columbus has bright prospects.

In view of the growing importance of this place, and the amount now expended by the Government in rent of building, etc., your committee are of the opinion that, as a matter of wise economy, the erection of a public building is warranted by the increasing importance of this growing city, situated as it is at the head of navigation on the Chattahoochee River, which flows to the Gulf of Mexico, and which has so large and increasing a wholesale and retail trade. The water-power here is known as the Coweta Falls, and is unsurpassed in the South.

Wherefore your committee recommend that the bill do pass with the following amendments:

Amend by striking out the words "and fifty" in the tenth line of the first section of said bill, and by also striking out the words "and fifty" in the first line of the second section of said bill.

Mr. KERR. Mr. Chairman, I move to reduce the amount covered by the bill to $75,000.

The money that they now pay at this place is $900 for the rental of necessary buildings, I learn, and that will be less than 1 per cent. on the amount of money they ask to expend. I think it would be good economy to keep on paying rent instead of erecting a building; but as this seems to have received the approval of the committee, I move the reduction of the amount to $75,000.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to inquire whether United States courts are established there or not?

Mr. GRIMES. I will state, in response to the gentleman from Indiana, that I have myself introduced a bill at the present session of Congress providing for the establishment of Federal courts at that place. It is now pending before the Committee on the Judiciary, and I am very much in hopes of getting a favorable report, because the merits of the bill, I think, without having had any intimation from any of the gentlemen comprising the committee, are such as to commend it to them.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, this seems to be the same growing evil, to have first Federal courts and then public buildings, or public buildings and then Federal courts. They all seem to run in the same groove. One is an excuse for the other and vice versa.

Now, I must call attention again and take issue with some gentlemen, especially the last who spoke on the other side of the House, as to the question of the surplus in the Treasury. Why, it is even claimed that these buildings ought to be erected in every town of 5,000 and 10,000 inhabitants throughout the country in order to have public buildings all over the land and give employment to labor. But, Mr. Chairman, labor paid that surplus money into the Treasury, and when it was exacted from the laborers of the country they had a right to suppose it would be devoted to some legitimate public purpose. If it is not so devoted it was a robbery under the forms of law. We took this money out of their pockets, and if we are honest robbers even we will return it to them without asking another day's labor for it. It is their money; it belongs to them, and we have no right to ask them to put up public buildings for it or devote it to anything else but the legitimate purposes of the Government. If we have no such purpose to apply it to let us give it back to them. When we take from the people their money that is not used for the legitimate purposes of the Government, but to be wasted, we do it under a system of taxation that is an absolute robbery. Every dollar of it belongs to the laborer, and if we are not going to pay it out on the public debt then let us distribute that surplus which has accumulated to the laboring men who paid it, and, I repeat, not ask them to return another day's labor for it.

Mr. DIBBLE. I move that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. DIBBLE. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker pro tempore having resumed the chair, Mr. MCMILLIN reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the Calendar, under the special order, had instructed him to report back sundry bills with various recommendations.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT CHATTANOOGA, TENN.

The first bill reported from the Committee of the Whole was the bill (H. R. 7220) to amend an act entitled "An act for the erection of a public building at Chattanooga, Tenn.," approved February 25, 1885, and the act amendatory thereto, approved February 21, 1887.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. BLAND. I think we had better have a vote on that.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 156, noes 3.

Mr. BLAND. I shall not demand a quorum on this bill. As the hour remaining to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds is drawing to a close, as we have not passed very many of these bills, and as most of them have merits, it is not my disposition to deprive the committee of the few short minutes they now have remaining.

So (further count not being called for) the bill was passed.

Mr. DIBBLE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT BUFFALO, N. Y.

The next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole was the bill (H. R. 1678) to authorize the purchase of a site for a public building at Buffalo, N. Y.

The bill was reported with amendments, which were agreed to; and the bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. BLAND. Upon that question I call for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 161, noes 17.

So the bill was passed.

Mr. DIBBLE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT OMAHA, NEBR.

The next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole was the bill (S. 182) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Omaha, Nebr.

The bill was reported with amendments, and the amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to a third reading, and it was accordingly read the third time.

The question was on the passage of the bill.

Mr. TAULBEE. I call for a division.

The House divided; but before the count was completed,

Mr. TAULBEE said: It is perfectly apparent a majority of the House is for the bill, and I withdraw the demand for a division.

So the bill was passed.

Mr. DIBBLE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The title of the bill was amended so as to read: "A bill for the purchase of a site for a public building at Omaha, Nebr."

PUBLIC BUILDING AT BAR HARBOR, ME.

The next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole was the bill (H. R. 4467) for the erection of a public building at Bar Harbor, in Maine.

The bill was reported with amendments, and the amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

The question was on the passage of the bill.

Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi. I call for a division.

The House divided; but before the count was completed,

Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi, said: I withdraw the call for a division.

So the bill was passed.

Mr. DIBBLE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

APPRAISER'S WAREHOUSE, NEW YORK.

The next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole was the bill (H. R. 1661) for the erection of an appraiser's warehouse in the city of New York, and for other purposes.

The bill was reported with amendments, and the amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. DIBBLE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT CHARLESTON, S. C.

The next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole was the bill (H. R. 4358) to increase the limit of cost for the public building in course of erection at Charleston, S. C.

The bill was reported with amendments, and the amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. DIBBLE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT TEXARKANA.

The next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole was the bill (H. R. 7262) for the erection of a public building at Texarkana, situated on both sides of the line between the States of Arkansas and Texas.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. DIBBLE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The lattter motion was agreed to.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT INDIANAPOLIS, IND.

The next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole was the bill (H. R. 1325) providing for the purchase of additional ground in the city of Indianapolis, Ind., adjoining the post-office site, and for the improvement of the building thereon, and appropriating $125,000 therefor.

The bill was reported with amendments, and the amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. DIBBLE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT COLUMBUS, GA.

The next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole was the bill (H. R. 1275) for the erection of a public building at Columbus, Ga., and appropriating money therefor.

The bill was reported with amendments, and the amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. DIBBLE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. DIBBLE. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of further considering the special order.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I ask the gentleman to withhold that motion until I can submit a privileged report. I think it will not occupy a moment.

Mr. GUENTHER. I object.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I desire to make a privileged report.

Mr. DIBBLE. I submit that this time is set apart for a special purpose.

Mr. GUENTHER. I withdraw the objection on condition that this does not occupy more than two minutes.

Mr. DIBBLE. I yield for two minutes.

REPORTS OF PACIFIC RAILROAD COMMISSION.

The following resolution, referred this day to the Committee on Printing, was read:

Whereas this House on the 18th day of January passed a resolution in the words and figures following:

"Resolved, That 10,000 copies of the President's message and the accompanying reports of the Pacific Railroad Commission be printed for the use of the House;" and

Whereas said resolution seems not to have been complied with and said documents, including the evidence taken by said commission, placed at the disposal of the members of this House; and

Whereas more than forty days have elapsed since the passage of said resolution; and

Whereas the purposes of said resolution to print said documents "for the use of this House" will be entirely defeated if the same are not speedily supplied: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That the Public Printer be, and he is hereby, directed to report to this House forthwith what steps, if any, he has taken to execute said resolution, stating in detail his action thereunder, giving the number of copies, if any, he has printed, what disposition he has made of them, and to whom he delivered them or any portion of them, and what instructions, if any, he gave to the person or persons to whom he delivered said documents as to the disposition thereof.

The report of the committee was read, as follows:

The Committee on Printing have considered the resolution of Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa, this day referred to the committee. The resolution directs the Public Printer to report to the House forthwith what steps he has taken to execute the resolution of the House passed on the 18th of January, 1888, ordering the printing of 10,000 copies of the President's message and the accompanying reports of the Pacific Railroad Commission.

The committee report the resolution to the House with the recommendation that it do not pass. Congress has passed no law authorizing the printing of said message and reports. The Public Printer should not, therefore, be called upon to explain why the same have not been printed.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, on the 20th day of January the House did pass the resolution——

Mr. BUCHANAN. Let this go over until to-morrow.

Mr. RICHARDSON. No, sir. On the 20th day of January this House did pass a concurrent resolution authorizing the printing of 10,000 copies of the President's message and of the majority and minority reports of the Pacific Railway Commission. That resolution was transmitted to the Senate on the 23d day of January by the Clerk of this House, the Senate not being in session on 21st and 22d. On the next day, January 24, the concurrent resolution was referred to the Senate Committee on Printing, and it is now sleeping in that committee. [Applause on the Democratic side.] For that reason, Mr. Speaker, the Public Printer has not printed this document. I only wish to add that if gentlemen would investigate a little more carefully for themselves the facts which they propose to have investigated at the Government Printing Office there would be fewer investigations ordered in this House. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I move that the resolution lie on the table, and that the report be printed.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. DIBBLE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the further consideration of business under the special order.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. GUENTHER. Mr. Speaker, I withdrew my objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] on condition that this matter should not consume more than a few minutes. It has already occupied more than six minutes, and I now renew my objection.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I would like to say a few words.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. DIBBLE] resumes the floor.

Several MEMBERS. Regular order!

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. It is on this question.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I am willing to let the gentleman have two minutes, if he desires it.

Mr. DIBBLE. Mr. Speaker, I am willing to consent to that, provided the time of the day's session be extended.

Mr. REED. Mr. Speaker, it does seem as if common fairness required that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. ANDERSON] should have an opportunity to be heard.

Mr. DIBBLE. I ask unanimous consent that the time which has been taken from the business of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds in this way be made up by extending the session for the same length of time after 5 o'clock.

Mr. REED. That is all right. The House will give you that.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I have no objection.

Mr. DIBBLE. I ask unanimous consent that the time be extended.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. For how many minutes?

Mr. DIBBLE. Ten minutes.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the reading of the report in relation to the Public Printer.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I have not consented to an extension of the session for ten minutes. I have no objection to five minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It requires unanimous consent.

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Speaker, I make the point that the time was extended without objection. The Chair decided that there was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair could not decide that. The gentleman rose and stated that he had objected. He was in time. The Chair is apt to be too quick, but not on this occasion. [Laughter]. How much time does the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. DIBBLE] desire added to the session?

Mr. DIBBLE. Ten minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to that understanding?

Several members objected.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to an extension of five minutes, as suggested by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND]?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. ANDERSON] has five minutes.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, it has been suggested by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] that if gentlemen would make closer inquiry they might learn more facts. I introduced this resolution this morning in good faith, after having made inquiry for the documents that I wanted at the places where I had a right to expect to find them in response to the resolution passed by this House more than forty days ago. That resolution I understood to be a simple resolution of this House calling upon the Public Printer to print 10,000 copies of the President's message and of the majority and minority reports of the Pacific Railroads Commission, and I understood that that included, as a matter of course, the evidence taken in support of the allegations contained in the reports, because there is not a single allegation made in either report that is good for anything apart from the evidence on which it is based. The evidence is part and parcel of the report.

The report of the Pacific Railroad Commission—either the majority or the minority report is as idle as the wind, a meaningless and immaterial thing, if the evidence taken by the Commission and which was the basis on which they formulated their report, does not accompany the document. Unless this evidence be published the time and money spent in printing and distributing the 10,000 copies of the report will be simply wasted.

So far as concerns the question of not having made a personal investigation, I will say that this proposition concerns a matter of very great moment about which a great deal of suspicion has been excited in this country at one time or another; and I submit to members that in view of the history of this matter it was not unnatural for me to suspect that there might be something of the same kind of policy pursued with reference to printing and publishing this report that was pursued by eminent witnesses, some of whom fled from the approach of the Commission, others of whom when they appeared stood mute and refused to answer, or took refuge in places which I will not name.

Mr. BLAND. I suppose, then, the gentleman suspects the Senate Committee on Printing, as that appears to be the only body that is responsible in this matter.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. My resolution simply called for a report from an officer of this body as to what had been done under a previous resolution of the House.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Does the gentleman understand the statement I made, that the Senate has not yet acted on the resolution which was adopted by the House; that the resolution has not even been reported back from the Senate Committee on Printing?

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. Well, I am not responsible for the action of the Senate, and the statement made by the gentleman shows no reason why it was not the duty of this public officer to make a report of his doings under resolutions of the House.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Does the gentleman understand that this was a concurrent resolution, and could not become operative until the Senate, as well as the House, had passed it?

Mr. RICHARDSON. As the expense of printing the document would be more than $500, it could not be printed except under a concurrent resolution, which, though passed by the House, could of course have no force until concurred in by the Senate. This concurrent resolution, as I have been shown, was promptly passed by the House.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. Well, sir, the purpose of presenting this question has been served. It has been shown why this document has not been printed; and I am entirely content that the responsibility has been placed where it belongs.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The gentleman must see that this responsibility is not on this side of the House, much less upon the Public Printer.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection the resolution will lie upon the table, and the report of the committee be printed.

There was no objection; and it was ordered accordingly.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. 2993) to authorize the Secretary of War to convey to the city of Austin, Tex., a tract of land in said city for educational purposes; and

A bill (H. R. 4911) to carry out the findings of the Court of Claims in the case of James H. Ayres.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills and joint resolutions of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. 132) for the erection of a public building at New Orleans, La.;

A bill (S. 973) to authorize the Omaha, Hays City and Southwestern Railway Company to build its road across the Fort Hays military reservation;

A bill (S. 1473) to authorize the Chicago, Kansas and Western Railway Company to build its road across the Fort Hays military reservation; and Joint resolution (S. Res. 5) in relation to the claim of John B. Read against the United States for the alleged use of projectiles for rifled ordnance, claimed as the invention of said Read, and by him alleged to have been used pursuant to a contract or arrangement made between him and the War Department in 1856, for which no compensation has been made.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with an amendment the bill (H. R. 1184) to authorize the construction of a bridge across Rock Creek at the Woodley Lane road, in the District of Columbia; asked a conference with the House on said bill and amendment, and had appointed as conferees on the part of the Senate Mr. HARRIS, Mr. SPOONER, and Mr. FARWELL.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. DIBBLE. I move that the House again resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the consideration of the special order.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole (Mr. MCMILLIN in the chair), and resumed the consideration of bills reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT BAY CITY, MICH.

The first business on the Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7263) for the erection of a public building at Bay City, Mich.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to purchase or otherwise provide a site, and cause to be erected thereon a substantial and commodious building, with fire-proof vaults, for the use and accommodation of the United States courts, post-office, customs office, internal-revenue office, and for other Government uses at Bay City, Mich. The site and building thereon, when completed upon plans and specifications to be previously made and approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, shall not exceed in cost the sum of $200,000; nor shall any site be purchased until estimates for the erection of a building which will furnish sufficient accommodations for the transaction of the public business, and which shall not exceed in cost the balance of the sum herein limited after the site shall have been purchased and paid for, shall have been approved by the Secretary of the Treasury; and no purchase of site, nor plan for said building, shall be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury involving an expenditure exceeding the said sum of $200,000 for site and building; and the site purchased shall leave the building unexposed to danger from fire by an open space of at least 40 feet, including streets and alleys: Provided, That no part of said sum shall be expended until a valid title to the said site shall be vested in the United States, nor until the State of Michigan shall cede to the United States exclusive jurisdiction over the same during the time the United States shall be or remain the owner thereof, for all purposes except the administration of the criminal laws of said State and the service of civil process.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask for the reading of the report.

The report (by Mr. NEWTON) was read, as follows:

Bay City, at the mouth of Saginaw River, is in rank the third city of Michigan. West Bay City, just on the opposite side of the river, contains a population of 9,000 to 10,000, according to the State census of 1884. Provision has been made by the Legislature of Michigan to unite the two cities, containing together a population of 50,000. Bay City is now and has long been noted for its ship-building and commerce. Fifteen of the largest vessels plying on the lakes were constructed at this port. The value of vessels constructed there annually has been from $1,000,000 to $3,000,000 per year during the past fifteen years. During the season of navigation for the past year 2,230 vessels arrived at this port, and 2,101 cleared from it, with a total tonnage of 780,257. A large trade is carried on between this city and ports on Lake Huron.

The tonnage of shipments from Bay City is larger than that of any other port in Michigan, and, excepting Chicago, Milwaukee, and Buffalo, larger than that of any port on the Great Lakes.

The office of collector of customs of Bay City is an important one, and needs suitable accommodations. The office of deputy collector of revenue for the eighth district of the State is located at Bay City.

The business of the Federal courts held at Bay City is large and constantly increasing. There are no adequate accommodations for the courts. The county court-house now used at a nominal rent is totally inadequate for the requirements of these courts. The lumber and salt products of this region are enormous, amounting annually to some $28,000,000. There is no Government building at Bay City. The requirements are such as to demand one for the use of the Federal courts, post-office, customs, revenue, and other governmental purposes.

Your committee, therefore, report the accompanying substitute for House bill 1568, and recommend its passage.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me, after listening to this report, that the amount recommended by the committee in this case is in excess of the sum generally appropriated for public buildings in cities of about the same population as the place now in question. It is true that accommodation is to be afforded for United States courts and customs offices, Bay City being a port of entry and delivery; yet I submit that $150,000 would be a sufficient appropriation for the purpose contemplated. The postal business in that city is not large, and the internal-revenue interests there are not very important. The main objects of the bill are to accommodate the courts and the customs officers. Hence I submit that taking as a standard bills of this kind passed in former years, $150,000 would be fully up to the average.

There is a tendency apparently inevitable, and I can well understand how the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds necessarily feel the influence of this tendency, to increase the amount of appropriations for these purposes. This tendency received its main impulse when the great buildings in New York, Chicago, St. Louis, and Cincinnati were being erected. Prior to that time the amounts appropriated for these purposes were small. Steadily since then the tendency has been to increase the appropriations.

I submit to my friend, the chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, that $150,000 would seem to be a reasonable amount. The site for such a building in a city like Bay City should not exceed $10,000. That would leave $140,000 for the erection of the building; and that sum, even, would exceed the average of public buildings requiring more room in most of the towns of the State of Michigan.

Mr. FISHER. What is the gentleman's amendment?

Mr. HOLMAN. My amendment is to reduce the appropriation from $200,000 to $150,000. The site would cost from ten to fifteen thousand dollars.

Mr. FISHER. A suitable site for a public building in Bay City would cost $50,000.

Mr. HOLMAN. If my friend will take a list of the cities where appropriations have heretofore been made for sites, he will find that a comparatively small sum is the average. There are but six public buildings in the United States where the appropriation has been large. The appropriation for the public building passed a few moments ago is about the seventh largest sum ever appropriated for that purpose. I think but in six instances have we reached half a million of dollars. In the large number of sites purchased they do not exceed ten or fifteen thousand dollars.

Mr. FISHER. Has the gentleman from Indiana offered his amendment?

Mr. HOLMAN. I have.

Mr. FISHER. What is it?

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to reduce the appropriation from $200,000 to $150,000.

Mr. FISHER. I accept the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DIBBLE. I move the bill as amended be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

PUBLIC BUILDING, MILWAUKEE.

The next business under the special order was the bill (S. 154) for the erection of a public building at Milwaukee, Wis.

The Senate bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to purchase a site for, and cause to be erected thereon, a suitable building, with fire-proof vaults therein, for the accommodation of the United States post-office, district and circuit courts, custom-house, internal-revenue office, pension office, and other Government offices, at the city of Milwaukee, Wis. The plans, specifications, and full estimates for said building shall be previously made and approved according to law, and shall not exceed for the site and building complete the sum of $1,200,000; and it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury, after the site for said building shall have been purchased, to cause plans and specifications of said building to be prepared, which said plans and specifications shall have reference to the probable increase of the population of said city and the consequent needs of the Government during the next twenty years, but shall not involve an expenditure in the erection and completion of said building exceeding the amount remaining of the total sum appropriated by this act after the site of said building shall have been paid for; and no plan shall be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury involving an expenditure exceeding the sum which remains after paying for the site of said building: Provided, That the site shall leave the building unexposed to danger from fire in adjacent buildings, and adequately provided with light, by an open space of not less than 50 feet, including streets and alleys, on all sides of said building; and that no money appropriated for this purpose shall be available until a valid title to the site for said building shall be vested in the United States, nor until the State of Wisconsin shall have ceded to the United States exclusive jurisdiction over the same, during the time the United States shall be or remain the owner thereof, for all purposes except the administration of the criminal laws of said State and the service of civil process therein: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Treasury shall be, and he is hereby, authorized, whenever in his judgment the public interest will admit, in his discretion, to sell and convey the present property of the United States in said city now occupied as a public building, with the site thereof, the proceeds of the sale of said property to be covered into the Treasury: Provided, however, That the said Secretary may, in lieu of purchasing an entirely new site as aforesaid, purchase additional necessary ground adjoining the site of the present public building in said city, and cause to be erected thereon said new building; but in the event that said present site shall be so utilized for said new building, the cost of said building, including said additional ground, shall not exceed $1,100,000.

SEC. 2. That the sum of $1,200,000 be, and the same hereby is, appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purpose of carrying into effect the provisions of this act.

The amendments of the committee were read, as follows:

Substitute for the first section the following:

"That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed and authorized to purchase, acquire by condemnation, or otherwise provide a site for a suitable building for the accommodation of the United States post-office, district and circuit courts, custom-house, internal-revenue office, pension office, and other Government offices, at the city of Milwaukee, Wis., at a cost not to exceed for said site the sum of $400,000; and the site purchased shall suffice to leave the building unexposed to danger from fire by an open space of at least 40 feet, including streets and alleys: Provided, That no part of said sum shall be expended until a valid title to the said site shall be vested in the United States, nor until the State of Wisconsin shall cede to the United States exclusive jurisdiction over the same, during the time the United States shall be or remain the owner thereof, for all purposes except the administration of the criminal laws of said State and the service of civil process therein."

Amend the second section by striking out "$1,200,000" and inserting "$1,400,000."

The report (by Mr. POST) is as follows:

The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (S. 154) for the erection of a public building at Milwaukee, Wis., submit the following report thereon:

The Federal building now in use in the city of Milwaukee was built some thirty years ago, when the population of the city was about 35,000. The population now is 175,000 or more, and the city is rapidly growing both in population and commercial importance. It is situated on Lake Michigan, is the metropolis of the State, and a port of great commercial importance. It is the headquarters of the eastern judicial district of the State, which embraces the oldest and most populous counties. The judicial business transacted in the district and circuit courts is very large. The present building is totally inadequate to afford sufficient accommodation for the transaction of court, post-office, and other Government business.

The number of mail pieces collected and delivered by carriers in 1875 was 6,992,214; in 1885, 21,011,627. The post-office receipts for the calendar year 1875 were $143,074.70; for the year ending June 30, 1886, $252,224.49, and for year ending 1887, $274,040.41. There is no proper vault or storage room in the present building. For want of room a considerable portion of the business of the post-office is necessarily transacted outside of the building. Offices are rented for United States pension agency, United States commissioner, inspector of hulls, inspector of boilers, engineers lake harbors and Wisconsin River, engineers Lake Superior, Green Bay, East Shore, and Signal Service and station, surgeon marine hospital, board of pension examiners, etc. The room afforded by the present building to the collector of customs and his force is entirely inadequate to the necessities of his service.

The erection of a new building has been recommended by the Supervising Architect of the Treasury.

The committee is of opinion, however, that the present bill should be limited to the purchase of a site, and they recommend the passage of the Senate bill with the following amendments:

"1. That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed and authorized to purchase, acquire by condemnation, or otherwise provide a site for a suitable building for the accommodation of the United States post-office, district and circuit courts, custom-house, internal-revenue office, pension office, and other Government offices at the city of Milwaukee, Wis., at a cost not to exceed for said site the sum of $400,000; and the site purchased shall suffice to leave the building unexposed to danger from fire by an open space of at least 40 feet, including streets and alleys: Provided, That no part of said sum shall be expended until a valid title to the said site shall be vested in the United States, nor until the State of Wisconsin shall cede to the United States exclusive jurisdiction over the same during the time the United States shall be or remain the owner thereof, for all purposes except the administration of the criminal laws of said State and the service of civil process therein.

"2. Strike out in section 2 the words 'one million, two' and insert the word 'four' in lieu thereof.

"3. Amend the title so as to read: 'An act for procuring a site for a public building at Milwaukee, Wis.'"

Mr. DIBBLE. I move the adoption of the amendments proposed by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. HOLMAN. What are the amendments?

Mr. DIBBLE. The committee propose a substitute for the first section of the Senate bill, and in the second section to reduce the appropriation from $1,200,000 to $400,000.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to call the attention of my friend from South Carolina to this fact, and I will take but a moment to do it. The site taken by condemnation for the great Congressional Library in this city, a piece of land twice the size of this proposed site at Milwaukee, cost $550,000. I have a list of the sums appropriated at various places of equal importance with Milwaukee, and $400,000 is the average. There are six instances, as I remarked a moment ago, where the appropriation runs up to $500,000. Those are in the great cities, commencing with New York. It seems to me the site for a public building at Milwaukee should not exceed the average which has heretofore been allowed for this purpose.

Mr. DIBBLE. The amendment was made upon the evidence which we had before the committee; a suitable site would cost that amount.

Mr. BUCHANAN. We increased the site for a public building at Indianapolis.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to amend the amendment by striking out "four" and inserting "three." Under our free-delivery system an exactly central position is not of as much importance as it was, and heretofore that has been the reason for the great expense incurred in the purchase of a site.

Mr. GUENTHER. Let a vote be taken on the amendment, so that we may not lose the bill.

Mr. ENLOE. Are all these bills subject to the regular discount of 20 per cent.?

Mr. GUENTHER. We accept the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. HOLMAN'S amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendments proposed by the committee, as amended, were agreed to.

Mr. DIBBLE. I now move that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. DIBBLE. I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker pro tempore having resumed the chair, Mr. MCMILLIN reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the special order, had instructed him to report sundry bills with various recommendations.

BILLS PASSED.

The bill (H. R. 7263) for the erection of a public building at Bay City, Mich., was considered, the amendment of the committee concurred in, and the bill as amended ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

The bill (S. 154) for the erection of a public building at Milwaukee, Wis., was considered, the amendments of the committee concurred in, and the bill as amended ordered to a third reading; and being read the third time, was passed.

Mr. DIBBLE moved to reconsider the several votes just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

By unanimous consent, leave was granted to Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi, to extend his remarks on public buildings in the RECORD.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. COCKRAN for the remainder of the week.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. FISHER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found duly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same, namely:

A bill (H. R. 1495) granting to Edwin Libby Post, Grand Army of the Republic, permission to erect a soldiers' monument on vacant land adjoining custom-house at Rockland, Me.;

A bill (S. 642) to authorize the removal of the quarantine station from Ship Island, Mississippi;

A bill (S. 1900) to carry into effect the international convention of the 14th of March, 1884, for the protection of submarine cables; and

A bill (S. 313) for the relief of R. R. Tinsley.

CASTLE ISLAND, BOSTON HARBOR.

Mr. DIBBLE. I move to take from the House Calendar for present consideration the joint resolution (H. Res. 56) authorizing the use and improvement of Castle Island, in Boston Harbor.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That permission be, and is hereby, granted to the city of Boston, in the State of Massachusetts, through its park commissioners, to improve and beautify Castle Island, situated in said city, and belonging to the United States, in connection with a public park to be laid out on land adjoining and connecting with said island, with the right to said city of Boston to make such excavations and fillings and erect and maintain such structures as the Secretary of War may from time to time approve: Provided, That this resolution shall not be construed to pass any title in said island, but that the ownership and control of the said grounds shall remain entirely in the United States, and shall be subject to such changes and uses for military purposes as the Secretary of War may direct.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I would suggest to the gentleman from South Carolina that this reserves to the United States only the right to this property for military purposes.

Mr. DIBBLE. It is a military reservation.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I know; but the Government ought not to part with any part of the title that it now holds.

Mr. DIBBLE. This provides—

That this resolution shall not be construed to pass any title.

Mr. McMILLIN. It does not; but it only reserves the right to resume control for military purposes.

Mr. DIBBLE. I read from the resolution itself:

Subject to such changes and uses for military purposes as the Secretary of War may direct.

Mr. McMILLIN. I would suggest that the words "or other," after the word "military," should be inserted.

Mr. DIBBLE. Very well, I will move to amend in the fifteenth line by inserting after the word "military" the words "or other;" so that it will read:

For military or other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection, the amendment will be agreed to.

The amendment was adopted.

The joint resolution as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. DIBBLE moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. McADOO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Calendar of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union the bill (H. R. 7265) for the erection of a public building at Hoboken, N. J. This is a small bill, and will take but a few minutes to consider it.

Mr. WARNER. To that I shall enter no objection; but I wish to ask at the same time that it be coupled with unanimous consent to take from the Calendar a bill for the purchase of a site for a public building in the city of Kansas City, one of the most important bills on the Calendar.

Mr. McADOO. This is the very next bill on the Calendar.

Mr. MILLS. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is demanded.

Mr. WARNER. I ask that the time of adjournment be extended by unanimous consent.

Mr. MILLS. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The hour of 5 o'clock and 10 minutes having arrived—the time fixed by the House for adjournment—the Chair declares the House adjourned until 12 o'clock to-morrow.

PRIVATE BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS INTRODUCED AND REFERRED.

Under the rule private bills and joint resolutions of the following titles were introduced and referred as indicated below:

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, February 29, 1888.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a letter from the Attorney-General urging an appropriation of $20,000 to be included in the deficiency bill for the support of prisoners for the year 1887; which, with the accompanying letter, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, in response to a resolution of February 20, 1888, information as to the amount of business accumulated in his Department under the grants to States and Territories for educational purposes, the time necessary to dispose of such business with the present clerical force, and what additional force is necessary; which, on motion of Mr. STEWART, was, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented a petition of the Board of Trade of Topeka, Kans., praying that the Indian Territory be opened to settlement; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

He also presented a petition of citizens of Kansas, praying for the passage of the rated service-pension bill; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. SAWYER presented a petition of dairymen of Wisconsin, praying for the removal of the duty on foreign salt; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. TURPIE presented a petition of ex-soldiers of the Union Army, citizens of Indiana, praying for the passage of the per diem rated service-pension bill; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. BATE presented the petition of Everett Ritter, of Carroll County, Tennessee, praying for the removal of the charge of desertion from the military record of his two sons, John Ritter and Henry Ritter; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. PAYNE presented 16 petitions of surviving soldiers and sailors of the Union Army and Navy, residing in Ohio, praying for the enactment of the per diem rated service-pension bill; which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. SHERMAN presented petitions of 736 ex-Union soldiers, and petitions of 125 ex-Union soldiers, residing in the State of Ohio, praying for the passage of the per diem rated service-pension bill; which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented a petition of citizens of Hocking County, Ohio, praying for a correction of the erroneous classification of worsteds; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a memorial of Weathersfield Lodge, No. 32, of the Amalgamated Association of Iron and Steel Workers, of Niles, Ohio; a memorial of Wolf Lodge, No. 21, of the Amalgamated Association of Iron and Steel Workers, of Steubenville, Ohio; a memorial of Cataract Lodge, No. 2, of the Amalgamated Association of Iron and Steel Workers, of South Cleveland, Ohio, and a memorial of Dover Lodge, No. 37, of the Amalgamated Association of Iron and Steel Workers, of Canal Dover, Ohio, favoring a protective-tariff policy; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. MANDERSON presented a petition of citizens of Nelson, Nebr., praying for the passage of the per diem rated service-pension bill; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PADDOCK presented the petition of James Grace, of Washington, D. C., praying to be paid for medical expenses, etc., incurred by reason of injuries received while in the discharge of his duties as a laborer at the Capitol; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. MORGAN. I present the petition of a number of citizens of Marshall and Etowah Counties, Alabama, praying for the forfeiture of the land grant of the Tennessee and Coosa Railroad Company. I ask that the petition lie on the table, because a bill is pending here reported from the Committee on Public Lands which provides for that matter. The petition also contains some allusions to my course in the Senate upon the subject of this land-grant forfeiture. It was sent to the President of the Senate, and he very kindly placed it in my possession with the view that I should scan it, for which I thank him. I ask that it lie on the table, and when the bill comes up I will make some explanation of the matters contained in the petition.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill having been reported, the petition will lie on the table.

Mr. STOCKBRIDGE presented a petition of 191 ex-Union soldiers and sailors, residing in the State of Michigan, praying for the passage of the per diem rated service-pension bill; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. McPHERSON presented the petition of Mrs. Annie Leonard, widow of Terrance Leonard, late of Company D, Sixty-third Regiment New York Volunteers, praying that she be allowed a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented a petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of New Jersey, officially signed, representing 6,000 members, praying for the repeal of the internal-revenue tax on all alcoholic liquors; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. HISCOCK presented two petitions of ex-Union soldiers and sailors, residing in the State of New York, and a petition of 308 veterans of the late war, residing in the State of New York, praying for the passage of the per diem rated service-pension bill; which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented a petition of citizens of New York, praying for the passage of a joint resolution correcting the present erroneous classification of worsteds, by directing that they be classified as woolen goods; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. HOAR presented the petition of C. P. Hovey & Co., White, Brown & Co., Jordan, Marsh & Co., and other importers, of the city of Boston, Mass., praying that jurisdiction be conferred on the Court of Claims to hear and determine their claim for the recovery of certain taxes alleged to have been illegally assessed and collected; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. PLATT. I have received certain resolutions of the Hat Makers and Finishers' Association of Connecticut, which, while they are addressed to the Senators from Connecticut, seem to me resolutions which should properly be addressed to the Senate. They are protesting against any reduction of the duty upon manufactured hats, whether wholly or partially manufactured, and asking that the duty be increased. They are the workmen who are engaged in the manufacture of hats. I ask that the resolutions may be received and referred to the Committee on Finance.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolutions will be received, if there be no objection, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. PALMER presented a petition of Tunis Cronkite and 31 others, members of William T. Sherman Post, No. 355, Grand Army of the Republic, of Bath, Mich., and a petition of Lewis Clark Post, No. 275, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Michigan, praying for the per diem rated service-pension bill; which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented a resolution adopted by Fayette Grange, No. 251, Patrons of Husbandry, of Jonesville, Mich., favoring the amendment of the patent laws for the protection of innocent users of patented articles; which was referred to the Committee on Patents.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Farmers' Club, of Columbia County, New York, in favor of sustaining the oleomargarine law; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented the petition of N. A. Beecker and 13 other prominent citizens of Flint, Mich., praying for the passage of Senate bill 1779, for the preservation of forests; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented a memorial of the Saginaw (Mich.) Board of Trade, remonstrating against the removal of the duties on lumber and salt; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of James A. Stultz and 112 other citizens of Gratiot County, Michigan, praying for the protection of the wool-growing and woolen manufacturing industries of the country; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of George Kemp and 40 other citizens of Sault Ste. Marie, Mich., praying an increase of salaries of keepers of the Life-Saving Service to $1,000 a year, and of surfmen of that service to $75 a month; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. EVARTS presented a petition of 24 members of Post No. 547, Grand Army of the Republic, surviving soldiers and sailors of the Union Army and Navy, and citizens of Newfane, Niagara County, New York, praying for the passage of the per diem rated service-pension bill; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CULLOM presented resolutions adopted by Douglas Lodge, No. 6, State of Illinois, of the Amalgamated Association of Iron and Steel Workers of the United States, located at Chicago, officially signed, and resolutions adopted by Mississippi Lodge, No. 5, State of Illinois, of the Amalgamated Association of Iron and Steel Workers of the United States, located at East St. Louis, officially signed, remonstrating against any revision of the present tariff and against any legislation that would tend toward crippling the industries of the country; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of 81 ex-soldiers of the Union Army, citizens of White County, Illinois, praying for the passage of the per diem rated service-pension bill; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. VEST presented resolutions adopted by the Missouri State Board of Agriculture, favoring legislation by Congress for the eradication of pleuro-pneumonia in cattle; which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. PLUMB. I present the petition of a large number of ex-Union soldiers, resident in Kansas, praying for the passage of the per diem rated service-pension bill. I move its reference to the Committee on Pensions.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CALL presented the petition of Mary N. Robinson, widow of Frederick Robinson, late first lieutenant and brevet captain Fifth Regiment United States Artillery, praying that her certificate of pension may be changed from February 7, 1884, to November 1, 1882, so as to enable her to receive such arrearages as might become due her in consequence thereof; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. PASCO, from the Committee on Claims, to whom were referred the findings of facts by the Court of Claims January 23, 1888, in the case of Mattie S. Whitney, as administratrix of Franklin S. Whitney, deceased, vs. The United States, referred to said court by the Committee on Claims in the Forty-eighth Congress, second session, submitted a report thereon, accompanied by a bill (S. 2185) to carry out the findings of the Court of Claims in the case of Mattie S. Whitney, as administratrix of Franklin S. Whitney, deceased, heretofore referred to said court; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. WILSON, of Maryland, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1089) for the relief of Henrietta M. Sands, widow of the late Rear-Admiral Benjamin F. Sands, United States Navy, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. SAWYER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 802) granting an increase of pension to Sarah A. Wilcox, now Roberts;

A bill (S. 1194) granting a pension to Mary Whirry;

A bill (S. 1146) granting a pension to L. J. McGoffin;

A bill (S. 1286) granting a pension to Michael Lane;

A bill (S. 1607) granting a pension to Robert A. Bride, or McBride;

A bill (S. 1742) granting a pension to W. A. Hicks;

A bill (S. 1288) granting a pension to John Child;

A bill (H. R. 369) granting a pension to Mrs. Esther B. Hayford;

A bill (S. 1193) granting a pension to John R. Wheelock; and

A bill (S. 808) granting a pension to Julius C. Monson.

Mr. SAWYER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them each with an amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 1609) for the relief of James McLaughlin;

A bill (S. 1018) granting a pension to Joseph W. Eubank; and

A bill (S. 1124) to increase the pension of John W. January.

Mr. SPOONER, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2135) for the relief of Richard W. McMullin, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs; which was agreed to.

He also, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2216) for the relief of Thomas A. Osborn, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. MANDERSON. On the 9th of February, under the direction of the Committee on Military Affairs, I reported back favorably the bill (S. 671) to provide for the sale of the site of Fort Omaha, Nebraska, the sale or removal of the improvements thereof, and for a new site, and the construction of suitable buildings thereon, which is on the Calendar. I now desire to submit a written report in connection with that bill, and ask that it be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be received and printed.

Mr. MANDERSON. There came to the Committee on Printing a motion to print for the use of the Senate a large number of copies of the bill (S. 977) to regulate the importation of foreign merchandise, and to secure uniformity in the classification and valuation thereof, and for other purposes. I understand from the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] in charge of the bill that he does not desire it printed at this time, and I therefore report back the motion and ask that the committee be discharged from its further consideration.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON, from the Committee on Finance, reported an amendment intended to be proposed to the bill (S. 977) to regulate the importation of foreign merchandise, and to secure uniformity in the classification and valuation thereof, and for other purposes; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am directed by the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom the subject was referred, to report a bill.

The bill (S. 2186) supplementary of and amendatory of "An act to execute certain treaty stipulations relating to Chinese," approved May 6, 1882, as amended by an act to amend said act, approved July 5, 1884, was read twice by its title.

Mr. SHERMAN. I give notice that as soon as practicable I shall call the attention of the Senate to the bill in the hope of its passage.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. SHERMAN. I also report back several bills referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations which are covered by the bill just reported from the committee, and ask that the committee be discharged from their further consideration.

The following bills were indefinitely postponed:

A bill (S. 1797) to enforce restrictions on Chinese immigration; and

A bill (S. 582) abrogating all treaties heretofore made and now operative between the United States Government and the Chinese Empire, in so far as they, or any of them, provide for, recognize, or permit the coming of Chinese to the United States, and in so far as they, or any of them, inhibit the United States from absolutely prohibiting the coming of Chinese to the United States; and repealing all acts of Congress in so far as they, or any of them, recognize or permit the coming of Chinese to the United States; and absolutely prohibiting the coming of Chinese to the United States, excepting only diplomatic, consular, and other officers, and prohibiting the landing of any Chinese therein, excepting only such diplomatic and other officers.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am also directed by the Committee on Foreign Relations to report back a great number of memorials in regard to the same matter with a recommendation that they lie upon the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That order will be made.

EXCLUSION OF CHINESE LABORERS.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am directed by the Committee on Foreign Relations to report back the concurrent resolution submitted by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART] January 9, 1888, requesting the President to negotiate a treaty with the Emperor of China, excluding Chinese from entering the United States, with an amendment in the nature of a substitute, and I ask for its present consideration, if there be no objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The original resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the President of the United States be requested, at the earliest practical moment, to negotiate a treaty with the Emperor of China containing a provision that no Chinese shall enter the United States except embassadors and others engaged in the diplomatic service of the Chinese Empire and merchants engaged in trade between the United States and foreign countries, and providing further that the United States shall be at liberty to ascertain, by such officers or tribunals as Congress may designate, whether Chinese offering to enter the United States are of the excepted classes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution as amended will now be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the Senate of the United States, That in view of the difficulties and embarrassments that have attended the regulation of the immigration of Chinese laborers to the United States under the limitations of our treaties with China, the President of the United States be requested to negotiate a treaty with the Emperor of China containing a provision that no Chinese laborer shall enter the United States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio asks that the resolution be now considered.

Mr. MITCHELL. I ask that it go over until to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will lie over under the rule.

Mr. MITCHELL. And be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The order to print will be made.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. PLUMB introduced a bill (S. 2187) to authorize the retirement of Lieut. John A. Payne with the rank of major; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. HOAR introduced a bill (S. 2188) for the relief of certain merchants who paid duties on goods imported by the steamship Asia on the 3d of March, 1867; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. WALTHALL (by request) introduced a bill (S. 2189) for the relief of Sophia G. Mitchell and Eliza Jane Mahon; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. DAVIS (by request) introduced a bill (S. 2190) imposing punishment for counterfeiting or imitating trade-marks and labels; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Patents.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, introduced a bill (S. 2191) for the relief of the estate of J. M. Hiatt; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. HARRIS (by request) introduced a bill (S. 2192) to authorize the extension of Vermont avenue, in the city of Washington; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also (by request) introduced a bill (S. 2193) to provide for the payment of the 8 per cent. greenback certificates of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. McPHERSON introduced a bill (S. 2194) granting a pension to Annie Leonard; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2195) granting arrears of pension to Mrs. Mary R. Archer; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. MITCHELL introduced a bill (S. 2196) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of F. Spurgeon; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. PALMER introduced a bill (S. 2197) empowering and directing the Commissioner of Navigation to register and enroll as American vessels certain sailing-vessels of foreign construction, repaired in the port of Cleveland, Ohio, and named the Josephine and M. C. Upper, respectively; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas, introduced a bill (S. 2198) to authorize the building of a railroad bridge at Little Rock, Ark.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2199) authorizing the Little Rock and Alexandria Railway Company to maintain and construct a bridge across Bayou D'Arbonne, in Louisiana; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. SAWYER introduced a bill (S. 2200) to amend paragraph 1 of section 4821, chapter 2, of the Revised Statutes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PROPOSED NATIONAL PARK IN OREGON.

Mr. MITCHELL submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Lands be, and they are hereby, instructed to inquire into the propriety and advisability of having seven or eight townships of the public domain surrounding and including Mount Hood, in the State of Oregon, set apart as a national park, and to report by bill or otherwise.

LAND-PATENTS.

Mr. CALL submitted the following resolution; which was read:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Lands of the Senate are hereby instructed to report a bill declaring all patents on the public lands of the United States issued by the Secretary of the Interior without authority of law to be absolutely void, and requiring the Attorney-General of the United States to bring suit to vacate and set aside the same.

Mr. CALL. I believe that under the rule if the resolution goes over it will come up to-morrow morning, when I shall ask the Senate for the privilege of submitting a few remarks very briefly upon the subject of the resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will lie over under the rule, and be printed.

USE OF WATER AT HOT SPRINGS, ARK.

Mr. BERRY. If the morning business is concluded——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further resolutions, concurrent or other, the morning business is closed.

Mr. BERRY. There is a joint resolution on the table which came from the House of Representatives in regard to the use of hot water at Hot Springs, Ark. It is a literal copy of a bill reported by the Senate Committee on Public Lands, which is now on the Calendar. I ask that the joint resolution may now be considered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a joint resolution from the House of Representatives.

The joint resolution (H. Res. 117) to enable the Secretary of the Interior to utilize the hot water now running to waste on the permanent reservation at Hot Springs, Ark., and for other purposes, was read twice by its title.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Arkansas asks that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution. Is there objection?

Mr. VOORHEES. I should like to have it read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be read at length for information, subject to objection.

The Chief Clerk read the joint resolution.

Mr. CULLOM. Is that a House bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is.

Mr. CULLOM. Is it now up for consideration?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution has been read twice by its title, and the Senator from Arkansas asks unanimous consent that the Senate now consider the same.

Mr. CULLOM. That is a measure to which I desire to offer an amendment, but I am not prepared to do it now. I would like to have it go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Illinois objects to the present consideration of the joint resolution, and therefore under the rule it must lie over until to-morrow.

Mr. BERRY. I hope the Senator will withdraw the objection and offer his amendment, and let us consider it. The joint resolution is a literal copy of a bill reported by the Committee on Public Lands of the Senate—a literal and absolute copy—and I would be glad to have it considered.

Mr. CULLOM. If the Senator will let it go over to-day I shall not resist taking it up to-morrow. I do not desire to throw any obstruction in the way of its consideration, but I would a little rather not consider it to-day as I am not prepared to offer such an amendment as I think I desire to have made to it.

NATIONAL ART COMMISSION.

Mr. HOAR. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 1514.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chief Clerk will state the first bill on the Calendar under Rule VIII, and the Chair will then submit the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts.

The CHIEF CLERK. Order of Business 30, a bill (S. 1095) to provide for the compulsory education of Indian children.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This bill being in order under Rule VIII, the Senator from Massachusetts moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 1514) to establish a national art commission.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was reported from the Committee on the Library with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 1, line 3, after the word "President," to strike out the word "may" and insert the word "shall;" so as to read:

That the President shall appoint a commission of fourteen persons, four of whom shall be eminent sculptors, four of whom shall be eminent painters, three of whom shall be eminent architects, and three of whom shall be selected from other employments for their knowledge and good taste in art, who shall together constitute the national art commission.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 8, to strike out "five" and insert "four;" so as to read:

Four of those first appointed shall hold office for one year, five for two years, and five for three years each. Their successors shall hold office for three years each. The President may also, in case of any vacancy in said commission, make appointments for the unexpired term of the person whose place shall be so vacant.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read the third time.

Mr. PLUMB. I do not care to interrupt the passage of this bill. I simply want to give notice that it will develop into a very considerable institution before it has been twelve months old. Inside of three years it will cost the Government $100,000 a year, besides sticking its nose into a great many things which it has no business to touch. If I had any reason to believe that it would pass the House of Representatives, I certainly should oppose it.

The bill was passed.

G. KAEMMERLING AND OTHERS.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I ask for the present consideration of Senate bill 1484, Order of Business 356.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Calendar under Rule VIII being in order, the Senator from New Jersey moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 1484) for the relief of G. Kaemmerling and others.

Mr. SHERMAN. Why not go on with the Calendar? We can accomplish three times as much in that way as by taking up bills here and there on special application.

Mr. TELLER. Let us go on with the Calendar.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I will answer the Senator from Ohio. This is an important bill, affecting the status of certain engineers in the Navy. It will not take a moment to pass it, and I think it is important that the status of these officers should be determined.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the rules debate is not in order. Will the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill moved by the Senator from New Jersey?

The motion was not agreed to.

COMPULSORY EDUCATION OF INDIAN CHILDREN.

Mr. SHERMAN. The regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The first bill on the Calendar will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. 1095) to provide for the compulsory education of Indian children.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumes the consideration of the bill. It has been read at length on a previous day, and the pending question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST]. The amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Interior to establish, under such rules and regulations as he may think proper, an industrial boarding-school on every Indian reservation upon which there may be located any Indian tribe numbering five hundred or more adult Indians. The Secretary shall cause an enumeration of the children of said Indians between the ages of eight and eighteen years to be made at least once in every two years, and he shall cause said children to be placed in the schools so established and there kept for a period not exceeding five years.

SEC. 2. That the children so placed in said school shall be taught, in addition to reading, writing, arithmetic, and geography, useful labor. The males shall be instructed in agricultural pursuits, care and management of stock, poultry, and general farm work, and they shall also be learned some useful mechanical trade; and the girls shall be instructed in household work, sewing, the care of poultry, and other employment suitable to their sex.

SEC. 3. That the Secretary of the Interior may, when the parents or natural guardians of such children refuse or neglect to send them to said schools and to keep them there, in accordance with the rules and regulations made by the Secretary, withhold rations and annuities from the parents or natural guardians of such children until there shall be a proper compliance with the rules prescribed by the Interior Department.

SEC. 4. That nothing herein contained shall prevent the education of Indian children in schools outside of the reservations with consent of their parents or guardians, and no provisions of this act shall apply to the five civilized tribes nor to the Osage Indians of the Indian Territory.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, I believe I had the floor when the hour of 2 o'clock arrived in our last discussion of this bill, but I do not know that I can add anything to what I said then in regard to this amendment.

Mr. STEWART. Let us have the amendment read so that we may understand it.

Mr. VEST. The amendment has just been read.

Mr. STEWART. I could not hear it.

Mr. VEST. The substance of it is simply this: It changes the entire system in regard to the treatment of Indian children which now prevails. I stated before, and I repeat what has been the result of my observation and experience in regard to the subject of Indian education, that the only hope for the generation of Indians who are now coming on, for the children of the Indian tribes, is in compulsory education. The same motives that affect the civilized man are utterly powerless with the savage. The Indian believes that labor is degrading, and that any knowledge except that of war and the chase is absolutely useless.

The day schools supported now by the Government of the United States amount to nothing. There may be here and there a sporadic school which is doing some little good, but not in proportion to the amount of money expended upon it. I visited schools among the tribes in Montana where the rolls showed from five hundred to seven hundred pupils, and they attended school but once in the week, and that was when beef was distributed among them, and every other day the number of pupils would be from ten to twenty-five, and they were absolutely taught nothing. The school-mistresses and school-teachers were receiving $800 and $1,000 a year, and they made no impression upon the tribes at all.

There is but one remedy, and that is compulsory education. The Indian child who attends one of the day schools and goes back to the tepee at night, goes back to barbarism, goes back to the filth and degradation taught him by his parents. He is taught that labor is degrading and that the chief end of man is war and the hunt.

I am almost afraid to allude to the Jesuits; but I see my friend from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR] is not in his seat, and I can do so with safety. The best schools on this continent to-day are conducted by the Jesuits. Wherever you see an Indian school conducted by Jesuits it is conducted upon the proper principle, and that is the result of nearly a century of absolute experience.

I visited those schools and found compulsory education for male children and for female children. The Jesuits commenced in the first place with the education of males, and they found that to be a failure. They found that the young man who had graduated went back to his tribe and there became the object of ridicule because he had adopted the language and the habits of the white man, and ridicule is the most potent weapon with the Indian everywhere. The result was that without any support except self-support, unaided and alone, he relapsed into barbarism, and then out-Heroded Herod in defense of savage customs and savage fashions.

The result of this experience was that the Jesuits have now established dual schools for both sexes, the female schools under the conduct of nuns and the male schools under the conduct and management of members of the Jesuit order. When they graduate they intermarry, and the couple, assisted by the Jesuits and by the agent on the reservation, with a small piece of land cleared and a house erected and a bunch of cattle, in Western parlance, become the nucleus of civilization and Christianity. They support each other. I visited their houses and saw husband and wife living together, enjoying all the benefits of Christianity and civilization, and raising their children in the same way. Any of my brother Senators who have been along the Northern Pacific Railroad and passed through the Flathead reservation in Montana have seen the results of this Jesuit education.

I was instrumental, and I am proud of it, as proud as of any act of my public life, some few years ago in obtaining $8,000 from Congress for the establishment of an industrial school under the charge of the Jesuits upon that reservation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The time of the Senator under the rule has expired.

Mr. TELLER (to Mr. VEST). Do you want to go on?

Mr. VEST. I shall never finish that speech.

Mr. STEWART. If the Senator does not wish to go on, I should like to make a few remarks in regard to this measure.

Mr. PLUMB. I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from Missouri may be allowed to proceed.

Mr. VEST. I wish only a few minutes more, and I shall not want to discuss the bill any further.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri will proceed by unanimous consent.

Mr. VEST. The result of that appropriation was that an industrial school was established at the Jesuit mission on that reservation, and you can look from the windows of the cars to-day and see comfortable houses, farms fenced in, horses and cattle grazing, and a law-abiding population, the result of that single experiment. Those Indians are to-day further advanced in civilization than any upon this continent except the five civilized tribes in the Indian Territory. I was there last summer, and I saw the Indian boys, with their aprons on, engaged in mechanical pursuits. They make their own clothes from hat to boots and shoes. They go into the forests and cut down timber and cut it into lumber and build their houses. They are blacksmiths. They put up two dormitories, which accommodate forty boys and forty girls, and all the principal work, under the direction of a skilled workman, has been done by those Indian boys.

They have learned agriculture. The Jesuits devote their whole lives to this service. The members of the order feel themselves dedicated to that purpose from their boyhood up, and I saw one of them who for fifty years had been engaged in this work among the Indians of North America, who had come here when he was twenty years old. This experiment shows that the industrial boarding-school is the only hope for the Indian. The Jesuits take charge of the children, and do not permit them to go back to their parents' houses until they finish their education. The parents can go and visit them, but they do it in the presence of a Jesuit father. When vacation comes they are taken out in charge of the Jesuits. The result is to be seen there by any one, a state of civilization advanced beyond that of any other tribe on the continent outside of the Indian Territory.

I know my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] is ready to defend day schools to some extent. If there are day schools that to-day pay for the money expended on them by the Government of the United States I have never seen them. Any man who knows the Indians, any man who knows their prejudices, it seems to me must come to the conclusion that the only system that we can adopt is that of compulsory education.

I speak earnestly upon this question because it is a terrible problem submitted now to the Congress of the United States. We must take one road or the other. We must say upon the Indian question, "Let them alone and let them perish"—and I mean by using the word "perish" let them remain in barbarism, utterly worthless in the great struggle for civilization that we are making upon this continent—or we are to recognize the fact that their children can only be educated by compulsory means, and shoulder the expense and adopt the proper instrumentalities to that end. I admit that this bill is simply a declaration. I would be willing to vote for an appropriation now to carry into effect the principles announced in the amendment I have offered; but as the bill stands emasculated, simply declaring the opinion of the Congress of the United States on this subject, the real struggle and the real question that comes to issue will be when the subject of an appropriation for this purpose is placed before the Senate.

Mr. DAWES. I suggest to the Senator from Missouri a verbal amendment in line 5 of section 2, by striking out the word "learned" and inserting the word "taught."

Mr. VEST. Of course I have no objection to that.

Mr. DAWES. There is another amendment needed, which is also verbal—in the third line of the third section of the Senator's amendment, to strike out before the word "schools" the word "said," and after "schools" to insert "established by authority of the Interior Department;" so as to read:

That the Secretary of the Interior may, when the parents or natural guardians of such children refuse or neglect to send them to schools established by authority of the Interior Department and to keep them there, etc.

If that amendment shall be adopted, I should for one be entirely content with the substitute the Senator from Missouri offers to this bill. The difference between the bill with that amendment and the bill as it exists now is simply this: It authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to compel, if he sees fit, attendance only at the boarding-schools, and leaves the day schools and the schools of charitable organizations to take care of themselves; and the Senator seems to be frank enough to avow that he wants to extinguish all these schools and confine the education of the Indians to the boarding-schools on the reservations.

Mr. VEST. I will accept that amendment, not because it meets any idea I have, for I do not think the day schools amount to anything; but I know a great many of them are established, and we can not expect to remove the vicious system all at once. Therefore, I will accept that amendment.

Mr. DAWES. There are a great many valuable schools that the Interior Department has located in different localities that ought not to be left to take care of themselves. The Senator has said a great many good things about the boarding-schools, and a great many other things about day schools; but the Senator will permit me to say that he loses sight, I think, of the altered condition of things going on constantly upon the reservations; and with a compulsory process applied to day schools, as well as to boarding-schools, I think the condition of things which it has been the misfortune of the Senator from Missouri to see among day schools will pass away.

There is a bill pending to create a superintendency of Indian schools, which now is a creation simply of the Indian Bureau, into a respectable office to be appointed on the nomination of the President and confirmation by the Senate, and its duties prescribed, among which is to visit all the schools and suggest in a report what improvements and changes should be made. So I think it is the hope of the Department and all those responsible for the institution of the law that a better system of schools, more adapted to the altered state of things, will grow up; but the bill as now modified by the Senator is an excellent bill and makes progress in the right direction. I speak only for myself, not for the committee.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, I desire to congratulate the committee on having taken a step in the right direction. I have observed the Indian policy of this country for the last forty years, and it has had very little effect in improving the condition of the Indians. No people have yet taken any step in the direction of civilization except it was necessary for them to make efforts to supply their present necessities. The Indians in our country are equal to those of any other part of America, but as a whole they are far behind those in other countries of America, and I have attributed it to our mode of dealing with them. We have treated them as nations, recognized their tribal relations, made treaties with them, paid them money, invested it for them; and by feeding them we take away the first great necessity of man, to supply himself with food. The result has been that they are in a more helpless condition now than the Indians of Mexico. The great mass of the people of Mexico are of Indian blood. They have had an Indian for President. Juarez was an able man, was equal to any ruler of almost any country. Others have occupied high positions in that country. They were not relieved by any action of their government from the necessity of providing themselves with food.

I have been in British Columbia, north of us, and I found the Indians there much more advanced than they are in our country. They are making contracts; they are individually responsible; they are recognized as men and treated as such, and there they are acquiring property and adopting the principles of civilization. I have observed in our own country where the Indians have not been specially cared for that they have taken care of themselves by labor, which is the first element of progress. In my own State the Indians that have not been fed by the Government have done remarkably well, because we have not taken away the great incentive from the adult Indians to become civilized by removing the necessity to supply themselves with food, thus bringing themselves and their children to a position of dependence.

Whatever may be the policy as to feeding the adult Indians, where our treaty obligations require us to provide for them in that way, certainly we should not allow their children to grow up in ignorance and idleness. The habits which they acquire by being fed, added to their savage habits, have made it difficult to do anything with the children by the appropriation of money.

We must either educate them or let them grow up in idleness and finally be exterminated and cease to exist at all, because there are no fields for them, there is no new country for them to roam over, there are no hunting-grounds now. If they continue to exist, it must be in a state of civilization. The children can not be civilized unless they are forced to attend school and forced to acquire habits of industry, and forced not only to learn from books, but to learn how to take care of themselves, how to work. While they are young it is the duty of this Government, in the helpless condition in which they are, to try to make them self-supporting. We have ruined the Indians by feeding them, by recognizing their tribal relations. We have taken away that inducement to exertion that has elevated the condition of other Indians on this continent, and if we leave the children in that condition we shall entirely destroy the race.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator's time has expired under the rule.

Mr. TELLER. I ask that the Senator from Nevada have leave to proceed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. STEWART. I have said about all that I care to say on the subject. There is no other way to civilize these children and do them any good than this.

The remarks of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] are entirely appropriate, they are just, and they indicate the policy which must be pursued or we shall finally kill the Indians, destroy them by feeding them, by placing them in a state of idleness and ignorance which will ultimately wipe them from the face of the earth.

So I shall vote for this bill. I should like to see a little more power given to the Secretary of the Interior. I should like to see the bill go farther, but I shall vote for it most heartily as a step in the right direction, looking to the reclamation of these children from barbarism.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I introduced the bill under consideration, and I am quite willing to accept the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri, which I think is an improvement on the bill. I did not go as far as he has gone, but I went as far as I thought would probably be successful. If there is a disposition to go farther I am very glad of it, and I welcome his amendment as going still farther than the bill. The Senator from Nevada says he congratulates the committee on this advanced step. I congratulate the Indians of this country on this advanced step.

When this bill was under discussion a few days ago, I took occasion to speak of the tenure by which the Indians hold their land. The Senator from Missouri took exception to my statement, and declared that they had an absolute fee-simple title, as I understood him to say, to their lands as much as the Senator had to his property in Missouri or anywhere else. I only want to say to the Senator that on this subject he is at variance with the Supreme Court of the United States.

As early as 1823, sixty-five years ago, the Supreme Court declared that they only had the right of occupancy. That was reiterated later, and these authorities can be found cited in 8 Wheaton, in 5 and 6 Peters, and as late down as 106 United States Reports. There is a case in 19 Wallace, which I have on my desk, and I shall call attention to what the court said in that case. It was not a case where the Indians had the simple occupation when the country was settled. They were holding under a treaty made with the United States, by which the United States gave them a certain area of ground, and afterwards an act was passed fixing their boundaries, not defining what their title was except that they had the occupancy. The court say:

> The Indians having only a right of occupancy in the lands, the presumption is against their authority to cut and sell the timber. Every purchaser from them is charged with notice of this presumption. To maintain his title under his purchase it is incumbent on the purchaser to show that the timber was rightfully severed from the land.

Mr. VEST. What case is that?

Mr. TELLER. The case of the United States vs. Cook.

Mr. VEST. In the Indian Territory?

Mr. TELLER. Oh, no. In the Indian Territory they have a fee-simple title by patent. The Supreme Court has settled the fee-simple title there. The Cherokees and Chickasaws and all those tribes hold under a patent issued many years ago, and have a fee-simple title, as has been declared by the Supreme Court of the United States. The Supreme Court has said that if the restriction that was put in the patent that the land should revert to them took it out of a fee, it would still be a fee, because there was nothing in the treaty that justified the putting of that restriction in the patent.

I speak now of the general character of Indian possessions without a patent. I say that it never was held that they had anything more than an occupancy. It was held early that the Government of the United States might disregard that occupancy if it saw fit, and in very many instances it did. I can show from the statutes lying before me now very large tracts of country ceded to the Government of the United States by the Indians for nominal sums, ranging from $250 up to $10,000. Prior to 1830 it was a very large sum of money to pay $10,000 for any cession that was made by Indians. The amount paid was simply to purchase their good-will and to induce them to move from that to some other section.

That is the tenure by which the Indian title has been held in this country except, as I said before, in that portion of the country originally occupied by the French and the Spaniards, which includes New Mexico, Arizona, California, Nevada, and Louisiana, and part of Colorado. In all that section of country there never was a suggestion by the authorities that they were to treat with the aborigines for the soil. We never recognized, as the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] suggests, the right of the Mission Indians in California, who were semi-civilized Indians. We did not recognize, when we got California from Mexico, the right that they had to an acre of ground. Every acre they have now in the way of a reservation is as a gift from this Government. We agreed with the Government of Mexico to treat them exactly as it had treated them, and we did that, with the exception, as I said the other day, of one portion of the country obtained from Mexico, and that was in Colorado, where, owing to the ignorance of the men who made the treaty of the law on that subject, they gave the Indians in fee-simple one-fifth of the State of Colorado. The treaty did not give it to them, but Congress subsequently did—yes, one-fifth of the State.

So it can not be said that the Indians have been deprived of a right in the soil. The right of occupancy was all they had. We did not in early times perhaps pay them very much for this right. In later years we have paid them an abundant sum, and it has not been of any benefit to them. I stated the other day that I thought we had paid $300,000,000. That is a fact. I did not mean to say that we had paid them that for the identical land; but when we carry out our treaty stipulations up to this time the amount is considerably over $300,000,000 that we have paid them for the land they ceded to us and their support since then.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator's time has expired under the rule.

Mr. TELLER. I will just ask permission to say a word further.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will proceed by unanimous consent.

Mr. TELLER. When I said we had paid $300,000,000 the Senator from Missouri said that not $300,000 of that money had reached the Indians. Of course I do not hold the Senator responsible for that statement. It is such a statement as we use hurriedly in debate, but it is very liable to misrepresent the facts in the case. Somebody will take it up and declare that the fact is we have bought large areas and paid vast sums of money, all of which has been stolen, or practically all, and that statement will be cited as an evidence of it. Undoubtedly very great frauds have been perpetrated on the Indians from time to time, and perhaps some of them are going on now; but we have paid some of these Indians enormous sums. I have referred to the Osages, not over fifteen hundred in number; and they have now in the Treasury $3,000,000 at interest; and various other tribes have money at interest. The Senator from Connecticut says it is $6,000,000. I think probably that is so, for there is a very large amount of money to their credit.

Mr. PLATT. The trust fund which the Government holds for the Osages is about $6,000,000—$6,000,000 in round numbers, on which it has been supposed to pay them the interest, but it has not paid all the interest, and there is now an accumulation of interest of about $600,000, which has not been paid to the Osages.

Mr. TELLER. It will be seen that this little band, fifteen hundred strong, are very rich. Now does anybody believe that these Indians are hastened in their civilization by owning this vast amount of money? Does anybody think that it is wise for us in treating with Indians to give them a sum of money to be put at interest to be paid to them to maintain them in idleness and vice? It is a crime against the Indians to do that.

All the Government should do is to put the Indian in a position to support himself, which is done when the Government gives him some kind of education—the education I spoke of before and have frequently spoken of—the education of the hand as well as the education of the head. When that is done, when he is put upon a piece of land, when he is furnished a team, a plow, and hoes, and harrows, and a cow or two, or two sheep, or whatever may be necessary, then the Government should withdraw its support.

All this accumulation of money in the Treasury for the benefit of Indians year after year is only keeping them in idleness and in vice. I repeat that, while we have shown very little judgment in our dealings with Indians, we have not shown a parsimonious or mean spirit. We have not willingly and knowingly wronged the Indians—as a nation, I speak. The people of the United States have dealt generously with them, and we pay $6,000,000 a year now for their support—for the support of men who would be better off themselves, better for their race, and better for the world, if we did not give them a cent, but left them to support themselves, as they ought to be left, if it can be done without dishonor, owing to our treaty arrangements with them.

I said I congratulated the Indians. I congratulate the Indians that there seems now to be a disposition to compel them to take civilization, to take it whether they will or whether they will not, and whenever the Indian policy shall be administered upon that basis—I am not finding fault with the office, for they have not had power to do it—when we shall give them the authority, and when it shall be administered upon that theory, that these men are compelled to take civilization or else depart, then when it is civilization or death the Indian will take civilization, and he will not take it much before he is confronted with that alternative.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Missouri accept the proposed amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. VEST. Yes, sir.

Mr. SAULSBURY. As I understand the amendment of the Senator from Missouri, I think it will be an improvement upon the bill as introduced by the Senator from Colorado. In that bill there was a provision authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to kidnap the children of Indian parents and put them at school. I then suggested an amendment that they should be taken with the consent of the parents, and the Senator from Colorado very kindly informed me that I did not understand the Indian question. That is true; and after an experience of seventeen years in this body I am now enabled to say that I do not think I have ever seen a man who did understand it. I have heard discussions in reference to how to treat the Indians, some persons advocating placing them on reservations with liberty to hunt and fish, and others desiring to divide up the lands in severalty, and a vast amount of speculation has been indulged in with regard to the proper mode of treating the Indians.

The amendment of the Senator from Missouri does away with that harsh feature of authorizing the Secretary of the Interior at his pleasure to take the children of the Indians and put them in school, and it provides an established system, and then brings to bear influence on the parents by withholding rations if they fail to send their children to school. I have no objection to that kind of compulsion of the parent. I think, therefore, the amendment is a very decided improvement in the spirit of humanity and kindness. I shall vote for the amendment, but I certainly should not vote for the original bill as it was introduced.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, I wish to offer an amendment as an additional section to the bill as amended, to this effect:

The provisions of this act shall extend to the Seminole and Creek Indians in Florida.

And I ask the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, and also the Senator from Missouri, to accept this amendment.

Mr. VEST. Does not the bill apply to them now?

Mr. CALL. No; it applies to Indians who receive annuities.

Mr. VEST. I do not understand the amendment.

Mr. CALL. The amendment extends the provisions of this act to the Seminole Indians in Florida. They are not Indians to whom an annuity is paid, because their annuity is paid the Seminole Indians in the Indian Territory. There are about three hundred of these Indians——

Mr. DAWES. The Senator should appeal to the Senator from Missouri to accept the amendment, as the pending proposition is his.

Mr. VEST. My substitute applies to all Indians, wherever they are on reservations to the number specified. There are some tribes that have not even one hundred members.

Mr. CALL. These Indians are not on reservations and there are not five hundred of them, and therefore it will require some specific words to include them in the bill. I desire to say that there has been an agent sent to look after these Indians during the past year, and he has reported that there are nearly three hundred of them—between two hundred and sixty and three hundred—that they are a very industrious and very intelligent race of Indians, that the children are anxious to be educated and that they are progressing towards civilization, but they have no homes. Their land has been ceded to the United States, and those remaining who have not migrated to the Indian Territory are left without a habitation or a place of abode.

The Committee on Appropriations appropriated some years ago in the Indian appropriation bill the sum of $5,000 for the purpose of investigating the condition of these Indians and establishing them upon the public lands, and providing homes for them. It is my desire that they may be brought within the provisions of this bill. They are the most promising race of Indians within the whole circle of the Indian tribes for civilization and for becoming useful citizens of the country; and I therefore ask, inasmuch as these Indians have never received until this little appropriation was made any annuity from the Government or any consideration of any kind, that they shall be included within the provisions of this bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL] to the amendment of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST].

Mr. VEST. I accept the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Missouri as amended.

Mr. CALL. I propose to add as an additional section——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the Senator from Florida will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add as a new section—

That the provisions of this act shall extend to the Seminole and Creek Indians of Florida.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands this amendment to be accepted by the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. ALLISON. I should be glad to have the Senator from Missouri or the Senator from Florida explain how it is possible to apply the provisions of this bill to the Seminole and Creek Indians in Florida.

Mr. CALL. I do not see any difficulty whatever in regard to it.

Mr. ALLISON. Is there a reservation in Florida for these Indians?

Mr. CALL. There is not a reservation in Florida. It is not necessary, however, that there should be a reservation. There is an appropriation for the benefit of these Indians, not an annuity.

Mr. ALLISON. There was a little appropriation made last year, but I submit that you can not apply the provisions of this bill to these Indians in the State of Florida in any practical way.

Mr. CALL. Will my friend suggest why it can not be applied to them?

Mr. ALLISON. This provides in the first place for the education of Indian children on Indian reservations. There are no Indian reservations in Florida.

Mr. CALL. That is the reason we want a special provision applicable to the Indians in Florida.

Mr. ALLISON. I will ask the Senator from Florida, after he has added his section to this bill, how he proposes to have the benefits of this bill extend to the Creeks and Seminoles in Florida. I should like to have him explain the method by which the bill can be made applicable to them.

Mr. CALL. I suppose the Secretary of the Interior will establish schools there, boarding-schools. He can certainly do so. He can establish such schools as may be necessary under the provisions of this bill, and this amendment, as I consider it, authorizes him to do it, though they are not upon a reservation.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope the amendment will not be agreed to.

Mr. DAWES. I should like to hear the amendment again read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri has accepted the amendment, so that it is now part of the original amendment, but it will be again reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. Add as a new section:

That the provisions of this act shall extend to the Seminole and Creek Indians of Florida.

Mr. DAWES. Do I understand the Senator from Missouri to have accepted it?

Mr. VEST. Yes; but I do not know that I exactly understood the amendment.

Mr. DAWES. Let me explain the condition. There are a few scattered Seminoles in Florida. The treaty with the Seminoles required them all to go to the Indian Territory, and when they went there there was provision for them under the treaty. Some of them declined to go, and have remained in Florida, lingering in a very wretched, poor condition, scattered for miles in Florida. The Senator from Florida has interested himself for the care of these Indians quite industriously, and obtained an appropriation for one or two years in an appropriation bill looking to the locating of them either on the public lands of the United States or on lands belonging to Florida, so that they may have a home.

It is reported to the Indian Department that they were found so scattered about there in a region where it was impracticable to locate them that nothing could be done; and the Department are engaged in trying to find some way of taking care of them. Now the idea of making a boarding-school down there does not seem to me to be practical at all. There is no one place that will accommodate half a dozen of these Indians that I know of; there is no one to manage them.

Mr. VEST. When I accepted the amendment I was under the impression that these Indians were on a reservation. I agree with the Senator from Iowa. I do not see how this bill without being wholly remodeled can be made to apply to Indians in that condition. I withdraw my acceptance.

Mr. DAWES. I appeal to the Senator from Florida to withdraw his amendment, and out of the desire of the Senator and the efforts of the Department there will come some way to take care of these Indians; but this system is not applicable to their condition.

Mr. CALL. It seems to me these objections are very slight, but I will submit another amendment in this form:

SEC. 5. That the provisions of this act shall extend to the Seminole and Creek

Indians of Florida; and the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to organize a select school in which they may be placed.

I can see no possible reason why these Indians should not be included in this bill under an amendment of this description. They are now located in Florida; they have been there all their lives; the Government agreed to transport them to the West, but could not get them to go there, and it will cost the Government ten times the amount necessary to give them an industrial education and provide homes for them to carry them there by hostile means. They are content to stay. They will become, according to the report of the agent, industrious and useful citizens, and for years they have been a docile, quiet, industrious people. Their homes have been taken from them; the annuities agreed by the treaty to be paid them have been taken away because of the outbreak of the hostile members of the tribe, and the annuities provided for them upon their migration to the West are now paid and have for years been paid to the Seminole Indians in the Indian Territory, in violation of the treaty and in violation of law, of right, and of humanity.

It is true these Indians can nôt claim anything under the treaty, because they have not gone there, and the treaty does not authorize its payments although the Indian Committee every year report a bill for the payment of this annuity to the Seminole and Creek Indians of the West. Whatever may be done with their portion of the annuity, certainly they should upon any ground of public policy and equity be taken care of and educated, and there are no Indians in the whole circle of the Indian population that promise so much and so favorably in point of civilization and becoming good and useful citizens. They are a fine physically organized and developed race of people, capable of making useful citizens of the Republic with a little care and attention. I therefore submit the amendment and hope it will be adopted.

Mr. BLAIR. How many of them are there?

Mr. CALL. About three hundred of them.

Mr. BLAIR. Where are they situated?

Mr. CALL. They are situated upon the little islands in the Everglades. They have for years past been not hostile, but averse to any communication with the people of the United States, because they think they have been badly treated, but they have been entirely docile. They have their settlements and live peaceably at them.

The report of the agent selected by the Interior Department was read by me in the last few days. They are upon little islands on the Everglades, making their homes there, are engaged in agriculture, and are a quiet, industrious, and may become a useful race of people. I have no doubt they are amongst the best Indians upon the continent.

Mr. PLUMB. The Seminole Indians in Florida, so far as any knowledge can be obtained of them, were in a state of contentment and happiness up to within the last twenty-four months. About that time the Senator from Florida, amiable as he is, conceived the idea that they ought to be taken care of by the Government, that they ought to be put under some sort of compulsion to accommodate themselves to the habits of the white people, and he got an appropriation in their favor, and then their troubles began. Now we shall have the Seminoles and the Creeks in Florida as a pièce de résistance to all our efforts on this question. The Indian is happy by just as much as he is let alone. There is never any trouble with the Indian until the white man appears, if he is allowed to have his own sweet will and accommodate himself to his tastes, though they may be such as would not be agreeable to a white man.

He manages to get along with a degree of happiness which, while it may be very far from that which obtains among civilized people, is sufficient for him at all events. The trouble comes when the white man gets hold of him, when he applies to him the Procrustean bed of civilization, stretching him out if too short and making him shorter if he is too long. Our whole system of dealing with the Indian is bad by just as much we have intermeddled beyond necessity.

I have nothing against the Indians in Florida, and because I have nothing against them I hope they will not be embraced within the purview of this bill. If I were their enemy, if I wanted them to lose the last sense of happiness they ever had, I should say make an appropriation for their benefit, authorize the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to take them under his protecting wing and apply compulsory education or something of that sort to them, whereby that which has been sufficient for them heretofore, and kept them not only in the state of idleness which they crave, according to the Senator from Nevada, but in a state in which they have been contented and happy, will be so no longer.

So, Mr. President, I think in regard to this whole question we are educating people without the proper foundation. We are applying the system of education of the nineteenth century to people who have not emerged from the barbarism of the fourteenth century. It is a hothouse, a forcing process. I have voted for the most liberal appropriations for Indian education for many years. I expect to continue to do so. It is the easiest and cheapest way of getting rid of my responsibility in such matters. It is demanded by what is called enlightened public opinion, the enlightenment being in proportion to the lack of knowledge of the subject on which it is reflected.

But I say now, and I am perfectly certain of the correctness of the opinion which I have expressed, that we have not advanced the Indians one single iota by all the education we have given them. I believe, on the contrary, that they have steadily retrograded as the result of every piece of book education we have given them.

This is only a progress whereby the Commissioner of Indian Affairs when he gets out of something else to do may stir up the nest, may get up a commotion among the aborigines, may air himself in an official way, irrespective entirely of the consequences that come to those whom we have educated and who will thereby ultimately be destroyed.

We have gone at this thing in a wrong way. We forget that our own race came up by different stages, by different occupations, by progressive ideas, and so on, to its present standpoint, and that the system of education which we apply now to the white race if applied to them four hundred years ago would have been as destructive to them as it is to the Indian.

As I said at the beginning, having nothing against these Indians in Florida—because I am not their enemy but their friend—I sincerely hope they will not be packed off from the islands in the Everglades and brought out into the scorching sunshine of the civilization of the nineteenth century, and brought into glaring contrast with the citizens of Florida, whereby they can come to realize more perfectly their own nothingness, but that they shall be allowed to remain in that seclusion which they have accommodated themselves to, which they have found comfortable, and in which I have no doubt if we could ascertain their true sentiments to-day they are praying and hoping the white man and his institutions may never approach nearer than they are at present.

Mr. CALL. I ask consent to say a few words.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator has once spoken on this question, and under the rule can not be permitted to speak again without unanimous consent.

Mr. PLUMB. I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from Florida may be heard.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No objection being made, the Senator will proceed.

Mr. CALL. I do not propose to enter into a discussion with my friend from Kansas as to whether these Indians should be left in their ignorance and their barbarous habits. I think the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, who has so long maintained the contrary view, may well answer that portion of his argument.

As to my drawing these Indians into their present condition—that is, subject to the care of the National Government—I have done so because I believe that, like other human beings, they are capable of civilization; they are capable of being made good citizens and useful men, and I think that one of the proper objects of Government is that it shall aid in that direction so far as the legitimate use of its powers will enable it to go.

These Indians in Florida have no homes. These beautiful islands of the Everglades, as the Senator denotes them, have been taken by great corporations under grants from the State—in some cases, I think, improperly—and I am trying now to have an investigation which will secure such parts of these islands as properly belong to the Government of the United States to the people under the homestead law. But the pressing exigency is that these Indians in different parts of the State upon the confines of the Everglades have been deprived of their homes. One Indian tribe that had made considerable progress and had improved lands belonging to the United States on condition that they be allowed to remain there, I am informed by the agent, have had their homes wrested from them and a town located on the site of their village and they turned adrift without a place upon the earth upon which they can lay their heads as their home.

Therefore there is a pressing necessity that something should be done, otherwise they may become hostile; and they may cost the Government ten times the amount that it would require to educate them and prepare them as they desire to be prepared for the duties of civilized life. The agent states in a report on file that they desire to go to school; that many of them have learned their letters, but they have no land to cultivate, and they are without adequate means to obtain subsistence even by industry. The country is being settled up, their hunting grounds are being occupied, the game is disappearing, and they have not enough land to cultivate, if they had fixed habits of industry, to support themselves.

For that reason I desire that they shall be included within the provisions of this bill to insure their children being educated to industrial occupations, for unquestionably that is the education that ought to prevail not only with the Indian, but the white man and every one else, but especially with the savage who is being reclaimed from barbarism. I wish to say to the Senate that there is no class of people in this country who deserve and ought to have more attention than these simple Indians in Florida. They are wards of the nation. They have been deprived of their property, and are left now, with advancing civilization and towns and population gathering around them, without any place where they can go and make their homes. I therefore hope that they will be included in the provisions of this bill, and that this section as amended may be adopted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understood the Senator from Florida to submit another amendment, which has not yet been read from the desk. It will be read.

Mr. CALL. I will read it. I propose to add:

That the provisions of this act shall extend to the Seminole and Creek Indians of Florida, and the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to organize a select school in which they may be placed.

And in section 3, line 5, after the word "annuities," insert "or appropriations;" and in line 6, after the word "children," insert "or from the tribe."

Mr. DAWES. At the suggestion of the Senator from Missouri I ask unanimous consent to modify the amendment which I offered, which was accepted before, namely, to put the words "or controlled," after the word "established;" so as to read "established or controlled."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed amendment will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 3, line 3, after the word "established," it is proposed to insert "or controlled."

Mr. VEST. I suggest to the Senator to strike out "authority," and just say "established or controlled by the Interior Department."

Mr. DAWES. That will do.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment as modified will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 3, line 3, after the word "schools," it is proposed to insert:

Established or controlled by the Interior Department.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment will be considered as agreed to, if there be no objection.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, there is a great deal of force in what has been said by the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY]. There has been a large amount of declamation on the Indian question, and there is no department of the public service to-day in which so little has been effected in the interest of humanity or economy; but that should not deter us from trying to improve the present condition of things, and I repeat to-day it is no hobby of mine. I am a Western man and I think a practical man, and I believe that every government should utilize every industrial and productive interest within its limits to the largest extent, and the same rule applies to the individual in business as well as to the Government of the United States.

We have now a population which is an absolute nuisance to this Government, and not only that, but a burden upon it; and the question is, can we by any sort of legislation change this order of things? If I believed, like my friend from Kansas, that the Indian is better left alone, I would not say a word on this question nor would I introduce any bill.

Mr. PLUMB. I did not mean to be understood in that way; but I said we had better let him alone than do what we are doing.

Mr. VEST. Ah! That is true. I think the present system is throwing away a large amount of money every year, and, with certain exceptions, for no earthly good. That has been the result of my observation. But I certainly say this: the old idea that the Indian can not be made to work for his living has been exploded by actual experiment. I have seen Indians at work, taught in industrial schools, workmen, mechanics, and in agricultural pursuits also. I have seen two hundred and fifty Indians at work in the mines on Douglas Island, in Alaska, by relays night and day, receiving a dollar and a half a day and their board, and I was told by the superintendent of that mine that they were the very best workmen he could obtain. A Senator suggests that they were educated to work by the necessities of that climate.

Mr. PLUMB. Not in schools.

Mr. VEST. Some of them are being educated, their children are being educated to-day, and they are very willing that they should be educated. I do not mean to say that is the case with the North American Indians, because I believe, from what I saw there, that those Indians are of Asiatic origin, and they have the same sort of industry which we find amongst the Japanese and the Chinese. Still they are Indians, and to-day they are at work; and the North American Indian can be made to work if he once learns that labor is the great policy of civilization, and without which civilization can not exist.

I assert that the children of the Indians in this country can be saved from barbarism if you will only take them away from their parents and put them in industrial schools and teach them to work. I have seen these children in those schools; I have seen houses built by them. What can be done in one place can be done all over the continent. This amendment does not go one-half as far as it ought to go. I say here, now, as I said before, that I am willing to record my vote in favor of a direct appropriation to carry out this system. Let us try it. I will do anything that I can do here properly to save a single human being from the degradation in which these people are placed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL] will be read.

The SECRETARY. Add a new section, as follows:

SEC. 5. That the provisions of this act shall extend to the Seminole and Creek Indians of Florida, and the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to organize a select school in which they may be placed.

At the end of section 3, after the word "annuities," in line 5, insert "or appropriations;" and in line 6, same section, after the word "children," insert "or from the tribe;" so that the section will read:

SEC. 3. That the Secretary of the Interior may, when the parents or natural guardians of such children refuse or neglect to send them to said schools and to keep them there, in accordance with the rules and regulations made by the Secretary, withhold rations and annuities or appropriations from the parents or natural guardians of such children or from the tribe until there shall be a proper compliance with the rules prescribed by the Interior Department.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived the Senate resumes the consideration of its unfinished business.

Mr. VEST. Is there any objection to finishing the Indian bill, instead of letting it come up time after time? I appeal to the Senate that we shall go on and finish it, laying aside the regular order.

Mr. PADDOCK. The chairman of the Committee on Pensions is not present at the moment.

Mr. VEST. I think there is no disposition to debate the bill further.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business may be informally laid aside for the purpose of continuing the consideration of the bill relative to compulsory education of Indian children. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. DAWES. I want to say in reference to the amendments of the Senator from Florida that I hope they will not be attached to this bill. I think the result will be to spread out this bill in a way which will be found impracticable to put it in operation. It will spoil the bill. I think the Senator from Florida has done for those poor Indians down there all that can be done for them. If they will but follow the treaty and the other members of their tribe, they will find a good home in the Indian Territory, and land enough for their care and subsistence; but they, as they had a right to do, I suppose, preferred to stay in Florida and take their chances there. It may be that the Government should support them in some way there, but the Government has made ample provision for them in the Indian Territory, if they will only go there with their brethren. The Seminoles of the Indian Territory are in a healthy and progressive condition and are doing tolerably well there, much better than it is possible to do for this remnant of the tribe in Florida. I hope the provision will not be attached to this bill.

Mr. CALL. I desire to call attention to the fact that the Senator from Massachusetts has not given a single reason why my amendment should not prevail. He says they can go West. They will not go West, and the Government has to remove them forcibly or let them die from starvation and want for the want of homes to live upon. What reason can the Senator give why the Seminole Indian in Florida should not be educated and made a useful citizen as well as the Indians that he is so solicitous about in the West? Does the mere fact that these ignorant creatures have not gone West on account of attachment to their old locality and their old habits deprive them of the care and consideration which an intelligent and beneficent policy would give to them?

These people are willing to be educated. There is no means by which they can be educated unless the Government of the United States provides it for them. They have an equitable claim upon the Government. The money that was agreed to be paid to them is now unlawfully paid with the consent of the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs to the Seminole Indians in the West, the very money set apart for them but required to be held to await their compliance with the terms of the treaty. They are still in Florida; they have never gone West; but that gives no reason why the Government should pay the money set apart for them to other people who are not entitled to it, and I am surprised that the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations should make this objection. I think it is a gratuitous one.

I hope the amendment will prevail.

Mr. PLATT. I should like to ask the Senator from Florida some questions as to the present condition of these Indians. How many of them are in Florida?

Mr. CALL. The agent reports that there are not less than 260—between that and 300.

Mr. PLATT. Where do they live? Do they live in a separate community or are they scattered about over a large tract of territory?

Mr. CALL. They do not live in one community because they have never been able to get land sufficient for the whole tribe in one place. A part of the tribe live near a place called Bartow, now a rapidly-growing town in Polk County, not far from Tampa Bay. I am informed by the agent, Mr. A. M. Wilson, in his report to the Department here, and I know him to be a reliable man, that the land occupied by these Indians near Bartow has been entered and located under one of the grants made to a railroad company as a town site, and these people, with the houses that they had built upon it and the little fields they had cultivated, have been entered out of their homes and will be driven to the Everglades.

All the other portions of the tribe are in the little islands of the Everglades, some on the Atlantic coast and some on the Gulf, but living in communities of twenty or thirty, perhaps sometimes fifty together. These little islands contain arable land from 40 to 160 and rarely 200 acres. That is their condition.

Mr. PLATT. Then they are so scattered that any attempt to establish a school for them will hardly bring their children together at any one point.

Mr. CALL. It is not more than from 90 to 100 miles across the peninsula of Florida, and there is no difficulty in gathering the Indian children in any one industrial school if one should be organized. The agent's report shows that their parents are willing for them to go to school and the children are desirous of going to school. Every consideration of humanity, charity, justice, and good policy requires that this amendment should be adopted and these Indians taken under the care of the National Government.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FRYE in the chair). The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL] to the amendment of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST].

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on the amendment of the Senator from Missouri as amended.

Mr. VEST. Do I understand that the amendment of the Senator from Florida was adopted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It was adopted.

Mr. PLATT. Let us have a division on it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will put the question again on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Florida to the amendment of the Senator from Missouri.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Missouri as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills and joint resolution; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 1275) for the erection of a public building at Columbus, Ga., and appropriating money therefor;

A bill (H. R. 1325) providing for the purchase of additional ground in the city of Indianapolis, Ind., adjoining the post-office site, and for the improvement of the building thereon, and appropriating $125,000 therefor;

A bill (H. R. 1661) for the erection of an appraiser's warehouse in the city of New York, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. 1678) to authorize the purchase of a site for a public building at Buffalo, N. Y.;

A bill (H. R. 4358) to increase the limit of cost for the public building in course of erection at Charleston, S. C.;

A bill (H. R. 4467) for the erection of a public building at Bar Harbor, in Maine;

A bill (H. R. 7220) to amend an act entitled "An act for the erection of a public building at Chattanooga, Tenn.," approved February 25, 1885, and the act amendatory thereto, approved February 21, 1887;

A bill (H. R. 7262) for the erection of a public building at Texarkana, situated on both sides of the line between the States of Arkansas and Texas;

A bill (H. R. 7263) for the erection of a public building at Bay City, Mich.; and Joint resolution (H. Res. 56) authorizing the use and improvement of Castle Island, in Boston Harbor.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills with amendments; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (S. 154) for the erection of a public building at Milwaukee, Wis.; and

A bill (S. 182) for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Omaha, Nebr.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker pro tempore of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. 1495) granting to Edwin Libby Post, Grand Army of the Republic, permission to erect a soldiers' monument on vacant land adjoining custom-house at Rockland, Me.;

A bill (S. 642) to authorize the removal of the quarantine station from Ship Island, Mississippi;

A bill (S. 1900) to carry into effect the international convention of the 14th of March, 1874, for the protection of submarine cables; and

A bill (S. 313) for the relief of R. R. Tinsley.

URGENT DEFICIENCY BILL.

Mr. HALE. I report from the Committee on Appropriations the bill (H. R. 6437) to provide for certain of the most urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes, with sundry amendments which the Committee on Appropriations have placed upon the bill. I presume it will be printed, with the amendments, of course, and I shall ask the Senate to take it up at a very early day.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT MILWAUKEE, WIS.

Mr. SPOONER. I ask that the message of the House of Representatives returning Senate bills 182 and 154 with amendments be laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 154) for the erection of a public building at Milwaukee, Wis., which are as follows:

The amendments were to substitute for the first section the following:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed and authorized to purchase, acquire by condemnation, or otherwise provide a site for a suitable building for the accommodation of the United States post-office, district and circuit courts, custom-house, internal-revenue office, pension office, and other Government offices, at the city of Milwaukee, Wis., at a cost not to exceed for said site the sum of $300,000; and the site purchased shall suffice to leave the building unexposed to danger from fire by an open space of at least 40 feet, including streets and alleys: Provided, That no part of said sum shall be expended until a valid title to the said site shall be vested in the United States, nor until the State of Wisconsin shall cede to the United States exclusive jurisdiction over the same, during the time the United States shall be or remain the owner thereof, for all purposes except the administration of the criminal laws of said State and the service of civil process therein.

And in section 2, to strike out the words "one million two" and insret "four."

And to amend the title so as to read: "An act for procuring a site for a public building at Milwaukee, Wis."

Mr. SPOONER. I move that the Senate disagree to the amendments of the House of Representatives and ask a conference on the disagreeing votes, the conference committee on the part of the Senate to be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and Mr. SPOONER, Mr. QUAY, and Mr. VEST were appointed the conferees.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT OMAHA, NEBR.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 182) for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Omaha, Nebr.; which were to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to purchase, or acquire by condemnation proceedings, in accordance with the laws of Nebraska, a suitable lot of land in the city of Omaha, in the county of Douglas and State of Nebraska, to be used for the construction thereon of a building suitable for the accommodation of the post-office, the courts of the United States, and other Government offices in said city, at a cost which shall not exceed for said site the sum of $500,000: Provided, That the site shall leave the building, when constructed, unexposed to danger from fire in adjacent buildings by an open space of not less than 40 feet, including streets and alleys; and no moneys appropriated for this purpose shall be available until a valid title to the site for said building shall be vested in the United States, nor until the State of Nebraska shall have ceded to the United States exclusive jurisdiction over the same during the time the United States shall be or remain the owner thereof, for all purposes except the administration of the criminal laws of said State and the service of civil process therein.

SEC. 2. That the sum of $500,000, or so much thereof as shall be necessary, is hereby appropriated for the purpose of the purchase of said site, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

And to amend the title so as to read: "An act to provide for the purchase of a site at Omaha, Nebr."

Mr. SPOONER. I move that the Senate disagree to the amendments of the House of Representatives and ask for a conference, the conferees on the part of the Senate to be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and Mr. SPOONER, Mr. QUAY, and Mr. VEST were appointed the conferees on the part of the Senate.

DEPENDENT PENSION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 181) granting pensions to ex-soldiers and sailors who are incapacitated for the performance of manual labor, and providing for pensions to dependent relatives of deceased soldiers and sailors.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I desire to move an amendment which I apprehend to be in the interest of the purpose of this bill; and that is to insert in line 5 of section 2, after the word "from," the words "infirmities of age or from," so as to read:

And who are now or who may hereafter be suffering from the infirmities of age or from mental or physical disability not the result of their own vicious habits, etc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FRYE in the chair). The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON].

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I offer this amendment because there is a distinction technically between incapacity produced by physical disability and the result of the infirmities of age; and I presume it was the intention of the committee to include this class as well as the other. I therefore submit the amendment.

Mr. VEST. I wish to say a word in regard to the amendment of the Senator from Iowa. Is it possible that the Senate of the United States are to be asked to pension any man who is suffering from the infirmities of age? I do not think there can be a man in favor of such a proposition. I think I am perfectly competent to support myself, and not be dependent on anybody else; and yet I know that I am suffering from the infirmities of age. Is it possible that the Commissioner of Pensions is to decide what are the infirmities of age? I believe that physiologists inform us that the result of six thousand years of experience is that every man over fifty years of age commences to go down hill, and he goes very rapidly. Facilis est descensus Averni. This amounts to a simple declaration that every man over fifty is to be embraced within this pension bill. Who is to determine what are the infirmities of age? It seems to me that this amendment ought not to be adopted, although I am "a mere looker-on here in Vienna," and possibly have no right to say anything in regard to it.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. The text of the bill has received the criticism of the Senator from Missouri. It is—

That all persons who served three months or more in the military or naval service of the United States during the late war of the rebellion, and who have been honorably discharged therefrom, and who are now or who may hereafter be suffering from—or the infirmities of age or from mental or physical disability, not the result of their own vicious habits, which totally incapacitates them for the performance of manual labor.

It does not provide that every person who may be over fifty years of age shall be placed upon the pension-roll, but that every person who, from the infirmities of age, is incapacitated for the performance of manual labor, and I only introduced it because, as I remarked, there is a distinction between the incapacity which results from the infirmities of age and that which results from physical disability, and in order to include both classes. I have no doubt that was the intention of the committee. I have offered the amendment and I hope it will be adopted.

Mr. PLUMB. The Senator from Missouri speaks of this as though it were a new question. It is not by any means. The Senator himself voted for a bill in the last Congress which was based upon precisely the same idea as that of the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa. Congress provided in that bill to pension all the survivors of the Mexican war who had arrived at the age of sixty-two years, upon the theory so admirably expressed by the Senator as the theory of this bill, that persons who had arrived at sixty-two years were in that condition of physical decrepitude, presumably because of their service in the Army of their country, that they were entitled to be pensioned. It was not required in that bill that this physical decrepitude or this age should have ever disqualified them for manual labor, and neither was it required that they should be dependent in any sense upon their own manual labor for support.

The only thing that could be argued in favor of the Mexican pension bill that could not equally be argued now in favor of a service-pension bill for the benefit of the survivors of the Union Army is simply the fact that less time has elapsed between the close of the war of the rebellion than that which had elapsed between the close of the Mexican war and the date when the survivors of that war were put upon the pension-roll. That is a question of degree and not of kind. In pensioning the Mexican war veterans Congress did not adhere to the precedent established in regard to the survivors of the war of 1812. If I remember aright, about forty-five years elapsed after the close of the war of 1812 before the passage of what was known as the service-pension act for the benefit of the veterans of that war. A good many people contended that we ought to wait the same length of time, and thereby maintain the precedent, before pensioning the veterans of the Mexican war, but I never heard the Senator from Missouri declaim in favor of that proposition. On the contrary he voted, and justified himself no doubt in so voting to his patriotic impulses, for the passage of the Mexican pension bill many times before it finally became a law, and it was finally passed and signed within less than forty years of the close of the Mexican war. The exact time was thirty-seven years.

Therefore this is not a new question, and it is not one of those questions which involve any principle. It is a question simply of doing that which is in the line upon which we have already moved, and which is justified upon the ground that the Government owes all that it is substantially able to pay to those men who have defended it under arms; and I should hope that the same feeling which prompted the Senator from Missouri to give his unqualified support to the Mexican pension bill would induce him to contribute as far as in his power to making this bill not only just but liberal in its provisions, and then contribute to its final passage.

Now, Mr. President, it is not an edifying spectacle for this country that many thousands of these persons whose services were so material to the maintenance of the Government in the hour of its peril should be found in almshouses, that they should be found by reason of failing health in large numbers at the foot of the list among those whose maintenance is dependent upon manual labor, have, according to common consent, come to their condition of physical and financial weakness almost if not wholly on account of their military service. I do not believe that the Senator from Missouri would permit anything in the shape of partisan feeling to induce him to say that he believes that the condition of the military defenders of the Republic, when they have arrived at a stage where they are dependent upon charity for their support or suffering from the misfortunes of physical disability and of declining years, should not be tempered by some recognition at least from the national Treasury, which should, if not wholly adequate, be at least some indication of appreciation of the service they rendered when their service was so greatly needed.

Mr. President, the story of the war, the narration of the services of the Union soldiers, is trite to the last degree. Nothing can be added to what has already been said upon that subject. No repetition of what has been said can add to the sense of obligation which I think the country feels towards those men; but their merit did not end with their military service. The war for the Union convulsed the entire country. The question as to whether it was rightfully carried on was a subject of controversy in the Northern as well as in the Southern States. There were local combinations in the Northern States to destroy the Union; there were enemies in the rear as well as enemies in the front, and while that war was on, contemplating its magnitude, contemplating the great number of people who were drawn into the military service of the Government for its defense, contemplating the inevitable suspension at times of civil function, there were not wanting men, good men, who looked with greater fear upon what would occur when the war should close than they looked upon the defeat of the Union Army. They believed, or assumed to believe, and it was widely stated, that the demoralization of the Union soldiers would be so great that when the war was over the great struggle between the organized forces on either side would be followed by a condition of social disorder in which life and property would be as unsafe as between the contending lines, and republican institutions would give way to anarchy, and finally to despotism.

It was the anticipation of many that the first effect of the demoralization of which I have spoken would manifest itself by the Army putting some one of its popular commanders into the seat of national power without the form of law—by the exercise of lawless force.

Mr. President, there was something in history to justify this. It was the law of the Roman Republic that neither the legions nor those who commanded them, either in wars of defense or of conquest, should come back as soldiers to within the limits of the Republic. Before returning the legions were required to be disbanded and the commanders to resign their commissions. They could only return without arms and as citizens. Cæsar himself, returning with his conquering legions from the conquest of Gaul, was no exception, so jealous was the Republic of its defenders and of those who had extended its borders by conquest. None of them were permitted to cross the Rubicon. And so it happened, thinking of the Roman precedent, perhaps, and of the two millions of men under arms for the defense of the Union, that many believed the time would come when those men would not submit to be disbanded, and that, realizing their power, they would make use of it, to the detriment of the Republic.

But when the war was over the great armies that had carried the flag of the Union to victory were invited to come to this capital, and here assembled the armies of Grant and Sherman, fresh from the battles they had won, with ranks filled, and under their chosen and beloved commanders. They assembled here, and joining forces marched down Pennsylvania avenue, with banners flying, with musket and saber and artillery all in their accustomed place—the greatest parade of modern times and the largest assemblage of troops this continent had ever seen. Was the Republic endangered by the presence of this vast array of seasoned veterans in its capital? On the contrary, it was never safer from enemy, both without and within, than it was at that supreme moment. Not a thought in all that great army of anything that was personal to themselves, not a suggestion or a hint that they intended to use their power against the Republic, not even a suggestion that they wanted anything which the Republic could give. They did not ask largess nor bounty; they had carried the Republic on the point of their bayonets; they had put down the greatest rebellion known in history, had restored the Union and the supremacy of the law. If at this juncture they had said, "We want pensions to the full extent of the ability of the country to pay; we want the lands of the Government and a mortgage of all its resources to the end of time for ourselves and those who may come after us," Congress would have yielded without a word, and it would have been justified by public sentiment.

But they had one ambition, and one only. In that supreme moment of triumph their only thought was of home and family and friends, and they asked only the privilege of being mustered out and paid the little remaining sum due them of the $16 a month they had been promised, and to stack their arms and go home. That great army, in the pride and plenitude of its power, the greatest army, I believe, that ever assembled in any country in the world, dissolved, its members going back to the localities from which they had come into the ranks as citizens, taking up the daily burden of life they had thrown down when enlisting, ceasing to be soldiers, and becoming again private citizens. The last act was greater than any which had preceded it, and constitutes a greater claim upon the country, and should be a matter of greater pride than all the battles it had fought. By it they showed that great as they had been as soldiers they had never forgotten that they were citizens.

They went back to the places from which they had severally come. There was no disorder where they went. On the contrary, their presence became the sign of order. As was said of Cromwell's soldiers, they could be told because they were the most industrious, the most law-abiding, the best citizens. Since their discharge they have performed great services to the Republic. Their army service had widened their horizon and made them more ambitious. They realized fully while in the service the power that they had. When they went back to the places from which they had come the surroundings were narrow by comparison. They wanted more room and verge; and so they took wife and children and went West. And then it happened that succeeding and as a result of the war there was the greatest hegira of modern times. The Union soldier was seeking for a home west of the Mississippi. He found it on the prairies of Kansas and Nebraska, in Dakota, in the mines, and on the wide reaches of Colorado. He has peopled new States, created new Territories, wiped a desert off the map, and developed the resources of a new country with a completeness and rapidity of which we had before had no experience.

The Union soldiers have done more. They have gone beyond the limits of the country into foreign lands. General Grant told me in the last conversation I had with him, not many months before he was stricken with that malady which finally culminated in his death, that he had had rare pride in the fact that the Americans whom he met abroad, and who were the best examples of self-reliance, manhood, and energy, were chiefly men who had served in the Union Army.

I was reading the other day the book of General Wilson upon China, in which he mentions the fact that a man who was a private soldier in the Twelfth New York Cavalry is to-day the private secretary and confidential adviser of the man who, more than any other man, wields the destinies of that empire of 500,000,000 people. The Union soldier, armed with those qualities which were begotten as the result of his army service, is strengthening the Republic at home and abroad, and his influence will increase and widen with lapse of time. They are not begging from Congress, but, mindful of promises made them of what has been done for the soldiers of other wars and observing the opulency of the country, they feel that they can consistently with manhood suggest that those of their comrades who are broken in health and purse ought to have substantial relief. They have not been as well treated on the whole as the veterans of Mexico were treated, and I do not believe that any man who looks with patriotic pride upon that portion of the history of this country during which two million men sprang to arms to prevent its disruption would ever be willing to vote to establish any rule or to prevent the enactment of any law whereby any of these men should be kept in that condition in which they were threatened by extreme poverty, especially where physically disabled.

This bill, even as it came from the committee, is perhaps a step in the right direction. It is not what it ought to be. I have sought to make it better. But whatever it may be in its terms, however we may trim it for the purpose of meeting possible objections elsewhere, I do not believe that the Congress of the United States will fail, ultimately at least, to do by the survivors of the war of 1861 to 1865 as full and ample justice as it has done to those who served in the war with Mexico and the war of 1812.

This bill and all the bills that we have passed lack much of coming up to the standard of what we have done for the soldiers of other wars. There is to be no insinuation here or elsewhere that the Union soldier is to be the beneficiary of this bill in the sense that makes him a suppliant or a suggestion that he is an unworthy person. I do not think that partisanship will go that far, and if it does, I believe that the American people will rebuke it.

We are not giving, Mr. President, out of slender resources. We are dealing with abundance. There was given during the war what the country supposed it was able to give. It was believed that coming out of that great period with an enormous debt there would be years of privation, of financial disturbance, of stringency, of poverty to the people at large. But instead of that there has been opulence. The country entered upon a career of prosperity far beyond anything that had been anticipated, and it is able, as I believe it is willing, to do that which will put these men beyond possible want during the few remaining years of their life. To do less would not be just; more is not asked for.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, I had not the slightest idea that the few words of suggestion which I made in regard to the amendment would provoke the outburst of eloquence to which we have been listening.

We have heard a good deal upon this floor about almshouses and Federal soldiers. I do not know how it is in the rest of the Union, but in the State of Missouri there are no Federal soldiers in almshouses, and I am proud to say that there are no Confederate soldiers in almshouses either.

When General Lee surrendered at Appomattox there were but eight thousand muskets left of that splendid army which had fought the world in arms and had been battered and beaten back by overwhelming numbers for four long years. Out of companies that went into that terrible strife, of one hundred and twenty-five and one hundred and eighty men, but ten or twelve returned back to their kindred and homes. The South to-day is filled with maimed and crippled soldiers, who, amid shot and shell and saber-stroke, fought for their honest convictions as men had seldom fought before. They ask no pensions. God be thanked, they would not take them. They are not in almshouses and no man has ever seen one of them begging for bread.

Whence comes this talk of Federal soldiers in almshouses? They are not there. I am tired and sick of being forced into this procession of robbery and pretense and hypocrisy in the name of the true and gallant soldiers of the Union. I have personal friends among them. I have said before, and I repeat here to-day, that I will give to the disabled or dependent soldiers of the Federal Army, their widows and orphans, the last acre of land and the last dollar of money that belong to this country, and I would have done the same to the soldiers of the Confederacy if God had blessed our cause.

We hear this talk that we have not done enough for the soldiers. We have spent since the close of the war $883,400,000 in pensions, a sum unparalleled in the history of the whole world. We passed laws that preferred them to appointments for office above their fellow-citizens, and to-day we are told that we owe them a debt of eternal gratitude because they did not seize with mailed hand the Government of this country and convert it to their own purposes.

That great military and political organization, the Grand Army of the Republic, throws its iron glove into the debates of Congress and sends to us bills through its accredited Senators; and when the President of the United States honestly and bravely discharged his executive duty and vetoed an enactment which he considered improper, he was threatened by the officers of this organization with personal insult if he dared to make his presence known in the city where it held its last meeting.

There is a limit to human endurance. I have stood here and voted for these bills, coerced by my own position, because I have been a Confederate, although I knew I was as honestly anxious for the glory, welfare, and advancement of this country as any one could possibly be. The Senator tells me now I voted for enactments similar to that in this bill. Yes, Mr. President, I voted for them because I wanted to evidence to the whole world that the men with whom I acted in that unfortunate strife were honest and magnanimous; that we respected the brave and gallant soldiers of the Union, and were willing to give them even more than they demanded.

But there is a limit to human patience on this subject, and I have reached it. I will be driven no further by claim agents and pretenders in the garb of soldiers. To the honest and brave and real soldiers of the Union Army I am willing to vote any amount of pension, but I do not believe they are here asking for additional largess from the Government.

In this city are a corps of men engaged in inventing legislation to take more money out of the Federal Treasury. Here is the report of the Commissioner of Pensions showing that in 1879, when we passed the arrears-of-pension act, there were some 36,835 applications for invalid pensions. We passed that act, and in 1880 the applications jumped to 110,673. The war had closed in 1865; fifteen years had elapsed. Where were these 80,000 and more invalids who were entitled to pensions from this Government through all those fifteen years? They did not know that they needed the money. They did not know that they had been disabled, but the claim agents invented a law, and when Congress put a limitation upon the time for applying, the number of applicants jumped in one single year, by the record, from 30,000 to 110,000, and the amount of disbursements from $30,000,000 to $57,000,000.

The pension-rolls show that out of 2,300,000 men enrolled in the Federal Army 800,000 were disabled by disease or by shot and shell. Nearly 50 per cent. of all the men enrolled in the Federal Army according to the pension reports are now applicants for pensions, or have been. Such mortality and such military execution have never been known in the history of the whole world. The Confederates were not properly equipped. We deprecated the quality of our powder; our soldiers were half-clothed, and half-armed, and half-fed; yet according to this report, making due allowance for the effects of climate and disease, every Confederate soldier disabled three of his adversaries.

There has been no such destruction in military annals since the children of Israel marched through the wilderness and destroyed whole nations in a single day. Talk of marksmanship! Why, sir, we have read in the Arabian Nights of that Persian prince to whom a genius gave an arrow which went to its mark across whole continents, through mountains, over rivers, despising space in its flight. The arrow in the Arabian Nights was nothing to the bullet of the Confederate soldier. It must have hit two or more at one time and struck where it was not aimed. It produced strange and subtle diseases, which lie dormant for twenty-five years in the system, and then suddenly break forth under the effect of some new pension law.

Nearly 50 per cent. of all these hosts to-day are applicants for pensions. Who believes that all these are honest applicants? Who believes that this thing has not degenerated into a political abuse, which cries aloud in the face of all honest men for redress?

Mr. President, I speak for myself. With the change of a single word I could adopt that celebrated prayer in Timon of Athens—

> Immortal gods, I crave no pelf,
> I speak for no man but myself.

I have great regard for many of my friends upon the opposite side of this Chamber, and in the few words I have spoken I wanted to give opportunity to some one of them who has lagged back in the contest of the last two days to throw his shining lance, to use the words of that great ecclesiastical authority, Colonel Ingersoll, among the "Confederate brigadiers" and carry off the Republican nomination for the Presidency.

A recent dispatch from Europe has caused Presidential candidates to be as thick as "autumnal leaves that strew the brooks in Vallombrosa." Before that dispatch came under the yeasty waves of ocean from the city of Florence the Republican party was very much in the condition of a married gentleman of my acquaintance, who was in the habit of remaining away from home until 3 or 4 o'clock in the morning. Upon one eventful evening he arrived at 7 o'clock, and his wife in the profoundest astonishment inquired, "Why, husband, what has brought you home so early?" "My dear," said he, "every other place in town is shut up." [Laughter.]

But the doors are now open and Presidential candidates are coming to the front without limit as to quantity or locality. We have been engaged in a political auction for the soldier vote for the last three days.

First came my friend from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON], backed by the Grand Army of the Republic, and my feelings for him personally are of the kindest description. I listened to his melodious and modulated voice from beginning to end with real gratification. Even his flings at the President of the United States did not deteriorate from the general merit of his bid for the soldier vote, and when he received a floral edifice as a token of regard on behalf of the admiring constituency behind him I had but one single suggestion as a member of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds to make, and that was that in lilies there should have been embroidered over the portal, "The White House." That is the object of all this debate, of all this bidding for the soldier vote of the country in the coming contest.

When the Senator from Nebraska took his seat I thought the bid was in his favor, but the present occupant of the chair, the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE], caught the eye of the auctioneer, the Grand Army of the Republic, and went "one better" by declaring that he was for a service pension to every man who had ever served a day in the Federal armies.

I was about to knock down the bid to him without further proceeding, when my friend from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] came to the front and took the bid away from the Senator from Maine and amended the bill so as to add from $50,000,000 to $75,000,000 to the amount of expenditure.

I was then strongly of the opinion that the auction should close and the bid be given to him; but the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] came to the front and made a bid from that great prairie State which staggered my convictions as to the propriety of closing the sale, and since that time I have been bewildered and anxious, waiting to hear from the other bidders in this great national auction.

Why, sir, we have not heard from my dulcet friend from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON], who has given his acquiescence to the most extreme propositions for the benefit of the soldiers of the country. We have not heard from the distinguished Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN], who, in a contest of this sort, certainly ought to come to the front and bid something for the vote which is to determine this contest. We have not heard yet from the Presiding Officer of the Senate, who has been nominated by the District of Columbia, and we all know that the District of Columbia only acts from the most disinterested and unselfish motives. [Laughter.]

I would rather have the support of the District of Columbia than that of any State in this Union, because I know it comes from the heart and never from the pocket. [Laughter.] No man, woman, or child in this District has any other object except to promote the national honor and the national prosperity. When I read in a Democratic paper on Sunday last, before I attended church, that the Presiding Officer of the Senate was the nominee of the District of Columbia, I said, "Eureka! we have found the man at last, and this question is finally determined."

Mr. President, when is the auction to close? When are we to see the last and final bid, a service pension to every man who served in the Federal Army during the war? The proposition comes here now to pay a pension of 1 cent a day for the term of service. That will not satisfy the demand. Nothing but a service pension in accordance with the demands of the claim agents, in accordance with the demands of the men who are making a business of pensions, will ever close this bidding for the highest office within the gift of the people.

What will be the expenditure of public money if legislation goes on as has been the case within the last few years? Eight hundred and eighty-three millions have been expended since the close of the war. If this bill passes as amended now on the motion of the Senator from Kansas, it will take out of the national Treasury, in my judgment, from $100,000,000 to $150,000,000. I remember very well in 1879, when the arrears-of-pension act was before the Senate, we were told that $30,000,000 was the outside limit which would be called for by that act. Two hundred and forty millions would not to-day cover the expenditure, and still it is going on.

I have sat here and voted for pension bill after pension bill for the reasons I have given. The Southern people, impoverished, cursed with war, pestilence, and famine, have paid since the close of hostilities out of their hard earnings $240,000,000 of the enormous amount that is paid for pensions.

Mr. HAMPTON. Two hundred and ninety million dollars.

Mr. VEST. My friend from South Carolina says $290,000,000. Out of the $75,000,000 paid last year for pensions the ruined people of the South paid $25,000,000. They have done it without complaint; they have done it without protest; and I stand here to-day as a Southern man, as a Senator of the United States, and I declare that I will not go one single step further in this unholy and wicked prostitution of the gratitude of a great people to the personal and mercenary ends that are now behind this movement. If Senators upon the opposite side seek to seize my words and convert them into a partisan meaning, let them do so. Partisan or non-partisan, my oath of office requires me to vote against this bill, and I say here now that I hope it may die the death in the other branch of the national Congress, and if not there, at the hands of the Executive. If that be unparliamentary, make the most of it.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, if there is some little diversity of opinion among the people who enroll themselves as Republicans as to who shall be our standard-bearer, our Democratic friends are not in that condition. Their standard-bearer is selected for them, whether they will or not. It is even said that there has been an arrangement made that the governors of certain States shall be nominated in the same interest. The nominee for Vice-President is said to have been selected in the same way. If we on our side are disturbed by conflicting opinions and conflicting interests, if we have a great number of prominent men who we believe would make good Presidents, the great Democratic party are reduced to-day to the condition that they are compelled to admit that they have but one. Only one man of all that great body of men who assembled at the last general election is said to be an available candidate.

Mr. PLATT. May I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. PLATT. I suppose I know to whom the Senator alludes, but I think it can not be possible, and if he will permit me, I should like to give my reasons why I think it can not be possible.

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. PLATT. I read from the letter of acceptance by the last Democratic nominee these words:

> When an election to office shall be the selection by the voters of one of their number, to assume for a time a public trust, instead of his dedication to the profession of politics; when the holders of the ballot, quickened by a sense of duty, shall avenge truth betrayed and pledges broken, and when the suffrage shall be altogether free and uncorrupted, the full realization of a Government of the people will be at hand. And of the means to this end not one would, in my judgment, be more effective than an amendment to the Constitution disqualifying the President from re-election. When we consider the patronage of this great office, the allurements of power, the temptation to retain public places once gained, and, more than all, the availability a party finds in an incumbent when a horde of office-holders, with a zeal born of benefits received and fostered by the hope of favors yet to come, stand ready to aid with money and trained political service, we recognize in the eligibility of the President for re-election a most serious danger to that calm, deliberate, and intelligent political action which must characterize a government by the people.

I think the Senator must be mistaken in his surmise.

Mr. TELLER. The crisis prophesied by the Executive in his letter has arrived. The great Democratic party to-day see no other man whom they dare put in nomination, and it goes without saying that when the convention meets it is simply to ratify what has already been decreed both as to the head of the ticket and the Vice-Presidency. The great horde of office-seekers are here, and they have made themselves heard. We have seen the contest going on in the State of New York, and we have seen, if we can trust the public prints, that the Executive came out ahead; that the office-seekers rallied and the Mugwumps brought up the rear; and it is a certain thing that they will have no trouble when they meet. They have surrendered the liberty of choice.

The Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST], who was not one of the men who went out to fight the battles of the Union, and who, if I recollect aright, did not even have the excuse that his State went out for his sympathy with the other side, tells us that we have paid out $883,000,000 for pensions; a vast sum of money, I admit. Does the Senator mean to say that we have paid more than justice and right required us to pay? Does he mean to say that the arrears-of-pensions act was anything more than a compliance with the contract that we entered into with the soldiers when they entered into the Army?

Is it not consistent with the statutes then in force that they were, if disabled, to receive a pension for such disability? No matter whether it is much or whether it is little, it was due to those men. They were entitled to it, and the question of economy does not enter into the case.

Who made it necessary that this great amount of money should be taken from the people of the United States? Who is complaining now? Nobody but the gentlemen on the other side of the Chamber. There is no complaint among the great States of the North that carried on the war. There is no complaint among the people that I have heard as to this question of paying the soldiers a proper pension and taking care of those who were entitled to the protection and the benefaction of the Government.

We have paid more money wrung out of the people by this causeless rebellion than the $800,000,000. When the Senator is talking about extravagant sums paid, he ought to remember that we were burdened with a great debt when the war closed, a debt created, we have a right to say now, because of the misconduct of the people in one section of the country; for whatever may originally have been the question of right or the question of wrong, we settled that when Lee surrendered. It must be admitted, as I heard the Senator from Missouri say in this Chamber, that having compelled obedience to national law from all sections of the country, the men who thus compelled it were entitled to write its history. I say to him now that the people who thus compelled it are entitled to direct its charities and its beneficences.

Does the Senator know how much the rebellion has cost? Does he know how much it has taken out of the people of the United States? Eight hundred and eighty million dollars is a mere bagatelle to what it has cost the people of the United States. In 1879 the Treasury Department made up a statement of the actual cost growing out of the rebellion. Discarding the ordinary expenses of the Government, taking out the little debt that we had when the war began, taking out the pensions of the men who were engaged in the Mexican and other wars, and how much do you suppose up to June 30, 1879, the people of the United States had paid out because of the misconduct of those who went into rebellion against the best government in the world? I have before me a table that has never been doubted, that has never been denied, and it shows that up to the 30th of June, 1879, we had paid out $6,189,000,000. Since that time we have paid out for interest, for pensions, and for payments on the public debt, nearly $4,000,000,000 more that is directly to be traced to the war. So there stand upon the books charged to the rebellion about $9,000,000,000 of money (less the amount paid on the public debt since 1879) paid by the people of the United States. They have paid it cheerfully and willingly, but they will not willingly listen when an ex-Confederate stands in this Chamber and declares that $800,000,000 paid to their soldiers disabled in war is an extravagant and an unholy expenditure of money.

Mr. President, do you realize how much $9,000,000,000 is? Think of it a moment. I will duplicate every mile of railroad in the United States; I will build a station where one is built now; I will put upon those roads all the equipment that is on any railroad now; I will build a school-house that shall cost $1,000 for every fifty children in the United States; I will build the Nicaragua canal, the Hennepin canal, the canal across the Florida peninsula, and then will not have expended one-half of the money that the rebellion has cost.

I am not, myself, given much to recalling these things, but I think it comes with bad grace, and I do not propose to submit to be castigated from the other side of the Chamber for my vote upon the pension bill now pending, or any other. I am prepared to meet the Senators on the other side of the Chamber in fair debate as to the character of the bill. I am not for giving to the people who are not entitled to it the money of the United States, but the people of whom I spoke yesterday, of whom other Senators spoke not in terms of too great eulogy, are entitled to this under the law—under the spirit of the law, if not the letter—and with an abundance of money in the Treasury, with an income that no other nation in the world has, with no complaint on the part of the people of burdensome taxes, except that complaint which comes from a certain section of the country that does not share, perhaps, so much in this beneficence—with no complaint, I repeat, I propose, as far as my vote goes, that those men shall have, not simply mercy, not simply charity, but justice.

Mr. PLUMB. Mr. President, I listened to the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] with a great deal of pleasure. He spoke from his heart in that magnificent commendation which he made upon the bravery of the Confederate army. I know he had not time or he would have had something to say perhaps about the men who fought so bravely for the other side. Perhaps he may congratulate himself that he is not a candidate for the Presidency, and therefore he is entitled to be something of a free lance.

But when I come to look over the list of pensions granted by the Pension Office last year, I find something which, I think, may be admitted by that Senator. I find that 1,846 claims of citizens of Missouri were passed upon favorably by the office, and that only 351 claims of citizens of Kansas were thus passed upon. I think, therefore, if there is anything wrong about this matter the citizens of Missouri, whom the Senator represents here, are more culpable than those whom I represent.

The Senator has got his courage up somewhat of late. He admits that he has voted for bills of this kind, but under compulsion, or, in other words, I suppose he was afraid to do otherwise; but the fact is that he voted for a bill for the pensioning of soldiers of the Mexican war, three-quarters of whom live south of Mason and Dixon's line, and under the law which the Senator helped to enact there were filed during the last year almost 20,000 claims of the survivors of the Mexican war.

He has commended the military prowess of the Confederates; he has told how far their spears and their bullets reached; but they did not reach as far as the spears and bullets of the Mexican war veterans did. There are more soldiers of the Mexican war, in proportion to the entire number enlisted, upon the pension-rolls to-day than there are in the Union Army in proportion to the number enlisted in that army. So the Senator's commendation of the great prowess and skill of the Confederate army would have to be increased very much in order to meet the case of the soldiers of the Mexican war.

Mr. VEST. I do not want to break into the line of my friend's argument, but the Mexican pension bill gave service pensions at sixty-two years of age. I read from the report of the Commissioner of Pensions the number of applications for invalid pensions, not on account of age. I say that this report shows that out of 2,300,000 men who were in all enrolled in the Union forces, 1,200,000 have applied for pensions on the ground of disability of some sort.

Mr. PLUMB. It is now nearly forty years since the Mexican war closed. The total number of persons enlisted in the United States Army for service in Mexico was less than 40,000; not half that number ever crossed the border of Mexico, and nearly 10,000 of those are now borne on the pension-roll, notwithstanding the lapse of forty years from the time their service was rendered. That is not 50 per cent.; but consider the distance of time.

Mr. BLAIR. There was a very much larger number of applications filed.

Mr. PLUMB. Besides that, as the Senator from New Hampshire reminds me, a very much larger number of applications were filed. As I said, there were last year nearly twenty thousand applications for pension on behalf of survivors of the Mexican war.

The Senator from Missouri may shield himself behind the age of the survivors of the Mexican war whom he voted to pension, but he has not proposed to pension the survivors of the war of the rebellion who are sixty-two years of age. On the contrary, he has indulged in a general squeal against all. He finds in the entire body of them no health, nothing but condemnation and words of contempt and ridicule. He is welcome, Mr. President, to the position he has assumed. He has enlarged the scope of this debate, not for the purpose especially of exciting ridicule against Senators on this side whom he has chosen to characterize as Presidential candidates, but for the purpose of making against this bill and against the whole idea of pensions to Union solders, disabled or otherwise.

Mr. VEST. I wish to correct one statement, if the Senator will permit me, in order that he may be a little accurate in his profound discussion. I assert here that the rolls show that there were 68,000 men enlisted in the Mexican war.

Mr. PLUMB. Under the last call made by the President of the United States, of all the men who were enlisted not a single one ever got so far as the city of New Orleans.

Mr. VEST. I say the roll shows that 68,000 men were enlisted in that war. As to what service they performed I have nothing to say. My own State of Missouri furnished more than any other State in the Mexican war, and I think Tennessee next, perhaps Louisiana or Texas next; and there were 68,000 altogether.

Mr. PLUMB. There were never 40,000 of them mobilized; there were never 40,000 of them who entered upon the journey towards Mexico. There were never more than about half who were in service in Mexico. If the Confederates are entitled to be spoken of as they have been here by the Senator from Missouri on account of military prowess, he ought to add some adjectives in favor of the soldiers of the Mexican war upon the same basis which he has made out here for the purpose of characterizing Union soldiers.

Mr. WILSON, of Maryland. Mr. President, the chairman of the Pension Committee stated on yesterday that that committee was unanimous in reporting this bill. In one sense, that was true, its provisions as reported having been agreed to by all the members present at the session when it was considered. I was not then present and did not assent to its features, and am still more opposed to it as it stands amended. I desire calmly, and in no spirit of party or of sectionalism, to state my objections. Sir, I do not believe that any members of this Senate or any considerable portion of the people of this country look with grudging eyes upon the appropriation of enough of their money to pay all pensions which have been or shall be awarded to all soldiers who have incurred disabilities in their country's service. Vast as that sum is, for the last fiscal year $75,000,000, and for the current year $80,000,000; constituting at this time, exclusive of interest and payments on the national debt, the one-third of the whole expenditures of the Government raised by taxation; nearly as much as it costs the German Empire to support its vast army; almost double the aggregate of the military pension lists of all Europe west of Russia; and far exceeding in liberality all other pension systems the world ever saw or dreamed of; I believe the great army of impoverished agriculturists of the country, who with difficulty save themselves from an annual deficit in their incomes, and the hordes of laborers who can scarcely earn enough to support their families, and the multitudes of people who have small incomes barely sufficing for their maintenance, are willing patiently to bear this immense burden, so long as it is applied to the relief of those who are crippled in any degree in their ability to gain a livelihood by disabilities incurred in the service of their country.

It is upon these toiling millions, who with difficulty earn their daily bread by the sweat of their brows, and not upon the comparatively few who, through governmental favoritism or through the operation of the vicious financial systems and appliances of our modern civilization, have aggregated to themselves such a monstrous disproportion of the national wealth, that the incidence of this immense pension taxation is a crushing weight.

Sir, I believe that a vast majority of the people of this country, in no spirit of opposition to the honorable and gallant Union soldiery, but in simple justice to the tax-payers of the country, to whose rights, interests, and welfare they think it is time to give a little consideration, are opposed at this time to any further extension of this pension legislation. I know full well that these Union soldiers, if they choose to band themselves together as a political body, and, utterly disregardful of all the great principles which divide parties, and upon which they have themselves even divided, they choose to throw their votes against any legislator who is bold enough to do what he thinks right towards all sections and classes, are numerous enough in some localities to make their displeasure felt to the extent of relegating to private life the man who thus dares to offend them by not obeying their behests. But I can not believe that very many of these gallant men will be willing to turn the espirit de corps of honorable ex-soldiers into use as a political lever to coerce the National Legislature into passing such laws as will still further meet their demands; especially in view of the unexampled liberality with which the country has poured out its money for their relief. Sir, such a course would be too near akin to the conduct of another soldiery, who, in another republic, in a remote age, made the gratification of their selfish demands the price of their political support.

And now, sir, I take the position of these ex-soldiers, as announced by the Senator from Nebraska in his speech on last Friday, as the logical ground of my opposition to this bill. He then said:

A very large majority of the ex-soldiers of the Republic do not believe that the time has yet come for granting to the survivors of the war of the rebellion a service pension.

Refine as you will, and disguise it as you may, the bill now under consideration is a service pension, originally qualified, it is true, in its scope, though by the amendments adopted made to assume the widest sort of a range, but resting essentially upon the fact that the soldier has served three months at least in the Army, no matter where, no matter under what circumstances, no matter though he may only have been a holiday soldier, who has marched up the hill and then marched down again, and no matter how nearly his estate may be sufficient to support him, if he is only incapacitated in some degree for manual labor by any cause which is not the result of his own vicious habits. If such be the case, he is to receive $12 per month.

Mr. President, there is no branch of legislation with respect to which its friends have ever been more grievously deceived than with respect to the calculated cost of new pension acts, whether we look at such laws to provide for the relief of soldiers of the Revolution, of the war of 1812, or of the late civil war. It seems utterly impossible that we can learn by experience in such matters. In the first place, no species of legislation naturally and inevitably affords such inducement and opportunities for frauds. In the second, with respect to none are such frauds so difficult of detection. And in the third place, the difficulties of obtaining reliable data for calculations with respect to the number of persons who will seek and obtain the benefit of such legislation are very great. In 1804, under the carefully guarded pension laws enacted by the fathers of the Republic for the benefit of Revolutionary heroes, even in those days when fraud was by no means as well organized as it is at present, there were such gross abuses in the practical working of the system as to call forth the saying that "the Revolutionary claimant never dies; he is immortal."

In 1818 the first important departure from the principle of pensioning only disabled soldiers was made by an act which granted pensions to all "who had served in the army of the Revolution for nine months," and "who, by reason of reduced circumstances, shall stand in need of assistance from their country for support." The proposers of this act maintained that under it the increased annual cost of pensions would only be about $160,000. The results proved that this estimate was ridiculously inadequate. Even in those days when fraud in such matters had not become a fine art, the most extensive and wholesale frauds were perpetrated upon the Government. The applicants for the benefits of that act numbered 27,948, more men than Washington's army at any one time contained, and "exceeding the whole number of such soldiers that could, by the established rate of mortality, be supposed to be alive in 1818. The claims of upward of 18,000 were admitted, and it was afterwards plainly discovered that fully one-third of this number had no legal claim to Government bounty." Instead of the pitiful sum of $160,000, claimed as the probable limit of the law, it required from two to three millions of dollars per annum to meet its demands.

Again, sir, when, sixty-five years after the war of 1812, it was proposed to grant pensions to all surviving soldiers and widows of soldiers, it was very naturally asserted and believed that the persons to be pensioned would be very few. Yet, although the number of soldiers engaged in that war was comparatively small, we find, sixty-five years after its close, that 7,000 survivors and 24,000 widows were able to furnish proofs of their claims and to draw their pensions. No wonder that men were led then to remark that "either the war of 1812 must have had a mysteriously vitalizing effect upon those in any way engaged in it, or the passage of that pension bill must have resuscitated a large number of those who, in the ordinary course of nature, had died years ago."

Sir, we all know what was our experience under the arrears-of-pension act. The Secretary of the Interior at first thought that $41,000,000 would wholly meet the provisions of that law. In 1881, some three years after the act was passed, the Secretary calculated that it would consume sooner or later $510,000,000, and doubtless that vast sum falls short of the true cost. By that act the Government offered a premium of $1,000 down, with annual pensions thereafter, to any and to all who could find proof of disability incurred in the war. In the light of our experience as a people of the practical workings of pension laws passed in the earlier days of the Republic for Revolutionary soldiers, and of those of the war of 1812, he must be a credulous man indeed who can believe that only one case in the thousand of allowed pensions will be found to be based upon fraudulent evidence. If such be the case, then nowhere else in the whole scope of our national life and business have we such miraculous proofs of a mighty advance in the probity and morals of our people. You who are lawyers must, in the course of your experience in courts, have been often shocked by the conviction how faithless is human testimony, even when guarded by all the safeguards of searching viva voce cross-examinations. Not to find many cases in a thousand in courts where perjury shows its horrid front would surprise you. It becomes simply astounding when you are told that in cases supported by ex parte and unsifted testimony only one in a thousand would be found to savor of false and fraudulent evidence.

Mr. President, how much will this bill, if it shall become a law, add to the unexampled burdens which your pension laws now impose upon the energies of this people? The act which President Cleveland vetoed under a sense of solemn duty, and for vetoing which he has been cursed to such a degree as Uncle Toby said he could not have found it in his heart to fulminate even against the devil, was construed by the able chairman of the House Committee on Pensions to mean that it pensioned no one who had less than a total inability to labor, and who at the same time was dependent upon his daily labor for a support. Under that construction he estimated that there would be 33,105 new pensioners under the law, and that the increased cost would be $4,767,120. In the light of our invariable experience in such matters in times past, we would have been very lucky indeed if under that bill the increased cost would not have been nearer $10,000,000.

But, sir, the bill before us as amended opens wide the floodgates of expenditure. Look at the first material amendment—"which incapacitates them for the performance of manual labor." Why, sir, you might as well make it a thorough and avowed service-pension bill at once. There will not be found one man in twenty who can't find proof that he is in some degree incapacitated for manual labor. As sure as there is a sun in the heavens scores of thousands of these men will rush forward with such proof, just as they did in 1818 under the provision for Revolutionary soldiers, and in 1878 under a like law for the soldiers of 1812. Then, look at the next material amendment—"who are without other adequate means of self-support." Fix your limit for adequate support where you will, if the proof of the soldier's ability falls short of that limit, however little, just as his incapacity to labor is ever so small, and he will be entitled to his $144 per annum. Never before did human law construct a more perfect hotbed for fostering fraud and perjury.

Are men any purer and nobler now than they were in the earlier days of the Republic? The annals of crime were never filled with more startling evidences of the decadence of public morals in business matters than now. Never before were men more eager after money or indifferent as to the means of acquiring it. Canada and your penitentiaries are being peopled with men who once stood high in society for crimes committed in the eagerness to get rich. It is one of the crying scandals of the age. In the years just after the act of 1818 nothing was more common than for ex-soldiers to make way with their property, to give it quietly away to their relatives, or to convey it in secret trust for their own benefit, in order to make a show of poverty and thus gain a pension. At first 18,000 names were placed on the pension-rolls under that law, but the outcry became so great that the Government was compelled to institute a scrutiny, and was able to discover 6,000 fraudulent cases, which were promptly lopped off. How many more cases of imposition escaped detection we have no means of ascertaining.

Sir, I mean no disrespect to the soldiers of the late war as a class, but what right have we to assume that they are any better men than the men who endured the sufferings, toils, and dangers of the Revolution and gained our independence? War is no more now than then an educator in morality and virtue. This bill, if it becomes a law, will open two of the most copious fountains of fraud and perjury which ever deluged a land with crime. I hesitate not to say that if it passes your next annual pension appropriation will march up far (and no one can tell how far) beyond $100,000,000 a year. So near will it come to a pure and simple service-pension bill that there will be little use, and probably there will be no attempt, to arrest such an one in the near future.

But that is not all, sir; for then it takes no prophet to foretell that all that mighty host of 202,621 persons on our pension-lists who are receiving less than $12 per month for actual disabilities incurred in the service, no matter what the length of their service or pecuniary ability may be, will never be content to receive less than their comrades are getting who suffered no disabilities from wounds or disease in the line of duty, but that they will move heaven and earth and never rest till they are all put on an equal footing with those who are receiving mere gratuities from the Government. And who will be able to gainsay the justice of their demand? But, sir, the direct consequence of granting their demand, which upon the logic of this bill will be unanswerable, the simplest calculation will show to involve an increased annual payment of $14,500,000. But great as this sum is, it will be small compared with the annual increase which will follow upon the passage of this bill.

There are other provisions of this bill that seem to me objectionable, but are comparatively of so little moment that it is scarcely necessary to notice them. There is the provision that the parents of deceased soldiers shall be pensioned even though it may be proved that they are by their own labor abundantly able to support themselves and although they never were in the least degree dependent upon the dead soldier for support. I can not understand the principle of this provision, unless it be intended directly to promote mendicancy. Why pension a man that he may cease to be one of the great army of workers whose labor makes the wealth of the country? Why pension a man merely because he is the father of a soldier who never helped his father in his lifetime, and who in all probability never could or would have helped that father if he had continued to live?

Again, sir, why is it necessary now to raise the age of minor children to eighteen years instead of sixteen, so as to extend the period of pension for two years longer for such pensioning? Is it not of very doubtful benefit to be giving that child just so much greater temptation to be an idler when he should be one of the great army of our wage-earners? And why is it necessary now to raise the rate of pension for minor children under the care of their pensioned mother to $5 per month instead of $2, as now provided by law, thus more than doubling the rate? It has stood as the deliberate sense of the country for fifteen years that $2 additional to a widow for each child is a just and reasonable provision, and I can see no good reason now why the widows of to-day should be so much better treated than those who have gone before them and no doubt were satisfied with the old allowance.

Mr. President, this appetite for pensions on the part of those who are or may conceive themselves entitled thereto is one that grows upon its own indulgence, and will never be satisfied as long as the patience of the tax-payers is not wearied to exhaustion. Even now we are called upon to give so much a day for every day a soldier served in the Army, if he is not otherwise entitled to a pension. Still further, we are called upon to grant pensions to every man who was confined in a Confederate prison, at the rate of one-half or three-fourths or whole pension according to the duration of such confinement, and in addition to grant him $2 per day for every day he was thus incarcerated, whether any disability was thereby incurred or not. It is claimed that the risk of life was greater there than in the field of battle. But, sir, who ever heard of a soldier being compensated by a pension for the mere risks he ran in war? Upon that principle, as soon as an army is disbanded after a war the first step should be to pension every man in it who has smelled gunpowder.

Sir, it does seem to me, and truth compels me to declare, that it is time to call a halt in this system of grinding and oppressive taxation for pension purposes. I have been told by the best authority that our pension-roll, even under our present laws, is not only now rapidly increasing, as it has been doing for a good while, but that it will largely increase during the coming year. I have no doubt that as our laws now stand the next annual estimate for pensions will be some $85,000,000. Pass this law as originally proposed and it will not lack much of $100,000,000. Pass it as it is now amended and you may safely reckon it at $125,000,000, and probably still more. Sir, when we are facing the probability of this single item of pensions, mounting up to be about one-half of the whole ordinary expenses of this great Government which are raised by taxation, it is surely time for Senators to begin to inquire if in the pursuit of what I will not call a political hobby they are not riding a free horse to death.

Sir, say what you may, rise as high as you may upon the wings of rhetoric, indulge as you will in the strains of the most impassioned eloquence about the claims of our soldiers, the people of this country have been liberal, just, and magnanimous towards those soldiers. When they have poured out their money like water for their benefit, even to the appalling amount of about $900,000,000 from 1861 to the present time for pensions, to say nothing of the most liberal bounties paid for enlistments, the charge made by some Senators that a disposition to arrest any material increase of this exhausting outflow of public money is niggardly and expressive of a want of proper conception of the claims and merits of the ex-soldiers, rather evidences a want of proper appreciation on the part of such soldiers as join in this outcry and of their champions touching the sacrifices the people have made for the comfort and support of those who were enlisted in their armies. It does seem to me, if it be not sacrilege to say so, that a little moderation on one side would be a seemly return for such immense expenditures on the other. And I would most respectfully suggest, if there is not some danger that these continuous, ever-widening, and often unreasonable demands may not create a weariness of spirit on the part of those who have to raise these immense sums of money and may not cause a reaction against those who know not how to impose any limits upon their demands. If I know myself, I say this in no earthly spirit of partisanship, nor of hostility to the soldiers or their claims; and I hope I shall not bring down upon my head for uttering what I believe to be plain truths any fulminations of indignant eloquence for what some may please to term my want of reverence for that noble army whose heroic deeds must command the admiration of all men.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON].

Mr. HALE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Before submitting the motion, the Chair lays before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a letter from the Supervising Architect of that Department recommending a specific appropriation of $200,000 for the services of skilled draughtsmen, engineers, accountants, and others employed in that office; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a letter from the Supervising Architect of the Treasury, recommending that specific appropriations be made for the payments on account of superintendence exclusive of the amount appropriated for the construction of public buildings; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills and joint resolution, received from the House of Representatives, were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds:

A bill (H. R. 1275) for the erection of a public building at Columbus, Ga., and appropriating money therefor;

A bill (H. R. 1325) providing for the purchase of additional ground in the city of Indianapolis, Ind., adjoining the post-office site, and for the improvement of the building thereon, and appropriating $125,000 therefor;

A bill (H. R. 1661) for the erection of an appraiser's warehouse in the city of New York, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. 1678) to authorize the purchase of a site for a public building at Buffalo, N. Y.;

A bill (H. R. 4358) to increase the limit of cost for the public building in course of erection at Charleston, S. C.;

A bill (H. R. 4467) for the erection of a public building at Bar Harbor, in Maine;

A bill (H. R. 7220) to amend an act entitled "An act for the erection of a public building at Chattanooga, Tenn.," approved February 25, 1885, and the act amendatory thereto, approved February 21, 1887;

A bill (H. R. 7262) for the erection of a public building at Texarkana, situated on both sides of the line between the States of Arkansas and Texas;

A bill (H. R. 7263) for the erection of a public building at Bay City, Mich.; and

A joint resolution (H. Res. 56) authorizing the use and improvement of Castle Island, in Boston Harbor.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. ALDRICH, it was—

Ordered, That S. M. Whitton have leave to withdraw from the files of the Senate his petition for an amendment of the Senate rules, presented in the Senate May 27, 1886.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the Speaker pro tempore of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. 4911) to carry out the findings of the Court of Claims in the case of James H. Ayres; and

A bill (H. R. 2993) to authorize the Secretary of War to convey to the city of Austin, Tex., a tract of land in said city for educational purposes.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After one hour and fifty-five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 33 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, March 1, 1888, at 12 o'clock m.

CONFIRMATION.

Executive nomination confirmed by the Senate February 29, 1888.

ASSISTANT SURGEON IN THE NAVY.

James Finley Keeney, of Illinois, to be an assistant surgeon in the Navy.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, February 29, 1888.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by Rev. WILLIAM BRUSH, D. D., president of Dakota University.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read.

CORRECTION.

Mr. DIBBLE. Mr. Speaker, I observe that I am recorded in the Journal as having called up, by direction of the Committee on the District of Columbia, the joint resolution (H. Res. 56) authorizing the use and improvement of Castle Island, in Boston Harbor. I did not call it up by direction of that committee, and I ask that the Journal be corrected.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The correction will be made.

The remainder of the Journal was read and approved.

BREAKWATER AT CLEVELAND, OHIO.

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, a report in relation to the proposed extension of the east breakwater at Cleveland, Ohio; which was referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and ordered to be printed.

ACADEMIC BUILDING, WEST POINT.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an estimate from the Secretary of War of an appropriation for an academic building at the Military Academy at West Point, N. Y.; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House the following Senate bills; which were severally read a first and second time, and referred as follows:

The bill (S. 132) for the erection of a public building at New Orleans, La.—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

The bill (S. 973) to authorize the Omaha, Hays City and Southwestern Railway Company to build its road across the Fort Hays military reservation—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The bill (S. 1473) to authorize the Chicago, Kansas and Western Railway Company to build its road across the Fort Hays military reservation—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The joint resolution (S. R. 5) in relation to the claim of John B. Read against the United States for the alleged use of projectiles for rifled ordnance, claimed as the invention of said Read, and by him alleged to have been used pursuant to a contract or arrangement made between him and the War Department in 1856, for which no compensation has been made—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

BRIDGE ACROSS ROCK CREEK, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 1184) to authorize the construction of a bridge across Rock Creek at the Woodley Lane road, in the District of Columbia, with Senate amendments thereto; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

CORRECTION.

Mr. DIBBLE. Mr. Speaker, in the engrossment of the bill (H. R. 7262) as to a public building at Texarkana, Ark., a correction is necessary. The word "caused" is used. It should be "cause."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In the absence of objection, the vote will be reconsidered and the correction will be made.

SUBTREASURY AT GALVESTON, TEX.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege. The bill (H. R. 1879) for the establishment of a subtreasury at Galveston, Tex., having been reported from the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, I ask that the bill be re-referred to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In the absence of objection, the re-reference will be made.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with the morning hour.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege.

Mr. MILLS. If the gentleman rises to a question of privilege, I will withhold my motion.

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Speaker, I send to the Clerk a copy of the Boston Globe of yesterday, and ask him to read the brief paragraph which I have marked.

The Clerk read as follows:

TARIFF LEGISLATION—OBSTRUCTION TO ANY TARIFF BILL THREATENED BY REPUBLICANS.

WASHINGTON, February 27.

In an interview with Judge KELLEY, of Pennsylvania, yesterday, the "Father of the House" indicated that it would be the policy of the Republicans to obstruct by every possible means the passage of a tariff measure before the national convention at St. Louis. A cry is to be raised that the minority members of the committee do not receive due consideration at the hands of the majority, and that they are to be precluded from adequate discussion. Filibustering to the full limit will be resorted to by the Republicans.

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Speaker, I might summon you as witness that I have very rarely risen to questions of this kind; but on reading that paragraph, I felt that I owed it to my Republican colleagues, as well as to myself, to say that I had not indicated such a policy for them or for myself, and that I had made no statement from which a fair-minded and honorable man could deduce the conclusions there expressed. When I (and I suppose the case is the same with my Republican colleagues on the Ways and Means Committee) shall be called to consider the draught or projet of a tariff bill which we hear is being prepared, it will be quite time enough for us to determine our policy.

PROTECTION AND DISPOSITION OF PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. HOLMAN. I rise to a privileged question. I am instructed by the Committee on Public Lands to report back a large number of bills, all bearing on the same subject, and to move that they be laid on the table; and in lieu of those bills I am instructed to report the bill which I send to the desk, which I desire to move be printed with the accompanying report, and recommitted to the Committee on Public Lands.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection, that order will be made. The Chair hears none.

Accordingly, bills of the following titles, reported adversely by the Committee on the Public Lands, were laid on the table:

A bill (H. R. 1300) to repeal the timber-land act of June 3, 1878;

A bill (H. R. 1301) to repeal all laws providing for the pre-emption of the public lands, the laws allowing entries for timber culture, the laws authorizing the sale of desert lands, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. 1339) to limit the disposal of public lands adapted to agriculture to actual settlers under the provisions of the homestead laws, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. 1351) to consolidate and amend the public-land laws, and to preserve the public domain for homestead settlement;

A bill (H. R. 1354) to punish offenses against the public-land laws;

A bill (H. R. 1371) for the protection of settlers on the public domain;

A bill (H. R. 1396) granting additional rights to settlers on the public lands, within railroad limits, under the homestead laws;

A bill (H. R. 1436) to provide for a classification of the public lands, and for a revision of the laws relating to the public lands;

A bill (H. R. 1439) for the relief of homestead and pre-emption settlers on the public lands;

A bill (H. R. 1440) to shorten the period required in homesteading public lands to three years;

A bill (H. R. 1601) to repeal all laws providing for the pre-emption of the public lands, the laws allowing entries for timber-culture, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. 1644) to prevent fraudulent entries on the public domain, and to preserve the same for actual settlers in good faith;

A bill (H. R. 1753) authorizing and allowing second homestead entries of public lands where failure to consummate original entry is occasioned by sickness, unavoidable accidents, aridity or sterility of the soil, mistake of boundaries, and so forth;

A bill (H. R. 2003) to repeal the pre-emption and timber-culture laws, and to amend the desert-land act, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. 2004) to grant additional rights to certain homestead settlers, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. 2006) to grant additional rights to certain homestead settlers on public lands;

A bill (H. R. 3281) to equalize and amend the homestead laws of the United States, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. 3282) to repeal an act entitled "An act to provide additional regulations for homesteads and pre-emptions of the public lands," approved March 3, 1879;

A bill (H. R. 3306) for the protection and the administration of the forests of the public domain;

A bill (H. R. 3356) granting to homestead and pre-emption settlers leave of absence from their claims;

A bill (H. R. 4438) permitting all persons who have lost their homestead rights to make new entries;

A bill (H. R. 4439) to amend the act of March 3, 1879, granting additional rights to homestead settlers within railroad limits;

A bill (H. R. 4453) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the sale of desert lands in certain States and Territories;"

A bill (H. R. 4473) to amend an act entitled "An act to exclude the public lands in Alabama from the operation of the laws relating to mineral lands," approved March 3, 1883, and to extend the provisions of said act, and the amendments thereto, to the public lands in the States of Mississippi, Arkansas, Louisiana, and Florida;

A bill (H. R. 4991) to preserve to the public the use of living springs and streams of water in the Territories of the United States, and to prevent the monopoly or diversion of the same;

A bill (H. R. 5628) for the relief of homestead entrymen and pre-emption claimants upon the public domain;

A bill (H. R. 5631) to shorten the period required in homesteading public lands to three years;

A bill (H. R. 6045) for the protection and administration of the forests on the public domain;

A bill (H. R. 6094) to prevent aliens from pre-empting or entering homesteads, and to limit the acquisition of the public domain of the United States, and to provide for leasing grazing lands for periods not exceeding ten years; and

A bill (H. R. 7425) to amend the homestead laws to prevent aliens acquiring title to public lands, and to secure homes for actual settlers who are citizens of the United States.

The bill reported by Mr. HOLMAN, from the Committee on the Public Lands, in lieu of the foregoing bills, being a bill (H. R. 7901) to secure to actual settlers the public lands of the United States adapted to agriculture, to protect the forests on the public domain, and for other purposes, was read a first and second time, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed, and recommitted.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Speaker, it is understood that any member of the Committee on Public Lands can file dissenting views on the subject, to be printed as a minority report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection, leave will be given for the presentation hereafter of the views of the minority of the committee.

Mr. JACKSON. In other words, as I understand, any member may make a minority report in regard to any one of these bills.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. A minority report can come in only by unanimous consent. If there be no objection, the views of any member or members of the minority in regard to any of those bills will be allowed to be filed hereafter. The Chair hears no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. BUNNELL, for three days, on account of important business.

To Mr. BANKHEAD, for four days, on account of important business.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MILLS obtained the floor and said: I desire to make a motion, but will give way for a few moments to gentlemen who desire to make reports.

BUSINESS OF COMMERCE COMMITTEE.

Mr. CLARDY, by unanimous consent, reported from the Committee on Commerce the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Rules:

Resolved, That Tuesday, March 20, Wednesday, March 21, and Thursday, March 22, immediately after the hour for the consideration of bills by committees, be set apart for the consideration of bills and measures reported from the Committee on Commerce in such order as may be designated by said committee. This order not to conflict with prior orders, revenue or general appropriation bills.

EVENING SESSIONS FOR PENSION BILLS, ETC.

Mr. MATSON. I ask for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That until further ordered, on each Friday, at 5 o'clock p. m., the House shall take a recess until 7.30 p. m., and after the 15th day of April next until 8 p. m., at which evening sessions bills on the Private Calendar granting pensions, reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions and the Committee on Pensions, and bills on the Private Calendar reported from the Committee on the Judiciary, removing politicial disabilities, shall be considered; and no other business shall be transacted at such evening sessions; and the House shall adjourn on each of said evenings not later than 10.30 p. m.

Mr. MATSON. I move the previous question on the adoption of this resolution.

Mr. MILLS. I make the point of order that the resolution can not be entertained except by unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. BLAND. Let it go to the Committee on Rules.

Mr. MATSON. I ask that reference.

The resolution was referred to the Committee on Rules.

H. C. MARKHAM.

Mr. STEELE, by unanimous consent, reported back favorably, from the Committee on Military Affairs, the bill (H. R. 165) for the relief of H. C. Markham; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BLAND. I desire to make a favorable report, to be placed on the House Calendar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Reports can be made during the regular call of committees.

Mr. RANDALL. It is the intention to move to dispense with the morning hour.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has no information on that subject.

Mr. MILLS. I yielded only to allow the presentation of reports.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order will be the call of committees for reports.

Mr. MILLS. I move to dispense with the morning hour for the presentation of reports; and if I can get the ear of the House, I wish to state that I desire to move to go into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering the bill authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase bonds with the surplus revenue—a very important measure; and I hope there will be no objection.

Mr. BLAND. I hope that will be done, so as to give us plenty of time for discussion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas moves to dispense with the morning hour, stating that he desires the House to consider a bill reported from the Committee on Ways and Means.

The motion to dispense with the morning hour for the reports of committees was agreed to (two-thirds voting in favor thereof).

Mr. MILLS. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, stating that I desire that the committee shall take up for consideration the bill H. R. 5034.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. BURROWS in the chair.

PURCHASE OF UNITED STATES BONDS.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole for the consideration of the bill the title of which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 5031) to provide for the purchase of United States bonds by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to apply the surplus money now in the Treasury, and such surplus money as may hereafter be in the Treasury, and not otherwise appropriated, or so much thereof as he may consider proper, to the purchase or redemption of United States bonds.

Mr. MILLS. As is known to all the members of the House, there is a large surplus in the Treasury, which it is the object of this bill to apply to the purchase of bonds, there being now no bonds outstanding which are subject to call.

There was an amendment to the appropriation act of March 3, 1881, which authorized the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase bonds with the surplus in the Treasury at that time. That act has been thought by the Secretary of the Treasury not to be sufficiently comprehensive to authorize him at the present time to use the surplus money now in the Treasury to buy bonds now outstanding. It seems, from an examination of that statute, and from the proceedings of the Treasury Department subsequent to its enactment, that no bonds have ever been bought under it. All the bonds purchased by the Secretary of the Treasury, either the present Secretary or his predecessors, have been bought under the law authorizing bonds to be purchased for the sinking fund. None of the purchases which have been made by the Treasury Department have been made under this law, either by the present Administration or those which have preceded it.

The fact that this provision was incorporated in an appropriation bill seemed to raise some doubt as to whether it was to be in force longer than the existence of the appropriation law itself.

This question has been frequently raised in reference to other matters that have been placed on appropriation bills, and it has been ruled on by Speakers and presiding officers of the Committee of the Whole two or three times perhaps.

The Secretary of the Treasury had, prior to last June, bonds that were subject to call sufficient to employ all the surplus money that accumulated in the Treasury, and after that time he could purchase forty-eight or fifty million dollars under the law which authorized him to purchase for the sinking fund. That enabled him to get rid of the surplus which was accruing. But, as it was a doubtful matter whether he was invested with the authority to use this large amount of money in the purchase of bonds, some of them at a high premium, he preferred to remit that question to the law-making power. It was thought if Congress intended to use the surplus in buying bonds at a high premium it was better for the law-making power to invest the Secretary with that authority. This bill is intended by our committee to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to use not only the money now in the Treasury, but all surplus moneys which may hereafter accumulate in the Treasury in the purchase or redemption of outstanding bonds.

I now yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. MCKINLEY], my colleague on the committee.

Mr. MCKINLEY. The exact purpose of this bill, Mr. Chairman, is not altogether manifest upon its face. If it be to give to the Secretary of the Treasury authority to use the surplus money in the Treasury for the purchase and redemption of Government bonds and this be its sole purpose, then I answer that that authority already exists fully and amply, and has existed since the 3d day of March, 1881. The bill under consideration neither increases nor diminishes nor qualifies the authority of the Secretary of the Treasury under existing law. It neither adds to nor takes from the power that is to-day vested in the Secretary of the Treasury to apply the surplus money in the Treasury to the purchase and redemption of United States bonds.

Now, what is the existing law? and I beg to read it, and at the same time I trust that it may appear side by side with the bill itself in parallel lines of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

The present law which has stood upon the statute-books for almost seven years is in these words:

That the Secretary of the Treasury may, at any time, apply the surplus money in the Treasury, not otherwise appropriated, or so much thereof as may be considered proper, to the purchase or redemption of United States bonds.

That is the language of existing law. The bill proposed by the Committee on Ways and Means differs with this law only in phraseology, and that difference I will quickly indicate. The bill provides—

That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to apply the surplus money now in the Treasury and such surplus money as may hereafter be in the Treasury, and not otherwise appropriated, or so much thereof as he may consider proper, to the purchase or redemption of United States bonds.

The only difference between the law and the bill is that the law declares that the Secretary may at any time, not during the fiscal year for which the appropriation was made, upon which the law was passed, but may at any time in any year apply any surplus to the purchase or redemption of United States bonds; while the bill itself changes the language by declaring the Secretary "is hereby authorized to apply the surplus money now in the Treasury and such surplus money as may hereafter be in the Treasury to the purchase or redemption of United States bonds." With these exceptions the bill and the law are exactly the same and are almost identical in language. No lawyer would find any difference, no layman any distinction, and neither could suggest any reason why, with the law unrepealed, any necessity exists for the passage of the bill.

Mr. Chairman, why has not this law been invoked by the Administration and by the Secretary of the Treasury during the past twelve months and saved the country from alarm and apprehension? Because, as the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means advises this House, its integrity has been questioned and its validity challenged. By whom has the integrity of this law been questioned? By the President of the United States, and it never was questioned by any authority, executive, judicial, or legislative, until it was questioned by him.

The chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means says it was never operated under by any previous Secretary of the Treasury. That is doubtless true, and the only reason it never was used in the buying bonds by previous Secretaries and under previous administrations was because no condition or emergency existed which required its use. The Secretaries heretofore, with their power under the sinking-fund act and under the act for the redemption of bonds which were subject to payment upon the option of the Government, were able to use up the surplus lying in the Treasury, which they did, first, by providing for the sinking fund, and, second, by the redemption of bonds payable upon the call of the Government.

Now, that is the reason why this law was never used by any previous Secretary of the Treasury and any previous Administration, but its force and validity during all previous years were never doubted. I say the only gentleman who has ever questioned this law is the present President of the United States. To show how it has been recognized all along as a wise and salutary measure, which might be invoked at any moment by any Secretary of the Treasury to relieve the Treasury and return the surplus to the people, I will read from Secretary Folger's report of December 3, 1883. In discussing the question of using the surplus he said:

The only authority possessed by the Treasury, whereby it can restore to business the surplus moneys thus accumulated, is that given to the Secretary by the act of March 3, 1881—

The very law we are discussing—by which he may at any time apply the surplus money in the Treasury, not otherwise appropriated, to the purchase or redemption of United States bonds.

No doubt or suspicion, it will be observed, is cast upon the law by him.

There was no emergency for the use of this law during the administration of the Treasury by Secretary Folger. The surplus was otherwise absorbed, but he recognized in this report, to which I have called your attention, that he could at any time invoke the law for the purpose of paying out the surplus money in the Treasury to the holders of Government bonds.

Mr. Secretary Fairchild recognized this law in his report made to Congress last December. He says:

Now, there is no way under existing law to put out again amongst the people the surplus money which comes into the Treasury except it be that of a clause in an appropriation act of 1881, authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase bonds in the market at such prices and in such amounts as he may think best—a power which unnecessarily ought not to be given and a responsibility which ought not to be put on any officer of the Government.

It will be observed Mr. Fairchild, the present Secretary of the Treasury, does not question the validity of the law. The reason he gives for not executing the law, for not availing himself of its provisions, is because it is entirely too much responsibility to put on a single officer; and I may remark in passing that the bill reported by the Committee on Ways and Means is open to the same objection, because there are no restrictions, no qualifications, no guards to the action of the Secretary of the Treasury in the use of the surplus for the redemption of bonds, and yet he is now willing to assume this responsibility and wants the bill to pass.

We have also the testimony of the gentleman who was Secretary of the Treasury at the time this law was passed, Mr. Secretary Sherman. This is what he says:

This law was passed by a Democratic Congress in both Houses, at my request as Secretary of the Treasury, to meet the very difficulty suggested, and, in plain English, to operate at any time.

That is the language of the Secretary of the Treasury who suggested the passage of that law, who ought to know its purpose.

He says:

Under it the Secretary of the Treasury from time to time could apply the surplus in the Treasury to the purchase or redemption of bonds of the United States from the beginning of this Administration to this hour. Instead of which there was an accumulation of surplus beyond all precedent, which tended to and did produce the very dangers and difficulties by which we are threatened.

So I say that the only question yet made to the force and integrity of this law is that made by the President of the United States himself. He characterized it in his message as "suspicious," suspicious because, forsooth, it was adopted as an independent section on an appropriation bill. That is all the ground upon which he bases his suspicion. That is the sole ground upon which he based his refusal to execute it, and apply the surplus for the purchase of outstanding bonds.

Mr. Chairman, it may be important to know how this authorization came into an appropriation bill, how this law was passed. I have already told you that Senator SHERMAN, at that time Secretary of the Treasury, suggested its enactment. It was offered in the Senate of the United States by a member of the President's present official family, the premier of his Cabinet, Mr. Bayard, at that time a Senator from Delaware and then chairman of the Finance Committee of the Senate. He offered it not covertly, but in open Senate, in broad daylight, and called the attention of the Senate to it.

The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK], who was in charge of the appropriation bill, gave way that it might be offered, and it passed the Senate without a division and unanimously, and came to this House. The House was then Democratic. The House non-concurred in this and other amendments of the Senate. A committee of conference was appointed consisting of two Democratic members and one Republican. Mr. McMahon of Ohio, Mr. Cobb of Indiana, and Mr. HISCOCK of New York constituted the committee on the part of the House.

They met and agreed upon this amendment with the other amendments of the Senate, and it came back to the House and passed this body without a dissenting vote. It then received the approval of the President. Thus the House will see how it comes to be upon the statute-books. It was not a rider—resting for its support upon the bill to which it was attached, but was considered and passed upon its own merits.

Now, I ask is it fair, is it frank, is it just, is it becoming, in any officer of the Government to characterize that law as suspicious and a mere pretense of authority to get rid of the surplus? Why, Mr. Chairman, if the President of the United States feels called upon so to characterize every law that has become such through the medium of appropriation bills he must condemn and refuse to execute nearly one-half of our public laws.

Three hundred and eighty-five new laws, distinctively new laws, all of a public character, were put upon appropriation bills from the year 1862 down to 1874; and almost an equal number have been put upon appropriation bills since the Democratic party have controlled the House of Representatives. Why the great Department of the Treasury, its present management, its present system, was organized upon an appropriation bill.

The reorganization of the War Department was upon an appropriation bill; the fixing of the strength of the Navy at 7,500 men was put upon an appropriation bill; the fixing of the strength of the Army at 25,000 men was done through the medium of an appropriation bill, and the authority to redeem the fractional currency with fractional coin was passed upon an appropriation bill.

The authority to issue silver certificates in denominations of one, two, and five dollars, the organization of the United States mints, the extension of benefits of the homestead acts, and many of our best reforms and wisest laws were put on appropriation bills, and they are just as much open to the criticism of the President as being suspicious and a nullity as is the law about which I am now talking. Why, the very law that gives to the President of the United States $50,000 a year instead of $25,000 was passed upon an appropriation bill.

Mr. E. B. TAYLOR. Did he take it?

Mr. MCKINLEY. And there was a great deal of suspicion about its passage. My friend asks me if he took it. I have no recollection that any President has ever refused it——

Mr. CUTCHEON. Because of its being suspicious.

Mr. MCKINLEY. On account of a suspicion attaching to it because it was enacted as a separate section in an appropriation bill. And I have no doubt the present incumbent takes it. But he has just as much justification for coming here and asking Congress to re-enact by an independent measure the increase of his salary as he has to come and recommend the re-enactment of a law that is eight years old, and which stands forth without taint or infirmity valid in law and binding in conscience.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I might go through the entire list and show the vast number of independent measures framed upon appropriation bills. There is scarcely an appropriation bill that passes that does not contain new legislation in some shape or other.

Why, this treatment of a solemn statute is little short of Executive nullification. That is in effect what it amounts to. It is repudiation of a public law. Now, what is the meaning of it all?

When Congress on the 4th day of March, 1887, adjourned—when the Forty-ninth Congress expired by limitation—that Congress had done nothing by way of reducing taxation or diminishing the inflowing revenues. Everybody knew that there would be a surplus of revenue in the Treasury. Everybody understood it. The President understood it, and he had the right to convene Congress in extraordinary session and put the responsibility of dealing with this surplus upon the legislative branch of the Government. But he failed to do it, he declined to do it, and he thereby assumed the responsibility and declared his ability to so manage the surplus in the Treasury as to do no harm to the country and without disturbance to business interests. He did not call the Fiftieth Congress in session, and I do not wonder, Mr. Chairman, that he did not.

If a Democratic House like that of the Forty-ninth Congress, which alone could originate revenue bills, with 50 majority, could not and would not reduce taxation and revenues, he could have little hope that a Congress with little more than a dozen majority would reduce taxation and stop the accumulating revenue; and so I think, perhaps, in this he acted wisely; but, at all events, in the failure to convene Congress in extraordinary session he took upon himself the grave responsibility of disposing of that surplus under existing law, and for the best interests of the Government and people.

Does any man within the sound of my voice doubt that he had a perfect right, from the 4th day of March, 1887, ay, from the date of his inauguration down to this very hour, to have applied every dollar of the fifty-five or sixty millions in the Treasury to the purchase of outstanding bonds? He had that power fixed by a law passed in a constitutional way, which passed by the unanimous vote of both Houses, which stood unassailed and unassailable, and declining to avail himself of it he lectures Congress because it did not provide for paying out the surplus.

When we adjourned we left him full power to pay it out, and I wish some friend of the Administration would explain why he didn't do it in that only straight and logical and business-like way; that is, by paying the debts of the Government and saving the interest charge, which rests so heavily on the people. Instead of doing that the Administration prefers another way. It prefers to use the banks as a means of putting it in circulation; and so it says to the banks, "If you will get bonds enough and bring them to the Treasury we will issue you on the 4 percents 110 cents for every dollar deposited, and 100 cents on every dollar of 4½ percents you deposit, and thus put the money in circulation." And they did it.

Nearly $59,000,000, as I understand, of the surplus money that ought to be in the Treasury to-day, the Secretary having refused to pay it out to Government creditors, is now out among the banks, held by them, they giving to the Government bonds as security for the deposit; and they are getting it without interest. They have got the surplus money in the Treasury in their own hands, and they collect the accruing interest on the Government bonds which they have deposited as security, when if the Administration had used the $59,000,000 and bought a corresponding amount of bonds with that sum, those bonds would have been canceled, and the interest on that sum would have been stopped.

And I charge here to-day that the President of the United States and his administration are solely responsible for whatever congested condition we had in the Treasury and whatever alarm prevails about the finances of the country. [Applause.] Every dollar of it would have paid a dollar of the Government debts if the Secretary had exercised wisely the discretion given him by law. His way might have been justifiable if there had been no other of putting the surplus money in circulation.

He may lecture that side of the House as much as he will. Doubtless they deserve it. [Laughter.] But he can not avoid or evade the responsibility that rests on him. What does a man do who has got a surplus balance in the banks and has outstanding debts bearing interest? He calls in the evidences of those debts and pays them off with his surplus deposit. That is what a business man would have done. That is what a business administration would have done, and we would have had fifty millions less of interest-bearing bonds in circulation to-day if the President had followed the way blazed for him by the Republican party.

Well, now, I wonder, Mr. Chairman, if there was any ulterior motive in piling up this surplus. I wonder if it was not for the purpose of creating a condition of things in the country which would get up a scare and stampede the country against the protective system. I wonder if this was not just what was in the mind of the President: "I will pile up this money in the Treasury, $65,000,000 of it, and then I will tell Congress that the country will be filled with widespread disaster and financial ruin if it does not reduce the tariff duties."

Well, if the President thought that he was going to get up a storm of indignation and recruit the free-trade army, break down the American system of protection, and put the free-traders on top, he has probably discovered his blunder by this time; and the best evidence of that is that he now wants the law which he has discredited; and so having failed he comes here through his Secretary of the Treasury—and I hope, Mr. Chairman, that the gentleman from Texas will read the letter of the Secretary upon this subject—he comes here through his Secretary and asks us to pass this bill which is a duplicate of existing law.

Why pass it? He has got the authority now, and whatever vote we may give we give with the distinct understanding and the positive declaration that an authority just as full and just as ample exists to-day which the President and Secretary have refused to use, and no higher power will be imparted by this law when put on the statute-books. But I am willing to do anything in an honorable way in aiding the Administration to get out of its dilemma and put in circulation the sixty millions of money which it has been hoarding and pay off that amount of Government debts. [Applause.]

Mr. MILLS. I yield thirty minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER].

Mr. WEAVER. Mr. Chairman, in the commencement of my remarks I wish now to disclaim any intention of making an attack upon any executive officer who may now be or who may have been heretofore in power. But I intend to tell what I believe to be true, let it hurt whom it may. The truth ought to be told, and told without apology.

Sir, this country is now within the grasp of a gigantic, cold-blooded money trust, which limits the money output, prescribes the conditions on which it deigns to accept the currency at the hands of the Government, determines the channels through which it shall reach the people, and the terms upon which it shall be doled out.

This trust usurps the sovereignty of the nation, mocks at the suffering of its victims, and relies upon the painful "necessities" of the situation to keep them in subjection. [Applause.]

For a quarter of a century this trust has overawed Congress, and at this time is setting at defiance laws which it does not approve. It is a national organization, with ramifications everywhere. It holds annual sessions, has an executive council, which meets in secret, and is clothed with power to collect large sums of money and to disburse the same for purposes which are not made public. It is the architect of our present financial structure. They have built it to suit the cupidity of the usurer and so as to administer to the devouring appetite of money ghouls, rather than to serve the legitimate wants of business and trade. They have made it a snare, a delusion, and a rack of torture to those who are content to accumulate wealth by production, and it has proved a bed of quicksand to business energy and honest thrift.

I regard the situation to-day as not presenting a contest between the people and any Executive Department of this Government, but a contest between the people and a non-political moneyed oligarchy that controls all departments and seeks to control all political parties.

Where is the money which this resolution seeks to have paid out in the purchase of Government bonds? It is not in the Treasury. Fifty-nine millions of it are in national banks, and they are using it without interest. The Secretary of the Treasury has serious doubt about his authority under the law of March 3, 1881, to purchase bonds with the money. It is a little singular that some doubt did not arise in his mind as to his power to deposit this amount of money in the national banks.

Under what law did he deposit it? You will find the law on page 365 of Loans and the Currency:

> All national banking associations designated for that purpose by the Secretary of the Treasury shall be depositories of public money, except receipts from customs, under such regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary, and they may also be employed as financial agents of the Government.

Now, Mr. Chairman, when was that law passed? It was passed in June, 1864, during the struggle for the preservation of the Union, when the Government had to disburse large sums of money in various parts of the country in payment of the Army and in payment for supplies. That was the necessity under which that law was passed, and, the necessity having ceased, the rule ought to have ceased also.

There was no design in the passage of that law to make the national banks depositories of Government funds for their convenience and benefit. It was the convenience of the Government that was uppermost in the minds of Congress, and when the necessity ceased the deposit of money in the national banks should have ceased also. But, sir, it is true that there are fifty or more national banks in this country that have been literally stuffed with Government money for the past quarter of a century; money wrung from the people by unjust and oppressive taxation has been stuffed into the banks and by them loaned back to the poor wretches from whom it was extorted. Who on this floor will deny that? Fifty-nine millions! Where is it? Scattered promiscuously over the country, without regard to the convenience of the Government, utterly in defiance of sound policy, and solely with reference to the convenience and at the behest of the banks.

Let me give you a specimen or two. I find on the list I hold in my hand the Hamilton National Bank, of Fort Wayne, Ind., which has nearly $100,000 of the public money. Whose bank is that? That is the bank in which an ex-Secretary of the Treasury (Mr. McCulloch) is largely interested. His salary as Secretary of the Treasury ceased long ago, but his profits from the use of this $100,000 of Government money continues and amounts to nearly or quite as much per annum as his salary used to be. He is using the people's money that has been wrung from them at the expense of their homes, at the expense of thousands of hungry children all over this country who are half clad, half fed, and less than half educated. [Applause.]

Who else have their clutches on this Government money? The Chase National Bank of New York has $1,100,000 of it. Who presides over the Chase National Bank? Mr. Cannon, late Comptroller of the Currency. He still has his hand in the Treasury, and is using without interest $1,100,000 of Government funds, the profit upon which far exceeds the salary which he received when he was Comptroller of the Currency.

Then comes the First National Bank of New York. That is the bank that was caught with $43,000,000 of the public money in it when Mr. Sherman was Secretary of the Treasury, and when its own capital stock amounted to less than a quarter of a million dollars. What kind of official honesty was this, and what an example to the country! That bank to-day has $1,100,000 of Government money which it has the use of without interest. While the farmers of my district and my State are ground down by their mortgages and crushed into the earth by their debts, this gentleman and his bank are the favored ones and have the free use of $1,100,000 of the people's money.

Then we have the National Bank of the Republic in New York with $930,000 of the Government money. Who presides over that bank? John Jay Knox, an ex-Comptroller of the Currency. He, too, has his arm into the Treasury up to the elbow, and the profit which he derives from the use of this $930,000 of the Government funds far exceeds the salary which he received when he was Comptroller.

Next we come to the National Bank of the Republic, in the city of Washington, a bank in the same city with the national Treasury, and alongside of it. What necessity is there for a Government depository here in Washington? Everybody knows that it is a mere gratuity to the bank, and I denounce it as a shameless exhibition of bad official morals. This National Bank of the Republic is presided over, I am told, by ex-Postmaster-General Creswell. It has $165,000 of public funds.

Mr. BAYNE. Did the gentleman mention the National Bank of the Republic?

Mr. WEAVER. Yes, sir; a bank here in Washington.

Mr. BAYNE. That is not located alongside the Treasury Department.

Mr. WEAVER. How far from it?

Mr. BAYNE. Down on Seventh street. [Laughter.] One word more——

Mr. WEAVER. No, sir; I do not wish to be further interrupted. My time is limited.

Mr. BAYNE. Mr. Creswell is not president of that bank.

Mr. WEAVER. Well, Mr. Creswell's bank is using Government money, as I understand. If I have the wrong bank by the ear I have not the wrong ex-Postmaster-General by the ear. [Laughter.] I may have placed the right man in the wrong place.

Now, I come to the Western National Bank, of New York. That bank, it will be remembered, was organized during the second session of the Forty-ninth Congress by three prominent Treasury officials, concerning one of whom (peace to his ashes) I will say not a word; but two other Treasury officials, the Treasurer of the United States, Mr. Jordan, and the subtreasurer of the United States, at New York, Mr. Canda, were prominent in organizing that bank and are prominent stockholders in it to-day. How much Government money has this bank? One million one hundred thousand dollars. It deposited bonds to the amount of $1,000,000 and received $1,100,000 of Government funds, which are being used by this bank, as all these other ex-officials are using Government funds, for their own profit and advantage. F. O. Matheissen, one of the prominent characters in the infamous sugar trust, was conspicuous in organizing this bank and is a prominent stockholder in it. I examined the record with regard to this bank and I want to give what it says. The book which designates the amount that these banks shall receive shows this order concerning the Western National, Mr. Jordan's bank:

Fill the bank from banks outside of New York.

Is not that good? [Laughter.]

I have a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury concerning this bank which I desire to read for the edification and instruction of this House. It is dated Washington, D. C., October 8, 1887, and is directed to the Treasurer of the United States:

SIR: The Western National Bank of New York City has been designated a United States depository, and the security fixed for the present at $1,000,000 of United States 4 per cent. bonds. In order to avoid the usual delay in obtaining a balance by accumulating revenue deposits, I will thank you, when the bonds are received, to cause to be transferred to said bank from national-bank depositories other than those in New York City such amounts as may be deposited therein to the credit of your general account, in excess of their authorized balances, until the sum of $1,100,000 is reached, which amount the Western National Bank will be authorized to hold as a fixed balance.

Respectfully, yours,

C. S. FAIRCHILD, Secretary.

Now, this was an order to the Treasurer of the United States, whereupon he issued his order to the banks outside of New York to transmit their balances directly to the Western National Bank—not to the Secretary of the Treasury, but directly to that bank, and to telegraph the amount of their remittances to the Secretary of the Treasury.

And then at this session of Congress the Secretary of the Treasury has sent in an item showing a deficiency in the telegraphic expenditures, and he states in his letter that the deficiency is solely owing to the large amounts of deposits placed in the national banks. That is to say, the cost of this telegraphing, both to and from the banks that are using this Government money for nothing, is paid out of the Treasury of the United States; and in order to meet this expense an item has been allowed in the urgent deficiency bill which passed this House. What excuse is there for this?

Mr. BAYNE. What is the date of the letter just read by the gentleman?

Mr. WEAVER. October 8, 1887.

Then we have also the Third National Bank of Buffalo, N. Y. Whose bank is that? It is a bank controlled by gentlemen prominent in the Standard Oil trust. Yes, the Standard Oil Company has its hand in the Treasury also, through this and other banks. Think of the burning shame and disgrace of such a transaction. No wonder the people are losing confidence in the Government.

Mr. WEBER. May I ask the gentleman——

Mr. WEAVER. I can not yield to the gentleman.

A MEMBER (on the Republican side). We will extend your time.

Mr. WEAVER. No, you will not, I fear.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa declines to yield.

Mr. WEAVER. This Standard Oil bank, the Third National Bank of Buffalo, has $165,000 of Government money; and the Seaboard National Bank of New York, in which Daniel O'Day, the general manager of the Standard Oil Pipe Line, and J. J. Vandergrift, the president of the Standard Oil Pipe Line, are prominent stockholders, has $515,000 of Government money.

The president and treasurer of the American Bankers' Association are presiding over national banks which have been designated as depositories, and twelve out of the twenty-one members of the executive council of that "trust" are also connected with banks that are depositories and are using Government money.

Mr. Chairman, it is true that one and all of these "trusts" that are to-day choking the very life out of the people of this country are, through their national banks, using to a greater or less extent the Government money, and are using it to oppress the people. I say this is a public outrage and villainous shame. Here Congress has been sitting for nearly three months and not a half dozen voices have been raised against it, not a move has been made to remedy the evil or to rebuke the crime. On the contrary, efforts have been made to extend the privileges of the banks. I denounce it, and I trust I shall be pardoned by my Democratic brethren for my Jeffersonian and Jacksonian eccentricities on this subject. I think we have reached a time when the Democratic party can afford to be Democratic.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have already indicated that this money is not in the Treasury, but in the banks. The banks are simply the lenses through which, like a radiation, this money reached the people. It is now in circulation and the business of the country has adjusted itself to it.

Now, I repeat the question, Why was this money placed in the banks in the first place? I know the answer, and the only answer which can be given. It was done to avoid a panic which was then impending. Let us grant that to be true. I assert here and now that if you recall that money as this bill is intended to do, you will inevitably precipitate a panic, and nothing can prevent it. You can not take it from circulation again through the banks without serious embarrassment.

This bill will not have the effect which is desired, nor will the Secretary of the Treasury undertake to carry it out. He dare not. He may undertake to buy a few bonds with the surplus actually in the Treasury and not in the banks, or which may hereafter accumulate. He will not take the responsibility of calling the money into the Treasury in the present stringency in the money market. The banks, sir, are the masters of the situation, and not the Secretary; but, you will answer, we can demand the money of the banks or compel them to sell their bonds held for deposits. You can do nothing of the kind. They will say to you, "Our bonds are valuable and we do not want to sell. If you want your money we will call in our loans and pay, but you, Mr. Secretary, must take the responsibility of a panic, which is likely to follow." That is what they will say. Another fact, Mr. Chairman: The Secretary has increased the premium on these bonds by this enormous system of deposits, and this bill proposes to authorize him to buy the bonds at the premium to which his wretched policy has boomed them. This is something worse than folly. By this policy he boomed the price of the bonds in the hands of the bondholders, and now you propose to buy these bonds back at the increased price.

Well, indeed, may the Secretary of the Treasury hesitate. He was authorized, if he saw proper, to buy under the law of March 3, 1881, but he was never authorized by any law to first boom the bonds and then buy them back at the increased premium.

If this proposition passes and the Secretary undertakes to call in this money, I say to the business men of the country they had better prepare to stand from under. You all know that as well as I do. What shall be done, then? Ah, I will tell you the remedy. What power have we over these bondholders? I wish I had every tax-payer of the country within sound of my voice. What have we the power to do? More than $2,400,000,000 of interest have been paid by the people to bondholders since the close of the war, and more than $1,600,000,000 of principal, making $4,000,000,000, a sum as great as the present national debt of England!

What is the present proposition? It is that we shall compel the people of the United States to pay over 25 per cent. premium on the bonds held by these bondholders. Why, that is not a statutory obligation. Have we ever contracted to pay it? We have the money in the Treasury and we have the moral right to insist on payment at par under the sovereign power possessed by the Government.

England at one time insisted upon this right and exercised the power. You will find the whole matter ably set forth in Senator SHERMAN'S speech on the credit-strengthening act and the funding bill previous to the issue of these very bonds.

Mr. Chairman, at the proper time I give notice I will move as a substitute what I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to apply the surplus money now in the Treasury, and such surplus money as may hereafter be in the Treasury and not otherwise appropriated, to the redemption of United States bonds at par until all of said bonds, together with the accrued interest thereon, are called and paid; and from and after the date fixed in the call of the Secretary of the Treasury for the presentation and payment of said bonds, all interest thereon shall cease. And in making calls for bonds for redemption as aforesaid, the Secretary shall first call the bonds held to secure Government deposits.

Mr. MILLS. I do not yield to have that pending. I only yielded the gentleman thirty minutes for debate.

Mr. WEAVER. I desire to offer it at the proper time. I had it read as a part of my remarks.

Now, sir, I have the entire list in my hand of the national depositories which have been created under this policy of the Treasury Department, and they number 298, which number has probably been increased by the addition of eight or ten since the list was prepared. I append the list, and ask that it be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. SPRINGER. When was this policy inaugurated?

Mr. WEAVER. In October last.

Mr. RANDALL. Earlier than that.

Mr. WEAVER. It was inaugurated in October, as I understand it—that is, the present extended policy; but the law was passed in 1864, and to a limited extent banks have been designated by all the Secretaries. The policy, however, of depositing the par value of 4½ per cent. bonds and 110 on 4 per cent. bonds was inaugurated by the present Secretary of the Treasury during last summer or fall. The policy theretofore obtaining only gave the banks from 80 to 90 per cent.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Will the gentleman from Iowa not state that that was because the bonds were under par when the system was inaugurated?

Mr. WEAVER. I know; but so were the deposits under par—very far below the value of the bonds in the market. Our bonds have not been below par for many years, and the policy of increasing the deposits was ordered by the present Secretary, as I am advised.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. BAYNE. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended.

Mr. MILLS. I must object to that. We have not the time. We want to get a vote on this, if possible. The gentleman from Maine will now take the floor, according to the arrangement.

Mr. WEAVER. I am very much obliged to the gentleman from Texas for his courtesy already extended. I know he desires to secure speedy action, and I shall not insist; and I therefore ask leave merely to print the list of national-bank depositories in the RECORD.

There was no objection.

Mr. REED. Mr. Chairman, if any gentleman desires to defend the Administration from the recent attack upon it, I will give him a little time now. [Laughter.]

Mr. WEAVER. I did not hear the remark of the gentleman.

Mr. REED. It was not addressed to the gentleman from Iowa; but what I stated was that if any gentleman desired to respond to the attack upon the Administration, I would give him the time. Perhaps the gentleman would like to reply himself. [Renewed laughter.]

Mr. WEAVER. I am sorry that the gentleman's witticism has been lost to my ears, for I did not hear a word of it. If the gentleman will repeat——

Mr. REED. I can not repeat more than once. [Laughter.] It is an invariable rule of mine not to do it but once. If no gentleman desires to accept the offer, then I will proceed.

Mr. Chairman, I have always felt that the management by the Treasury of the United States of the finances of the country was a matter too serious for partisan action. I have therefore been found upon this floor, since the advent of the new Administration, once or twice at least as its defender; and I have been so found because I thought the administration of the Treasury Department was proceeding upon those sound principles which characterized the administration of the eminent Republicans who preceded the present Secretary and his predecessor. I do feel, however, now that the action of the Treasury Department is subject to criticism, and I purpose to put it in a reasonable way, if I am capable of doing it.

The Treasury Department of the United States long ago ceased to be a mere instrument for the receipt and paying out of money. It has become a part and parcel of the financial system of the country. It has been necessary, therefore, to vest in that Department certain discretionary power, and the use of this discretionary power is a subject of legitimate criticism, if conducted in a reasonable way.

Among other things to be avoided in the happy condition of this land is the accumulation of money in the Treasury, because that accumulation causes a scarcity in the circulation of the country, which circulation is so absolutely necessary to its financial health and growth.

It has happened during the last year that the Secretary of the Treasury was called upon to exercise his power. He failed to exercise it. My friend, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. MCKINLEY], has in the most conclusive way shown—and I do not believe that the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means or the Secretary himself will dispute the proposition—that Congress adjourned leaving the Secretary with ample power to meet every exigency caused by the surplus.

Now, why has it not been met? No man dares to stand up here and defend the quibble that the power was lacking to them because it was given on an appropriation bill. It is a strange attitude for the Democratic party to assume. Why, sir, I can recollect when it was absolutely necessary to suit them that every law should be on an appropriation bill; and they actually caused an extra session of Congress because they tried to crowd all their bills and all their enactments upon appropriation bills.

What was the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury? It was to get out of the Treasury the surplus. He had one simple way of doing it. That was to purchase the bonds of the United States Government. He failed to do so. Instead of that he has adopted an expedient the propriety of which I would admit if he had no other powers—the expedient of loaning the money of the Government to the national banks. If he had no other power, I should believe that the public exigency required that action. But how can the Democratic party, with their own speeches ringing in their ears, sustain such a course?

If it be said that the Secretary of the Treasury might naturally fear that the price of bonds would be enhanced, and that he would exhibit himself if he strove to drive down the price in the attitude of higgling against the value of his own securities, the answer is very plain. It arises from the neglect of their duty by two Democratic Congresses who stood face to face with this emergency; and it has not been in the absence of wise counsel on the part of the best men on their side. Mr. Orlando Potter, when a member of Congress from New York City, proposed a plan whereby to-day every dollar of the national debt could be demandable and payable by the Government of the United States. And my friend from New York [Mr. WHITE] has had before this Congress, almost from its inception, a proposition to refund every dollar of the United States debt and render every dollar of it summonable upon the instant by the Secretary of the Treasury; so that without disarrangement of the finances of the country, without pressure upon its business interests, without anything which could produce a panic, every dollar of surplus might be taken up as fast as the people of this country poured it into the Treasury.

Why has not this been done? I will tell you why. Because men have pursued the empty vision of a free-trade policy to be accomplished, not by virtue of its merits, but by virtue of outside pressure, by fear or panic, and by means to mislead the reason, to control the feelings, and not affect the judgment.

I believe that the present financial condition of the country is a part of the conspiracy against protection. I believe that this surplus in the Treasury has been accumulated with reference to its effect upon the people of the United States so that they might without investigating, without quite understanding, clamor for something to be done, they cared not what, which would lead to the impracticable legislation to which chairman after chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means has endeavored in vain to lead the House.

Why, sir, when we came here what spectacle met us? The President with a message, a message which neglected every interest of this vast empire, which placed to the one side every question except that of a tariff bill. That was pressing upon us—that and the surplus—and we must act, act instantly, and what have we done? Three months have rolled by and the Committee on Ways and Means have never spent one day upon the tariff. That subject has never been mentioned in the committee-room of the Committee on Ways and Means in full committee assembled. [Applause.]

A special message declaring that there was only one thing on earth which demanded the attention of the Congress of the United States, and that subject utterly unmentioned for three long months in the committee to which that unique message was consigned; and they call that business! [Laughter.]

I do not wonder that the subject of manufactures approached from the long distance of Texas and Arkansas may require some time to be overtaken; but surely this heavy pressure of a surplus, which ought to be at least a pressure of a thousand pounds to the square inch, ought to have given force enough to have caused one little whisper to be heard in the Committee on Ways and Means, to which was consigned the message of the President of the United States and where it now rests in eloquent silence.

I have heard from various sources that there was being matured something which would finally get out of its seclusion and be presented to the members of the committee who have the matter in charge. But thus far there is a singular fulfillment of the Scripture idea that these things have been hid from the wise and prudent [laughter] and have been revealed to gentlemen forming the majority of the committee, and, by the way that they hesitate and move around, it looks as if they were not the babes of the Scripture, but the babes of the old story, waiting for something to come and bury them under last year's leaves. [Laughter.]

What was the proper course—for I think that we ought not to criticise others without furnishing a better—what was the proper course to be pursued? If the minority of this House were to endeavor to accomplish the impossibility of becoming the majority; if the gentlemen who head the Ways and Means Committee were to try to spread themselves over the House, although they know they have not a majority of followers, what ought they to have done with reference to the business interests of the country?

What danger threatens us to-day? What trouble overshadows us? Is it that anybody is troubled about his taxation? Why, everybody seems to be earnest and agreed to keep on all the taxes we have got! [Laughter.] What does trouble us? The possibility of an accumulation of large sums of money in the Treasury. That is the exigency to be met. What ought to have been the first duty of the Committee on Ways and Means? Some provision—I care nothing about its details—some provision ought to have been made whereby the bonded debt of the United States might be redeemable by the Treasury Department. There were bills presented by Democrats as well as bills presented by Republicans, and it was the plain and simple duty to have such a measure expedited so that the Treasury Department would not be pressed upon by the exigencies of the surplus, and that the people, undisturbed by exterior influences, might have an opportunity calmly and carefully to consider the question of the reduction of taxation. With that programme, we could have proceeded reasonably and suitably. But this method of piling up money in the Treasury to affect the general business of the country, for the purpose of attacking the system of protection, deserves and will receive the reprobation of thinking men. [Applause on the Republican side.] I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, the condition which confronted the President and the Secretary of the Treasury on the 1st of October last was a condition for which the present Administration was in no way responsible. Whatever may be the criticism offered by my friend from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER] or my colleague on the committee, from Maine [Mr. REED], upon what this Administration has done or omitted to do since the 1st of October does not apply to the problem which the Administration had before it on that day for solution.

Congress must take its due share of responsibility. You will bear in mind that there were outstanding when the Forty-ninth Congress met a certain number of 3 per cent. bonds subject to call at the option of the Government, that there was a system of tariff and internal-revenue taxation which would produce a sum that, by ready calculation, could pay that debt before the Fiftieth Congress could possibly assemble. It was therefore a perfectly plain proposition that if the Forty-ninth Congress adjourned without any change in the laws imposing taxation the bonds outstanding at the option of the Government would all be called in before the Fiftieth Congress could meet. That Congress alone had the power of providing some mode by which the revenue could be reduced, so that the bonds payable at the option of the Government might absorb the accumulating surplus. Who alone could furnish a ready and wise solution of the problem that was by necessity to confront the executive branch of the Government? Who alone is responsible for the necessity of executive action, for the failure to enact such legislation as would prevent unnecessary revenue? The precise amount of 3 percents was known; the necessary expenditures were accurately fixed by appropriation bills; the probable revenues were approximately estimated; and therefore that Congress knew that before December last the Administration would have to meet that condition when the 3 percents would all be called, the expenditures provided for, and a surplus accumulating daily; and thus knowing, it adjourned without action.

Surely no one will for a moment propose to keep up revenues larger than the public necessities require, unless the mode in which those revenues are raised indirectly fills his pockets with somebody else's money. Therefore the ready excuse of the Forty-ninth Congress for failing to pass any measure which would reduce the public revenues was that so to do would touch the private revenues of the constituents at whose will the gentlemen who refused to reduce the revenue held their commissions in this Hall. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Let us not, therefore, avoid our share of the responsibility. That Congress deliberately decided that the question of taxation was one not worthy of its consideration. Not that any particular mode of dealing with the subject was not worthy of consideration, but that a motion to go into Committee of the Whole upon a bill capable of amendment was not such a motion as ought to be carried, and the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. MCKINLEY], who have spoken this morning in censure of the Administration, were responsible to the extent not only of their own votes but also to the extent of the properly commanding influence which their great talents and large experience have given them here for producing the necessity which the President had to meet in October. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Whether the Democratic party itself is also responsible because it had a majority in the Forty-eighth and Forty-ninth Congresses is a question which the conscience of each Democrat and the tribunal to which he is responsible can answer. [Applause on the Republican side.]

In 1864 the national banks were made depositories of the national finances under regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury. It was, therefore, no new proposition and no new policy that was adopted when the present Secretary of the Treasury made those banks depositories of the public funds.

Under the act of 1870, the refunding act, the bonds known as four-and-a-halfs and fours were issued, so payable as to tie the hands of the administration and prevent the use of the public revenues for the payment of those bonds at their face value. It was a Republican House that passed that act and it was a Republican Secretary of the Treasury that issued those bonds. Whether wise or unwise at that time, experience has demonstrated that to-day the American people are paying an excessive rate of interest on the four-and-a-halfs and the fours, and are made incapable of relieving themselves from that burden by the legislation of a Republican Congress and the issue of those bonds by a Republican Secretary of the Treasury. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The difference between 2½ or 3 per cent., the rate at which we could borrow money, and the 4 and 4½ per cent. that we are paying on those bonds—a sum easily calculable—is the precise sum that the American people are annually paying for the glorious privilege of having had Mr. John Sherman as Secretary of the Treasury during the interregnum of Mr. Hayes. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Therefore, when this revenue accumulated under taxation laws that Congress would not amend, when this superabundant income was coming in under taxation laws which we refused even to consider, there was no outlet for that revenue save by the purchase of bonds at a large premium, which bonds had been made by a Republican House incapable of purchase at the option of the Government, and which were bearing an interest largely above the rate at which we were able to borrow money. And on the statute-book was a law giving the Secretary of the Treasury power to deposit this money in the national banks.

I repeat, the President was not responsible for that condition of affairs. Those of us who had served in former Congresses were responsible therefor. Whatever is the measure of responsibility to be divided between the parties or individual members of parties it is for us to take, and not with attempted logic and meaner spirit of cowardice throw it off on anybody else. [Applause.] Let us assume it in the relative proportions in which it is just and brave for us to assume it.

When this sum of money which remained in the Treasury after the 3 percents had all been called in had accumulated and was accumulating there was, necessarily and justly, a widespread alarm for the business interests of the country.

The gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] has truthfully said that the Secretary of the Treasury is no longer a mere receiving and disbursing officer. Under the necessities of fiscal legislation, growing out of the war, the Treasury Department is the great fiscal agency of the country. It can be so managed as to destroy, it should be so managed, if possible, as not to harm the financial interests of the country. The Secretary of the Treasury found that the circulation needed for the daily business of the country was being withdrawn therefrom and locked up in the Treasury, so that there was danger of a panic, and there was widespread alarm.

He had the power to let it remain idle in the Treasury and the various subtreasuries, and thus, acting solely as the custodian of the public moneys, keep it safe and let the business of the country adjust itself as best it could to the daily subtraction of the necessary circulation. Had the President been actuated by the motives ascribed to him to-day, this was the easy course to demonstrate the folly of our present tax laws, and of the want of wisdom in Congress in refusing to consider any amendment to them. But this inaction might, nay, would, have caused great financial disturbance, and so positive action was necessary.

In that emergency two remedies were proposed. One was to purchase, under the power granted in the act of March 3, 1881, the bonds at the large premium which these bonds bore. The other was the deposit, under the law of 1864, of the accumulating money in the national banks in the various localities from which this money was drawn, where the withdrawal of it would cause stringency and where allowing it to remain would prevent panic.

The purchase of the bonds would almost necessarily have poured the purchase-money into the vaults of the banks in the large cities, have caused there a glut of money, and produced a period of delay before it could be returned to the places from which it had been drawn and where it was needed, and return could have been made only by the operation of the demands of trade and on the terms exacted by those holding the money.

No Secretary had ever purchased undue bonds save for the sinking fund; and grave doubts were expressed as to the proper construction and exact scope of the act of March 3, 1881.

The decision was to purchase bonds for the sinking fund, anticipate interest, and deposit in selected depositories.

Whether it was a wise or an unwise decision, the decision as actually made did this: The money withdrawn in various localities scattered throughout every part of the country was, as to a certain portion of this money, deposited in the localities from which it was withdrawn; it returned into the channels of trade from which it had been taken; it restored to those localities the circulation needed for their respective business. Where the subtraction of this money from circulation had caused alarm, this policy prevented distress. It was the means by which the money thus widely drawn into the public Treasury was equally widely distributed for immediate use.

Every section of the country received the benefit of that system of deposits.

Those deposits, as my friend from Iowa says, were made at the rate of $110 for every $100 of national bonds deposited by the banks. Whether that proportion was wise or not may be a matter of dispute; but there is this to be said, that instantly the amount of money which had to be paid for those bonds, $125 to $128 on the $100, went back to the circulation of the place from which it was withdrawn to an amount as nearly equal as it was considered safe to make it. The purchase of bonds, for instance, in the city of Lexington or the city of Portland, or elsewhere, caused a withdrawal from the circulating medium of $125 to $128 for each $100 of bonds purchased.

By depositing in that locality $110 for each $100 of bonds, the Government had an absolutely safe security; and that much of the money paid for the bonds went back into circulation. So that the disturbance which might have resulted, first, from the withdrawal of money by taxation, and, second, by the withdrawal of money for the purchase of bonds, was made as slight as possible by putting the money back into the community from which it was withdrawn to as large an extent as was fairly safe with respect to the amount of security.

Now, while that may not have been the policy which the gentleman from Maine would have adopted, I say—and I say it in no other spirit than that of kindness toward the gentleman—I thank God that it was a Democratic Secretary of the Treasury who had the opportunity to decide that problem [applause on the Democratic side]; and I sincerely hope that for years to come it will still continue to be a Democratic Secretary of the Treasury who will have authority to make such decisions.

While that decision may not have been such as the gentleman from Maine would have made, it must be conceded that in a condition of affairs for which the Secretary was not responsible, under circumstances of great public anxiety, at a time when there was a panic impending, the Secretary of the Treasury so decided the question that business resumed its ordinary confidence, financial disturbance was prevented, fortunes were not dissipated, labor found a ready return for daily work, and the affairs of the American people, in spite of threatened financial peril, went on without disarrangement or perturbance; and therefore it can be said for the Democratic Administration that the American people, in the midst of financial peril, have found it to be a safe and wise Administration. [Applause.]

My friend from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER] has permitted himself to select some half-dozen national banks, with which certain persons are or have been connected, and which banks are among those selected as depositories of the public money. There have been about two hundred and ninety of these banks thus selected. In every State and in every section of every State have these depositories been selected under regulations and by a mode of selection which have been open, fair, and impartial. I do not hesitate to affirm that never has any financial transaction of the Government been more absolutely free from any partiality, secrecy, favoritism, or jobbery. It may have been unwise; it has been open, fair, and without the savor of corruption.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman says that when we met here in December, what a spectacle met us! I cordially agree with him in the exclamation. Distinguished members of the Forty-ninth Congress on the Republican side had predicted there would be no surplus. Able gentlemen had manipulated the figures from the public records and showed that when the 1st of July had opened a new fiscal year there would be no surplus. Under the lead of such profound calculators the Republican party of the House had with entire unanimity, save the five gentlemen from Minnesota, voted to refuse to consider any act which would reduce the revenue, and the receipts of the Government had gone on inexorably adding to the already large accumulation of surplus in the Treasury.

There had been called in the 3 per cent. bonds. The sinking fund had been provided for. The accumulating surplus was daily increasing. Some remedy must be provided, and that by Congress. To us that duty had been assigned by the Constitution; upon us the responsibility would rest. A Presidential election would soon be pending. Prudence, as prudence is ordinarily understood, would have dictated that the Chief Magistrate would content himself with a few general phrases which might be construed by every member of his party as suited his opinions or fortunes.

This so-called wise and prudent course this President refused to follow. He, under the solemn pressure of his sense of duty, gave utterance to his honest judgment and delivered a message, which has been taken out of the mere dull sequence of official documents and caused a discussion from one end of America to the other that neither the wit of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] nor the eloquence of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. MCKINLEY] will cause to cease until the iniquitous protection of the present tariff has been reformed.

This was a spectacle full of hope to those who agreed with the President, and, I have no doubt, full of grievance to the distinguished gentleman from Maine. I have no doubt when that message came it excited not only the wit of the gentleman from Maine, but added to his disappointment the bad temper which still lingers in the lecture he has just made to his colleagues on the Ways and Means Committee. [Laughter and applause.]

And, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman gives in his utterances unwittingly one of the principal grievances against this system. He speaks of it being a long way from Texas and Arkansas to knowledge concerning manufactures. What does this mean? It is that the tax-payers of the country have no business to reform the tax-gathering laws of the country. [Applause.] It is that the people who live on farms in Arkansas and Texas are not to be considered in the administration or construction of the laws under which their earnings are to be taken for somebody else's benefit. [Applause.]

The message of the President of the United States and the labors of the Democratic members of the Ways and Means Committee are intended to give to the manufacturers of the country their fair protection; doing this with fair and equal protection to the tax-payers who have to use those manufactured articles. [Applause.] And while we may not be very wise in it, while the gentleman may laugh at us for not taking him and his Republican colleagues into conference with us for the purpose of presenting to our consideration their views and giving us their aid in what may have been done, I assure him, without professing to reveal any knowledge or to be a prophet, if he will just wait, we shall have as much of a tariff bill as he is able to consider, and far more, I think, than he will be able to defeat [applause]; a tariff bill, I hope, that will gather to its support every Democrat on the floor of this House [renewed applause]; a tariff bill which will gather to its support all Republicans who are not given over to "strong delusion that they should believe a lie" [applause]; that will gather to its support all the fair-minded manufacturers who only want what is just; a bill, whether wise or unwise, which will be the product of great labor and a very strong desire on the part of the committee to do what is fair and just. And when it comes into this House, modified, it may be, by the wise suggestions of able Republicans, or, it may be, by the wise suggestions of Democrats who do not agree on all things in reference to taxation, but who are actuated by an honest and sincere desire to do what is right, I hope it will be passed by this House. [Applause.] It will relieve the President, whether it be Mr. Cleveland or somebody else, in the next four years from the dilemma of last fall; and instead of finding surplus revenue accumulating in the Treasury we will find this surplus left in the pockets of the men who make it. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, the simple question before this committee now is this: What are we to do under the existing circumstances? The President says that he has had doubt of the power given to him under the act of March 3, 1881. Whether that doubt be a wise doubt, whether it be a lawyer-like doubt, or not, it is a doubt which he says he entertains.

Gentlemen upon the other side of the House say they want him to do what this law authorizes him to do. We all agree this is a mode of getting rid of the public debt. It is not a new mode; it is an old mode. It was done during Mr. Pierce's administration, under the advice of that distinguished Kentuckian, James Guthrie. It was done before. It is not the fault of the Democratic side of the House that we can not call in these bonds. It is not our fault that the payment of these bonds has been postponed to so remote a period. There are the bonds with the interest due or falling due upon them; there is the money in the public Treasury with which to pay them; there is the money accumulating in the depositories of the national banks, which, I have no doubt, can be gradually and wisely withdrawn by the use of the ordinary income of the Treasury—withdrawn, as I have no doubt, without creating financial disturbance.

Mr. Chairman, I do not share the alarm of my friend from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER]. I believe that this money can be safely withdrawn by the use of the daily surplus as it comes in, withdrawn by the gradual purchase of bonds, so that the purchases and the payments will go on hand in hand, the process of redemption and withdrawal going on equally with the process of the collection of the revenue; so that there is, in my judgment, no danger or need of alarm. That is what we are called upon to do to-day. That we did not do it, or have not done it three months ago, is no reason why we should not do it now.

It may be that the Ways and Means Committee have been derelict in not bringing this measure up for action at an earlier date. If so, so far as I am concerned as a member of that committee, I assume my full share of the blame. It may be that the bill when it went on the Calendar should have been pressed to action sooner; if so, I assume my share of that blame.

But that is not the fault of the President of the United States, nor is it the fault of the Democratic party, but of the few who have the management of this bill here, and as to that I care so little that I do not choose to discuss whether it is anybody's fault or not. There is the money, there are the outstanding bonds, there is the President's doubt, there is the expression of it, and here is the remedy so far as it goes. Further remedies will be before this Congress. That surplus now in the Treasury is to be taken care of.

Mr. REED. This is a bill, then, to remove Presidential doubts?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Yes, Mr. Chairman, it is a bill to give to an executive officer of the Government the authority to spend millions of money; and if we have the courage to give that authority, let us exercise it, and not, by cowering behind a former law of a former Congress, evade our duty. If the gentleman wants the President to have that power, let him remove the President's doubts, and not quibble about the existence of such a doubt, or what was done before.

Mr. REED. We are going to remove them.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I have no doubt in the world, Mr. Chairman, that whenever the gentleman from Maine speaks he does remove somebody's doubt, generally on this side of the House; because we have found it to be a good rule to listen to him, when he speaks, with profound gratification, and always take the other side from his utterances. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.]

Now, that is the condition of affairs. As to the discussion of the tariff, which has incidentally been brought into this controversy, and as to its details, and what shape that bill shall assume, I have nothing more to say. That is a question that comes hereafter. That is a question which we will have ample time to discuss.

To-day we only ask of the Congress of the United States to take more explicitly, if it has once done it, to take now, if it has never done it, the responsibility of authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States to buy the bonds of the United States, even at the premium that they now bear, and in the name of a part of the Democratic party I avow that the fact that it has to buy these bonds at a premium does not rest upon our shoulders; that we did not tie the hands of the American people by putting these bonds out of their power to pay, nor did we perpetuate the taxation which causes this unnecessary accumulation of money in the Treasury. [Applause.]

I reserve the remainder of my time.

I append the following:

WASHINGTON, February 17, 1888.

DEAR MR. BRECKINRIDGE: In the Christmas holidays it occurred to me that it might be some time before taxes were reduced, and I inquired of the Government actuary the relative amounts required to discharge the public debt by buying bonds at a premium and by paying interest until the bonds are payable.

The statement shows that the outlay by paying premiums is $317,717,994 less than by paying interest.

I send you the statement, which you can use if you have occasion to do so.

Respectfully, yours,

WM. R. MORRISON.

UNITED STATES TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., January, 1888.

DEAR SIR: In response to your inquiry of the 30th ultimo, relative to the cost to the United States of extinguishing the public debt (fours and four-and-a-halfs) according to the following methods—

First. Pay the interest as it falls due.

Call in and pay $100,000,000, face value of the principal on the day the loan matures, and $100,000,000 of the principal annually thereafter until the debt is extinguished.

Pay interest quarterly, at the rate of 3 per cent. per annum on the extended debt, after the date of maturity.

Second. Purchase annually until the debt is extinguished, beginning July 1, 1888, $100,000,000 face value of bonds, beginning with the four-and-a-halfs and then the fours, at such a price that the Government will realize 2 per cent. on its investment.

Pay the interest on the outstanding bonds as it falls due—

I inclose the following table, from which it will be seen that the actual outlay of money according to the first method is larger than according to the second method; also that the present worth or cost to the Government as of July 1, 1888, computed at the rate of 2 per cent. per annum, convertible quarterly, according to the first method is larger than according to the second method.

Yours respectfully,

E. B. ELLIOTT, Government Actuary.

Hon. WILLIAM R. MORRISON.

Mr. KELLEY rose.

Mr. MILLS. I rise to ask unanimous consent to close the debate on this question.

Mr. KELLEY. I would like to have a few minutes.

Mr. MILLS. I will yield to the gentleman five minutes.

Mr. KELLEY. I do not speak under limitation, but I shall occupy but a few minutes.

Mr. MILLS. Very well.

Mr. KELLEY. I desire to say in response to the disclaimer of Democratic responsibility by the eloquent gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] that they are not only responsible for the creation of the debt that has so long burdened the American people, but are also responsible for the continued increase of the surplus which their President tells us in his message involves us in imminent danger of widespread bankruptcy.

Sir, in the Forty-seventh Congress, though the Democratic party was then in a minority, and the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means was a Republican, as were a majority of the members of that committee, it could have removed the source of the surplus and emancipated the people—the poor people of the Southern States—from the thralldom in which the internal-tax laws still hold them. They could have given to the owners of small patches of land in the tobacco-growing sections of the South the right to sell the product of their land in open market, and not keep them bound by law, as they now are, to carry it whatever distance and at whatever cost it may involve to a licensed agent of the Government as their only lawful market. They could, by consenting to the abolition of internal taxes, have relieved the poor fruit-growers of the South, who, deprived of the right to use the products of their little bits of waste land, are constrained to see their crops rot upon the ground, and dare not utilize them, without the fear of arrest and imprisonment. Yes, they could have wiped out the bitter effects of the war on these poor Southern people and arrested the accumulation of the surplus which now threatens to overwhelm the productive industries and the trade of our country, and is now embarrassing every department of business.

It was known to the leaders on that side of the House as far back as the Forty-seventh Congress, that the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means and some of his associates on that committee and many of his colleagues in these seats desired to repeal a large portion of the internal taxes, those on tobacco and on fermented liquors; because by repealing these taxes the accumulation of a surplus would be prevented and the national revenues be reduced to such a figure that the Treasury would be able to continue calling the 3 percents until the 4½ percents would have matured and become liable to call.

The calculation had been made. We knew what tobacco yielded. We knew what fermented liquor yielded, and we knew what amount of 3 percents were outstanding and liable to be called. It was therefore susceptible of demonstration that by the repeal of these taxes the dangers of a gorged Treasury could be averted, and the calling of 3 percents could be continued until the 4½ percents could be called for payment.

Propositions were made to gentlemen on the other side. We had enough Republican votes to adopt an amendment to repeal these taxes which any of you would offer. The response to our proposals was a dicker: "What duties will you repeal if we aid you in repealing these internal taxes?" They were as hostile to the mining and manufacturing industries of the country then as they are now, and as eager to prostrate them as their predecessors were when slavery demanded cheap food for slaves. They could not then understand, they would not understand, and they will not understand to-day, that by the repeal of internal taxes you inevitably reduce the annual revenue. They must couple with it the repeal of duties, the modification of which might blight and destroy the industry of the North and arrest the marvelously rapid development of Southern mining and manufacturing and paralyze the business of the whole country, while if the reduction of a duty was but partial it might promote the increase of revenue from excessive importations to an amount equal to that to be abated by the repeal of particular internal taxes.

In the Forty-eighth and Forty-ninth Congresses the power of the Democracy in this House to arrest the growth of the surplus by repealing internal taxes was absolute. They imperiously refused to do it, and the President in his unique message encourages them to assail those of our industries which have given our country wealth, power, and grandeur, and to retain such anti-republican, anti-democratic, and invidious internal taxes as Jefferson denounced as infernal and Madison and Monroe hastened to repeal.

Yes, in spite of such Democratic precedents the degenerate Democracy of to-day insists upon reversing the fiscal policy of the country, and, in pursuance of British example, of establishing the internal taxes or excise duties as the chief source of our national revenues.

In the Forty-eighth and Forty-ninth Congresses, I repeat, they had the absolute power of arresting at its source the surplus that was flowing daily into the Treasury. And why did they not exercise that power? Because they must fight the "iniquity"—I think the gentleman called it—of protection; thus he characterized the system which enabled us to so develop and diversify our material resources that we hemmed in the Confederacy by our marvelous mechanical appliances, which were the offspring of the protective "iniquity." Had the brave people of the South, occupying the most fertile portions of our continental country, and who are now rejoicing in the new-found value of boundless mineral resources, been able to make their own guns, small-arms or field-guns, had they been able to build ships and arm them, had they possessed mechanical and manufacturing appliances, they could never have been beaten into submission. With them they would have been invincible, but without them they were helpless.

Mr. KERR. If they had had them they would not have gone to war.

Mr. KELLEY. I agree with my friend, if they had had practical knowledge of the beneficence of the protective system they would not have risked their all upon a foolish abstraction; but having gone into it without manufacturing resources their case was hopeless from the first. England herself could not furnish them the materials of war even if we in the majesty of our power had not been able to blockade their whole extended coast. The "iniquity" of protection! A system which lifted us out of bankruptcy at the close of the last Democratic Administration, when, for the sake of paying the salaries of the President and his Cabinet and other officers, a loan of $5,000,000 was authorized and was advertised for and was offered at rates ranging from 8 per cent. to 36 per cent. per annum; ranging up 8, 10, 12, 15, 18, 20, 24, 28, 36 per cent. per annum. The call was for $5,000,000. No foreign house offered to lend the United States a dollar, and the Administration could, in view of the excessive rates demanded, accept offers for but two out of the five millions. There is where free trade had landed the credit and the honor of the American people and nation. Here is a list of the bids as published the day after they were opened:

[From the Philadelphia Press of December 29, 1860.]

Thomas J. Warren, New York, offers to take $60,000, at 25 per cent.
Field & McLane, New York, offer to take $25,000, at 12 per cent.
Field & McLane, New York, offer to take $25,000, at 15 per cent.
Field & McLane, New York, offer to take $5,000, at 30 per cent.
John Barnes, Washington City, offers to take $3,500, at 6 per cent.
John T. Wright, New York, offers to take $4,000, at 7 per cent.
James R. Langdon, Vermont, offers to take $5,000, at 9¾ per cent.
James R. Langdon, Vermont, offers to take $5,000, at 10¼ per cent.
Amos Townsend, cashier New Haven Bank, offers to take $10,000 at 8 per cent.
Amos Townsend, cashier New Haven Bank, offers to take $5,000, at 8¼ per cent.
Samuel Debke, New York, offers to take $4,000, at 8 per cent.
William E. Brown, New York, offers to take $1,000, at 7 per cent.
William E. Brown, New York, offers to take $1,500, at 8 per cent.
J. F. Huntingdon, New York, offers to take $30,000, at 18 per cent.
J. F. Huntingdon, New York, offers to take $25,000, at 24 per cent.

Farmers' Bank, Lancaster, Pa., offers to take $7,000, at 8 per cent.
Farmers' Bank, Lancaster, Pa., offers to take $8,000, at 8½ per cent.
Farmers' Bank, Lancaster, Pa., offers to take $10,000, at 9 per cent.
Farmers' Bank, Lancaster, Pa., offers to take $10,000, at 10 per cent.
R. L. & A. Stewart, New York, offer to take $116,000, at 12 per cent.
R. L. & A. Stewart, New York, offer to take $80,000, at 12 per cent.
R. L. & A. Stewart, New York, offer to take $56,000, at 12 per cent.
Edward J. King, New York, offers to take $5,000, at 12 per cent.
Edward J. King, New York, offers to take $5,000, at 12 per cent.
Field & McLane, New York, offer to take $10,000, at 36 per cent.
Field & McLane, New York, offer to take $70,000, at 24 per cent.
C. T. Carton, New York, offers to take $30,000, at 25 per cent.
George S. Bishop offers to take $10,000, at 9 per cent.
George S. Bishop offers to take $20,000, at 10 per cent.
F. P. James & Co., New York, offer to take $25,000, at 12 per cent.
F. P. James & Co., New York, offer to take $25,000, at 15 per cent.
F. P. James & Co., New York, offer to take $25,000, at 18 per cent.
F. P. James & Co., New York, offer to take $25,000, at 21 per cent.
F. P. James & Co., New York, offer to take $100,000, at 24 per cent.
George H. Norman offers to take $20,000, at 8½ per cent.
Sayre & Brother offer to take $3,000, at 10 per cent.
Levi Hasbrouck offers to take $2,000, at 8 per cent.
William H. Slocum offers to take $3,000, at 10½ per cent.

In the next year came the beginning of the protective "iniquity," and now 3 per cent. is too high a rate of interest for us to pay, and a thousand million dollars is not too much for us to ask on a single loan. And what has wrought this wondrous change? The "iniquitous system of protection." [Applause on the Republican side.] The "iniquity" of protection! It emancipated four millions of slaves and has set hundreds of thousands of them at work, on or near the cotton-fields they cultivated as slaves, at a dollar or more a day in mechanical, mining, and manufacturing industries which that same "iniquity" is developing in all parts of the old slave States. [Applause on the Republican side.]

"The iniquity" of protection! Under your old free-trade, pro-slavery government we could not make a pound of crucible steel; we could not make a Bessemer rail; we could make an average of but 800,000 tons of pig-iron a year. Why [addressing Mr. BRECKINRIDGE], God bless you, under the system of "iniquitous protection" the South in 1887 produced 80,000 tons of pig-iron more than the whole Union had produced in the average of the decade from 1854 to 1863 under free trade and the domination of slavery in the Halls of Congress. We are no longer dependent on foreign countries. We made in 1887 more than half the steel that was made on the face of God's footstool; more than half! [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. How much does my venerable friend say the half of the steal was? [Laughter.]

Mr. KELLEY. Oh, that is a beautiful pun, that is a sweet play upon a word, and if there were a prohibitory duty on the flowers of rhetoric my friend from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] would have much cause to complain. [Laughter.] I say that the "iniquitous system of protection" has enabled the iron-men of the Southern States, of the old Confederate cotton States, to make iron and steel, and if that be "stealing," I say to my friend from Kentucky, that they are now able to "steal" more every year than those of the whole Union formerly did.

In 1887 they made in the Southern States nine hundred thousand and some odd tons of pig-iron and converted much of it into steel, while the whole nation made over 6,000,000 tons. That is the measure of our country's growth from the 800,000 tons a year that free trade and slavery permitted her to produce. I will not detain the committee now, but will meet the gentleman at Philippi hereafter. [Laughter.]

Mr. MILLS. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL].

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Chairman, I have made myself believe, after long experience here, that the most useful characteristic an American legislator can bring into action is practical common sense. [Laughter and applause.] Let us, therefore, in that spirit examine the subject immediately before this House and discuss its difficulties. I do not believe the proposed legislation is essential or absolutely necessary [applause on the Republican side], although I do say it can do no harm to duplicate existing law.

I have not heard here to-day any confirmation of a doubt as to the act of 1881, nor does the report from the Committee on Ways and Means assert that there existed doubt in this particular in the minds of any of its members. And yet we are confronted with an administrative view that there is doubt whether the Administration has full authority to exercise the power which it seems to desire to exercise, or else, probably, it would not have recommended this legislation; and I am ready, therefore, to reaffirm the existing law without any fastidiousness. The policy pursued has been the purchase of bonds at a premium, under the sinking-fund act, to the limit required by that act. The Administration pursued the further policy of increasing the number of public depositories and augmenting the line of deposits for the bonds held by the Government. I do not consider that that policy was wise, for the reason that, in my opinion, no government on earth should legislate as to its bonds except on a par basis. The moment you undertake to legislate on your bond at less than par you depreciate and discredit its value, and the moment you legislate upon it at any price above par you get into the region of speculative value. The safe course, therefore, for every government to pursue is to legislate upon its bonds only at par, and, so far as my reading goes, the rule of legislation in every government has been to recognize its bonds in its statutes as worth par, nothing more and nothing less.

Now, sir, in my judgment the policy of increasing the deposits in the banks should cease and a more business-like policy should be pursued in the line of this proposed legislation and of the existing law. That is, we should go into the market and buy our bonds, subject only to the mathematical calculation that it is more profitable to buy our bonds and pay the premium than it is to pay interest for a coming series of years, when those bonds are within the control of the Government at par. Therefore I favor this legislation.

A word or two has been said here as to a conspiracy against the protective system of the United States. I do not believe that any such conspiracy has ever existed. [Applause.] I do not believe, if there ever should exist any such conspiracy, that it has the slightest chance of success. [Renewed applause.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. RANDALL. I would like a minute or two more.

Mr. MILLS. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. RANDALL. Therefore, I beg to assure all those who may have an affrighted fancy that, in so far as American industries are concerned, they are not to-day in any danger. [Applause.] On the other hand, I do not want to traverse with my friend from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] what has been done in the past in this regard, except to utter the statement that in those particulars I have no regrets. [Applause.] But I am the more reconciled in this connection when I hear from the gentleman from Kentucky, prompted by a more composed spirit, in my judgment, than has ever heretofore existed, that there is hope, and that there is to be an effort, in the direction of united action; and I say there will be fruition to that hope if fairness and justice all round are conceded by a united party on this side. [Applause.]

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman, the House by special order is to begin at 3 o'clock to-day memorial exercises with reference to one of our deceased members. As we shall not have time to dispose of this measure to-day, I move that the committee now rise.

Several MEMBERS. "Vote!" "Vote!"

Mr. MILLS. We can not vote now; there are amendments to be considered.

The question being taken on the motion that the committee rise, there were, on a division (demanded by Mr. BAYNE)—ayes 158, noes 22.

So the motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker pro tempore having resumed the chair, Mr. BURROWS reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 5034) to provide for the purchase of United States bonds by the Secretary of the Treasury, had come to no resolution thereon.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MILLS. I ask unanimous consent that the special order set for to-day at 3 o'clock be deferred for thirty minutes, so that we may go back into the Committee of the Whole and dispose of the pending bill.

Mr. BAYNE. If it is understood that there will be opportunity to offer amendments, I have no objection.

Mr. SPRINGER. Certainly; that is the object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If the House should go into Committee of the Whole the right to offer amendments will necessarily exist.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I understand that the addresses which are to be delivered under the special order will occupy until 5 o'clock. I hope, therefore, that under the circumstances the motion of the gentleman from Texas will not prevail.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There is no limit as to the hour of adjournment. Is there objection to the proposition made by the gentleman from Texas? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

PURCHASE OF BONDS BY THE TREASURY DEPARTMENT.

Mr. MILLS. I now move that the House again resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole (Mr. BURROWS in the chair), and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 5034) to provide for the purchase of United States bonds by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. MILLS. I propose to yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER], and after that I will ask the House to proceed with the consideration of this bill under the five-minute rule.

Mr. HOOKER. Mr. Chairman, with the indulgence of the Committee of the Whole, I desire to say a few words in response especially to what fell from my friend from Ohio [Mr. MCKINLEY] in reference to the recommendation made by the President for the passage of a measure like this. The power which it is here proposed to give to a single officer of the Government is a very extraordinary one. It was heretofore exercised under the laws as they stood upon the statute-book from 1869, with a limitation upon the power of the Secretary of the Treasury; and the law remained in this condition, as I understand, until the passage of the act of March 3, 1881, which, as has been remarked by the gentleman from Ohio, is almost in totidem verbis the measure now proposed by the Committee on Ways and Means. The law as it stood in 1869 will be found embodied in section 3693 of the Revised Statutes in these words:

> The faith of the United States is solemnly pledged to the payment in coin or its equivalent of all the obligations of the United States not bearing interest, known as United States notes, and of all the interest-bearing obligations of the United States, except in cases where the law authorizing the issue of any such obligation has expressly provided that the same may be paid in lawful money or other currency than gold and silver. But none of the interest-bearing obligations not already due shall be redeemed or paid before maturity, unless at such time United States notes are convertible into coin at the option of the holder, or unless at such time bonds of the United States bearing a lower rate of interest than the bonds to be redeemed can be sold at par in coin. The faith of the United States is also solemnly pledged to make provisions at the earliest practicable period for the redemption of the United States notes in coin.

Section 2 of the act of March 3, 1881, provided—

> That the Secretary of the Treasury may at any time apply the surplus money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, or so much thereof as he may consider proper, to the purchase or redemption of United States bonds: Provided, That the bonds so purchased or redeemed shall constitute no part of the sinking fund, but shall be canceled.

This law of March 3, 1881, was, as remarked by President Cleveland in his recent annual message to Congress, a provision attached to an appropriation bill; and I think every gentleman who has read this message will concur in the declaration of the President that some doubt might reasonably be entertained whether this provision, embodied in an appropriation act, was designed to be a general statute, clothing a single officer of the Government with this extraordinary and formidable power.

It will be remembered, Mr. Chairman, that when the act of 1869 was passed, and when the action of Secretaries of the Treasury under former administrations was taken, we had outstanding bonds subject to call, bearing interest at the rate of 3 and 4½ per cent., and this power of the Secretary of the Treasury was then exercised in reference to bonds which had matured and become payable. Therefore there was foundation for the apprehension in the mind of the President that the exercise of this power by the present Secretary of the Treasury might involve a proceeding not authorized by law. Hence, in order that the Secretary of the Treasury might be endowed distinctly with the requisite power by an act of Congress, the President in his message, while expressing the disinclination which every one must share that this officer should be clothed with this extraordinary power, did express the desire that if the Secretary is to step into the markets of the world and buy bonds of the Government at the extraordinary premium which they now bear, he should be clothed with specific authority by a distinct measure of legislation which would leave no doubt of the opinion of Congress in reference to the proper policy on this subject. The language of the President, so far from being subject to animadversion, was but the expression of an opinion, wisely and safely guarded, that the financial affairs of the Government as conducted through the Treasury Department should be divorced from the business interests of citizens, and that those interests should not be accustomed to look for the relief of financial distress to the distribution of funds collected by the Government from tax-payers.

I submit therefore that every line and letter in the President's message on this question was well studied and well expressed, and must commend itself to all gentlemen who look upon this question without the bias of partisan views. The President said:

During the six months prior to June 30, 1887, the surplus revenue had grown so large by repeated accumulations, and it was feared the withdrawal of this great sum of money needed by the people would so affect the business of the country, that the sum of $79,864,100 of such surplus was applied to the payment of the principal and interest of the 3 per cent. bonds still outstanding, and which were then payable at the option of the Government. The precarious condition of financial affairs among the people still needing relief, immediately after the 30th day of June, 1887, the remainder of the 3 per cent. bonds then outstanding, amounting with principal and interest to the sum of $18,877,500, were called in and applied to the sinking-fund contribution for the current fiscal year.

The President then adverts to the fact that even this had not given entire relief to the financial condition of the country, and on page 5 of the message he continues:

In the present state of legislation the only pretense of any existing executive power to restore, at this time, any part of our surplus revenues to the people by its expenditure, consists in the supposition that the Secretary of the Treasury may enter the market and purchase the bonds of the Government not yet due, at a rate of premium to be agreed upon. The only provision of law from which such a power could be derived is found in an appropriation bill passed a number of years ago; and it is subject to the suspicion that it was intended as temporary and limited in its application, instead of conferring a continuing discretion and authority. No condition ought to exist which would justify the grant of power to a single official, upon his judgment of its necessity, to withhold from or release to the business of the people, in an unusual manner, money held in the Treasury, and thus affect, at his will, the financial situation of the country; and if it is deemed wise to lodge in the Secretary of the Treasury the authority in the present juncture to purchase bonds, it should be plainly vested and provided as far as possible with such checks and limitations as will define this official's right and discretion, and at the same time relieve him from undue responsibility.

Mr. Chairman, in view of the fact that the act of 1869 limited the power of the Secretary of the Treasury to the purchase of bonds at par, and in view of the further fact that the clause in the appropriation bill of March 3, 1881, authorized the Secretary to purchase at a time when bonds could be purchased at par, the President might well entertain a doubt as to whether Congress intended to authorize the Secretary to pay a premium on such purchase.

To purchase at par is one thing. That was clearly authorized. To purchase and pay large premiums on the bonds is quite another thing; and the authority to exercise this power might well be questioned by a wise, cautious, and prudent Executive.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I hope when the bill to which reference has been made by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] is reported to this House, we shall thereby be able to meet all our pledges and obligations to the people in reducing taxation, and in distributing the surplus revenue in the Treasury among the people. I hope then that we shall have no longer any necessity for using any doubtful power, or any power which the President may consider to be doubtful. I trust we shall not find it necessary to empower any Secretary of the Treasury, to whatever party he may belong, to interfere with the financial relations of the people. Taxes taken from the people should be placed in the Treasury to be used in the economical administration of the Government.

Now, I sympathize with every utterance of the President in this regard, and as this surplus has accumulated, as it has been taken from the pockets of the people, as it has been placed in the Treasury by the tyrannous system of taxation, as it is not needed by the necessities of the Government, I agree with the committee making this report that the Secretary of the Treasury should be clothed with this power to use this surplus for this specific purpose, and for this specific purpose only. And if I had the power I would limit its exercise to the period when the national debt has been paid. [Applause.]

Mr. MILLS. I move, by unanimous consent, all general debate be closed.

Mr. BAYNE. All general debate.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

Mr. McKINLEY. It is understood by unanimous consent, I believe, that the letter of Secretary Fairchild shall appear in the RECORD.

Mr. MILLS. You will get the letter.

Mr. McKINLEY. Yes, I will get the letter.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I ask consent to insert some tables with my remarks.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. McCREARY. I move to amend by adding to the bill the following:

The Clerk read as follows:

The bonds so purchased or redeemed shall constitute no part of the sinking fund, but shall be canceled by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. MILLS. I see no objection to that amendment.

Mr. McKINLEY. It is in the present law.

Mr. BOUTELLE. There is no objection to it.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BAYNE. I move the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

That all laws and parts of laws which impose any internal-revenue tax upon snuff, smoking and manufactured tobacco of every description, and upon cigars, cigarettes, and cheroots in all forms, made of tobacco or any substitute therefor, and upon dealers or peddlers therein, or manufacturers thereof of every description, shall be repealed and cease to be in force on and after the 1st day of October, 1888; it being the declared purpose of this act to repeal all forms of internal-revenue taxation upon tobacco of every description on and after the day aforesaid. And all laws now in force whereby farmers and producers of tobacco are restricted in the sale, manufacture, disposition, and dealing in the same shall be repealed on and after the 1st day of October, 1888.

SEC. 2. That on all original and unbroken factory packages of smoking and manufactured tobacco and snuff, cigars, cheroots, and cigarettes, held by manufacturers or dealers at the time such repeal shall go into effect, upon which the tax has been paid, there shall be allowed a drawback or rebate of the full amount of the repeal; but the same shall not apply in any case where the claim has not been presented within ninety days following the date when such repeal shall take effect. It shall be the duty of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, to adopt such rules and regulations and to prescribe and furnish such blanks and forms as may be necessary to carry this section into effect.

SEC. 3. That there shall be, and is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, so much money as shall be necessary to repay the rebate provided for under the preceding section of this act.

Mr. MILLS. I make the point of order on that amendment.

Mr. REED. I hope the gentleman will not, for if adopted it will deplete the surplus quite materially.

Mr. MILLS. I make the point of order on the amendment.

Mr. REED. I hope the gentleman will permit that to pass by unanimous consent. There is no objection on this side. [Laughter.]

Mr. RANDALL. It will be passed. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. What is the gentleman's point of order?

Mr. MILLS. My point of order is that the amendment is not germane to the pending proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. BAYNE. I do. In the first place the bill under consideration relates to the Treasury Department and the management of that Department, and in the second place the object of the bill is to reduce the surplus now in the Treasury, and to prevent its accumulation hereafter.

My friend from Ohio on my right here compliments me, I understand, by saying that that statement is as clear as a bell. [Laughter.]

Now, the proposition I offer as an amendment to the bill will prevent the surplus from accumulating in the Treasury hereafter by reducing taxation to the extent of $30,000,000, or some two and a half millions of dollars per month; and inasmuch as the whole subject relates to the Treasury Department, and inasmuch as the object of this bill is to prevent an accumulation in the Treasury hereafter, as well as to dispose of the surplus already accumulated, I claim that the amendment is strictly germane to the bill, and is in order.

The CHAIRMAN. This measure, in the judgment of the Chair, relates entirely to the method of disposing of the surplus now in the Treasury, or which may hereafter be accumulated therein, and does not relate at all to the subject of taxation, to which the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Pennsylvania is wholly directed. The Chair therefore holds that the amendment is not germane, and sustains the point of order made by the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. MILLS. I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill to the House with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker pro tempore having resumed the chair, Mr. BURROWS reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 5034) to provide for the purchase of United States bonds by the Secretary of the Treasury, had directed him to report the same to the House with an amendment, and, as so amended, with the recommendation that the bill do pass.

Mr. MILLS. I demand the previous question upon the amendment and the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The previous question was ordered, under the operation of which the amendment was adopted, the bill as amended ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MILLS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

GOODS PRODUCED BY CONVICT LABOR.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 7902) requiring all goods produced wholly or in part by convict labor to be plainly marked "convict-made;" which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Labor, and ordered to be printed.

PORT OF LINCOLN, NEBR.

Mr. McSHANE, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 7903) to extend the provisions of the act of Congress of June 10, 1880, entitled "An act to amend the statutes in relation to the immediate transportation of dutiable goods, and for other purposes," to the port of Lincoln, in the State of Nebraska; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

POSTAL CRIMES.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to discharge the House Calendar from the bill (H. R. 7052) relating to postal crimes and amendatory of the statutes therein mentioned, and put the same upon its passage. This will occupy but a few moments.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill will be read subject to objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 13 of an act approved March 3, 1879, entitled "An act making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes," be, and the same is hereby, so amended as to read as follows:

"SEC. 13. That any person who shall submit, or cause to be submitted to any postmaster or to the Post-Office Department or any officer of the postal service any false evidence, relative to the character of any publication, for the purpose of securing the admission thereof at the second-class rate for transportation in the mails, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and for every such offense, upon conviction thereof, shall be punished by a fine of not less than $100 nor more than $500."

SEC. 2. That any person who shall, with intent to defraud, falsely forge or counterfeit the signature of any postmaster, assistant postmaster, chief clerk, or clerk upon or to any money-order or postal-note, or blank therefor provided or issued by or under the direction of the Post-Office Department of the United States, or of any foreign country, and payable in the United States, or any material signature or indorsement thereon, or any material signature to any receipt or certificate of identification thereon; any person who shall falsely alter, or cause or procure to be falsely altered in any material respect, or knowingly aid or assist in falsely so altering any such money-order or postal-note; any person who shall, with intent to defraud, pass, utter, or publish any such forged or altered money-order or postal-note knowing any material signature or indorsement thereon to be false, forged, or counterfeited, or any material alteration therein to have been falsely made; any postmaster, assistant postmaster, or clerk employed in any post-office or branch post-office who shall issue any money-order or postal-note, without having previously received or paid the full amount of money payable therefor, with the purpose of fraudulently obtaining or receiving, or fraudulently enabling any other person, either directly or indirectly, to obtain or receive from the United States, or any officer or agent thereof, the sum of money specified in such money-order or postal-note; any person who, with intent to defraud the United States, transmits, or presents to, or causes or procures to be transmitted to or presented to any officer, or at any office of the Government of the United States, any money-order or postal-note, knowing the same to contain any forged or counterfeited signature to the same or to any material indorsement, receipt, or certificate thereon, or material alteration therein unlawfully made, or to have been unlawfully issued without previous payment of the amount required to be paid upon such issue, shall, upon conviction, be punishable by fine of not more that $5,000, or by imprisonment at hard labor for not less than one year and not more than five years.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. DINGLEY. Will the gentleman from Missouri state what changes are provided by this bill?

Mr. DOCKERY. The act making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the year ending June 30, 1880, provides as follows:

That any person who shall submit, or cause to be submitted, for transportation in the mails, any false evidence to the postmaster relative to the character of his publication, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, upon conviction thereof in any court of competent jurisdiction, shall for every such offense be punished by a fine of not less than one hundred nor more than five hundred dollars.

I think the language of the report itself will best explain to the gentleman the changes made by this bill. It is as follows:

The amendment to this section corrects verbal inaccuracies and makes manifest the true intent and meaning of the statute. It will be seen at a glance that the words "for transportation in the mails," in their present connection, do not express the intention of Congress, and that the real offense which this statute was designed to punish is not in fact punishable under it.

The false evidence is not submitted "for transportation in the mails," but is submitted to obtain the transportation in the mails for the publication concerning which the application is made. The amendment broadens the statute to meet the case of false evidence submitted to the Department, or to any officer detailed to investigate the application, as well as to the postmaster. It is believed that it will give vitality to the law, which is now, by reason of its phraseology, wholly inoperative.

The second section of the bill is intended to meet a difficulty encountered in prosecutions under section 5463, Revised Statutes, as amended by act of January 3, 1887, 24 Stats., 355, and as so amended constitutes section 1437 of the Postal Laws and Regulations of 1887, as follows:

"Any person who shall, with intent to defraud, falsely make, forge, counterfeit, engrave, or print, or cause or procure to be falsely made, forged, counterfeited, engraved, or printed, or willingly aid or assist in falsely making, forging, counterfeiting, engraving, or printing, any order in imitation of, or purporting to be, a money-order or postal-note issued by or under the direction of the Post-Office Department of the United States, or of any foreign country, and payable in the United States, or any material signature or indorsement thereon, or any material signature upon any receipt or certificate of identification thereon; any person who shall falsely alter, or cause or procure to be falsely altered, or willingly aid or assist in falsely altering any such money-order or postal-note; any person who shall, with intent to defraud, pass, utter, or publish, or attempt to pass, utter, or publish, as true, any such false, forged, counterfeited, or altered money-order or postal-note, knowing the same, or any signature or indorsement thereon, to be false, forged, counterfeited, or altered, shall be punishable by a fine of not more than $5,000, or by imprisonment at hard labor for not less than two years and not more than five years."

Many of the United States attorneys are of opinion that the forgery to a signature upon a genuine money-order or postal-note blank, or any alteration to a genuine money-order or postal-note are not indictable under the present statute, as it only relates to the forging, counterfeiting, engraving, or printing of orders in imitation of or purporting to be money-orders or postal-notes. In other words, that the section is intended to punish the issuing of money-orders entirely bogus or counterfeit, and not the forgery of signatures upon orders or notes otherwise genuine officially issued. Hence, in several prosecutions for forging indorsements upon genuine orders, the proceedings have been brought in the State courts, as the United States attorneys advised that the present statute against the counterfeiting of this kind of paper did not meet the case. Section 2 of the bill is designed to remedy this defect, and prevent the fraudulent issue of money-orders and postal-notes by postmasters, their clerks, or any other person.

Mr. DINGLEY. What is the minimum penalty provided by the bill?

Mr. DOCKERY. A fine of not less than $100.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Would it not be better to strike out the minimum entirely?

Mr. DOCKERY. No; I think not. This is the unanimous report of the committee.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. DOCKERY moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

COLLECTOR AT ST. PAUL, MINN.

Mr. RICE. I ask unanimous consent to call up for present consideration the bill (H. R. 7546) to amend sections 2595 and 2596 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, and to provide a collector at the port of St. Paul, Minn., and for other purposes.

This is a local bill to which there can be no objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That sections 2595 and 2596 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 2595. That there shall be in the State of Minnesota two collection districts, as follows:

"First. The district of Minnesota: to comprise all the territory of the United States east of the western line of the State of Minnesota and west of the westerly line of the State of Wisconsin, except the waters and shores of Lake Superior and the rivers flowing into the same, in which St. Paul shall be the port of entry, and St. Vincent a subport of entry and delivery.

"Second. The district of Duluth: to comprise all the waters and shores of Lake Superior and the rivers connected therewith, within the State of Minnesota, in which Duluth shall be the port of entry and delivery, with the privilege of immediate transportation as defined by section 7 of the act of June 10, 1880, entitled 'An act to amend the statutes in relation to immediate transportation of dutiable goods, and for other purposes,' being chapter 190, volume 21, of the Statutes at Large.

"SEC. 2596. There shall be in the collection districts of the State of Minnesota the following officers:

"First. In the district of Minnesota, a collector, who shall reside at St. Paul and whose compensation shall be the same as that provided for the collectors named in section 2675 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, and a deputy collector, who shall reside at St. Vincent.

"Second. In the district of Duluth, a collector, who shall reside at Duluth."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. RICE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed, and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ANIMALS IMPORTED FOR BREEDING PURPOSES.

Mr. CASWELL. I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union from the consideration of a Senate bill, and that it be brought before the House for action at this time. I am sure there can be no objection to it.

The Clerk read the title of the bill, as follows:

A bill (S. 1564) for the relief of importers of animals for breeding purposes in certain cases.

The bill was read.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Is that a Senate bill?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Has it been before any committee of the House?

Mr. CASWELL. It has been considered by the Judiciary Committee, and that committee is unanimous in its favor.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. The time for the consideration of resolutions under the special order has come, and I object to the consideration of that bill.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. FISHER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found duly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker pro tempore signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 4911) to carry out the findings of the Court of Claims in the case of James H. Ayres; and

A bill (H. R. 2993) to authorize the Secretary of War to convey to the city of Austin, Tex., a tract of land in said city, for educational purposes.

THE LATE HON. SETH C. MOFFATT.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time has arrived for the special order to be taken up, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Ordered, That February 29, 1888, at 3 o'clock p. m., be set apart for the consideration of resolutions relating to the death of Hon. Seth C. Moffatt.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. Speaker, this hour, by common consent of the membership of the House, has been set apart for the purpose of paying tribute to the memory of our deceased colleague, Hon. Seth C. Moffatt. This high mark of respect will be appreciated by the people of his district, who, regardless of party affiliations, were personally attached to him, by the State which always delighted to honor him, and by his family, whose loss is irreparable.

It was not my good fortune to have known Mr. Moffatt long, having never met him until 1884; but I knew him long enough and well enough to know the manliness of his character and the sincerity of his friendship. I can not, therefore, forbear this tribute before I offer the resolutions which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the business of the House be suspended, that suitable honors may be paid to the memory of Hon. Seth C. Moffatt, late a Representative from the State of Michigan.

Resolved, That in the death of Mr. Moffatt the country has sustained the loss of a safe legislator, a patriotic citizen, and an able and faithful public servant.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect to his memory the House at the conclusion of these ceremonies shall adjourn.

Resolved, That the House communicate these resolutions to the Senate.

Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, it is not, sir, among the least of the glories of this Republic that here men can rise to eminence and power independently of the accident of birth. The only blue blood which is recognized among us is that which throbs from honest hearts to feed healthy brains, and the only success that men achieve in this country is a success founded upon what is within themselves.

It is the lot of most men who rise to high positions in this Republic to have been born of poor parentage and in early life to have known what it is to be hampered by the hard lines of poverty. These obstacles, which in any other nation would thwart and prevent the rise of nine out of ten, in a republic are what impel men to do those things that finally make a character that the world recognizes and respects.

Mr. Moffatt was one of these. He had no aids except those which God had given him. He had to hew his way to eminence and power by his innate industry and worth, and he achieved what few men do—success—while at the same time preserving in every relation of life the most perfect integrity.

If we look to see upon what foundation his character was built we will find at its base integrity. No man ever lived who was defrauded by Seth C. Moffatt. No man ever lived who carried away from his presence a feeling that he had been wronged. No man could ever lay at his door corruption. He stood pre-eminently upon moral principles in all his dealings with his fellow-men. Combined with this was a gentleness like that of a woman.

He never, no matter by what excitement he might be surrounded, gave way to impetuosity or to anger. But with that gentleness was coupled a firmness that withstood all obstacles. With a frail body he had a spirit of indomitable courage, and that spirit never did and never would yield at any point where his convictions were the other way. Upon this foundation he built that manly character and achieved that reputation which will go along with the history of the great State of which he was such an important and beloved citizen.

How suddenly the summons came to him! On that afternoon when he left this Hall, whoever else might have walked with him, in the corridor he was joined by the sweet Angel of Death, who locked arms and walked beside him until his spirit beheld "the land that is afar off," and saw "the King in his beauty." When those mortal eyes became oblivious to the scenes about him, when those mortal ears were stopped, the spirit still lingered in that frail tenement of clay. Where it was wandering then I know not, but I know that he had a faith that was sufficient for that hour which comes to each. I have no doubt that although the earthly tenement was unable to make any sign, the spirit was active in contemplating those wonderful scenes where it now is, and as it waited it could say:

And so, beside the silent sea
I wait the muffled oar,
No harm can ever come to me
On ocean or on shore.
I know not where His islands lift
Their fronded palms in air,
I only know I can not drift
Beyond His love and care.

And so this spirit with which we were so familiar went out from among us, never to return. How grand is the thought, how consoling is it to men who do think, that a spirit thus coming from God goes back to Him, there to increase in glory and power as long as the ages of eternity shall roll! He died young in years; but, sir, while it is true that "our time is a very shadow that passeth away," it is also true that "honorable age is not that which standeth in length of time nor that is measured by numbers of years, but wisdom is the gray hair unto men, and an unspotted life is old age."

The great work laid upon his two-score years
Is done, and well done. If we drop our tears
We mourn no blighted hope nor broken plan
With him whose life stands rounded and approved
In the full growth and stature of a man.

Mr. WADE. Mr. Speaker, my acquaintance with Mr. Moffatt began at the opening of the first session of the Forty-ninth Congress. Chance in drawing seats placed me by his side, and during the latter part of that session we jointly occupied a suite of rooms, and for months were as intimately associated as two members of a common family.

Thus situated I had every opportunity to study his character, to know its strength and weakness, and while I do not say he was without faults, I do say that he came as near filling my idea of the true man as any I had ever known. He was ambitious only to serve his constituents faithfully, strong in his affections and convictions, clear in judgment, fertile in expedient, courageous in action, ready in conclusion, honest and just in dealings, generous to a fault, and unselfish and devoted in his friendship.

It is no wonder, then, sir, possessing as he did all these ennobling traits of mind and heart, that he drew around him warm and devoted friends, was successful in his profession, and honored by his fellow-citizens.

Commencing life with no aid save that of a clear head and willing hands, he soon occupied a prominent position in his profession and had laid the foundation for a substantial fortune.

It has been said that some men achieve honors, others have them thrust upon them. In his case honors were thrust upon him. He filled many important offices in his State, was speaker of its house of representatives, was twice elected a member of this House, yet never sought an office. But I shall not speak of his history and acts before he came to Congress.

As a member of this House he was prompt in attendance, at all times thoroughly acquainted with its business, and was perhaps the best informed man in the rules and parliamentary usages governing it of any of its members whose term of service was no longer than his. His quick discernment, ready comprehension, and retentive memory, together with the ability to bring the full strength of his mind and all of his information to bear on a given subject, peculiarly fitted him for a parliamentarian.

The measure of a member's usefulness, and this is especially true of a new one, is determined by the bills he succeeds in passing directly benefiting the constituency he represents. Measuring Seth C. Moffatt by this standard, it would prove him the most useful member Michigan ever sent to this House. Before he came to Congress his district had been represented by men of commanding ability, men who had earned a national reputation, yet when we contrast what they did for the district with what he did we find that he accomplished more in one Congress than they did in many.

Had the river and harbor bill become a law by the signature of the President, the works which would have been constructed under it for the benefit and protection of the shipping interest of our Great Lakes would have been monuments to his energy, industry, and legislative ability, which would have stood for all time, and his grateful constituency, looking upon them, would have said, "Well done, good and faithful servant."

I do not know, Mr. Speaker, that there is a supernatural or other influence which comes to us and gives notice that the time has almost come when we will lay down life's burdens, and all the ties binding us to earth will be severed. But I have heard it said that when those who, possessing a bright hope of a glorious immortality, were just passing under the shadow of the clouds of the valley of death, their feet just touching the waters of the dark river, they would appear to be under an influence not earthly, would speak of scenes most wonderful in beautiful language, and while they thus talked the air would seem filled with the grand harmony of that song sung by the angels and spirits of the just when a redeemed soul enters the gates of the crystal city.

But I do know, Mr. Speaker, that on the last night which our dead colleague spent on earth when conscious, when there was no sound in the room in which we were audible to me, but perhaps to him the fluttering of the wings of the Angel of Death, he talked to me as he had never done before. I wish now, because of his death which came so suddenly that his wife and children were not present, that the power might be given me to turn back the wheels of time to that evening, or that I might have the power to reproduce the scene and enable his wife to hear what he said of her. If she could hear that conversation, she would learn that of all things earthly she was the dearest to him. Could she have heard him say as he did to me, "Oh, how I wish my wife were here, that she might take my hand in hers, that I might feel the influence of her presence, for I know I could then sleep," she would have known that he wished for her more than all others. And I would have her listen to other words expressive of tender love and holy affection that I might here repeat did I not believe them too holy for even this occasion. Could I do this, Mr. Speaker, I am sure Mrs. Moffatt would go away thanking God for the love of her husband, and that the words she had heard spoken would be a well-spring of joy each day of the journey of life which she now treads alone.

I would bring the children to this scene and have them hear him speak of his affection for and trust in them, and I am sure they would go away inspired by a determination never to do anything to bring discredit upon their father's honored name.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that sorrow is the deepest, most felt, which is not spoken; and were it not the custom to speak on such occasions as this, I should have remained silent. The sentence which I have spoken, the words I have used, neither convey my idea of the worth nor express my sorrow for the loss which I in common with others have sustained in the death of Seth Moffatt. To his family I extend my warmest sympathy, to his State my regrets, to the members of the House my sorrow, and for myself I would say that a bright friendship has gone out of my life forever and its place I do not hope to see filled.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Mr. Speaker, once more we have halted for a little hour in the great march of events to decorate a new-made grave. Once more the shadow of a dark wing falls across our pathway, and a sudden chill admonishes us of the nearness of an unseen presence.

Death is as universal as life itself. It is the one fact that must come to all mortality. Soon or late, to every one of us will come the relentless messenger with the stern command, "Come!" and we shall all "leave our mirth and our employments and shall come." No pleadings of engagements here, no excuse of unpreparedness, no influence of the powerful or prayers of the loving can stay the stern decree or buy off the grim executioner.

We go out into the busy, thronging street, into the swarming haunts of men, into the crowded gatherings of youth and beauty or of the strength and splendor of manhood and womanhood, and life seems to press in full and swelling tides everywhere. The flashing eye, the mantling cheek, the eloquent lip, the rounded and exuberant form, all tell of an overflowing vitality, an all-pervading life. And yet by the side of each one lurks even now the unperceived shadow, too impalpable as yet to be discerned, but just as real and as certain as the presence of life. Yet when the shadow reveals itself, when the clearly foreseen and inevitable hour comes, it comes with the surprise and shock of a mystery and a calamity.

This was the shock that came to me when, on the morning of the 22d of December last, as I walked up the avenue to this Capitol, I saw the flag over the House ascend until it stopped at half-mast, and then, seemingly refusing to go to the peak, hung drooping and sorrow-laden midway on the staff; and, as I looked, it came to me with an apprehension as if a voice had spoken it, that Seth C. Moffatt was dead.

And such proved to be the fact.

Already the intelligence had sped on lightning wings to his distant home, and to meet his broken-hearted wife, as she was hastening to his side, and out into the wide country from ocean to ocean.

How various was the meaning of that message to those to whom it came!

To the stranger to whom it was only the mention of a name; to the people of his State, which he had served in many public capacities; to his constituents, who had learned to look to him as a trusted leader and Representative; to his neighbors who had witnessed his growth and success with pride, and to the family whose life was bound in closest ties with his own.

The spotless snows of Northern Michigan lie thick and silent now above the snowy forehead and the folded hands.

The frost-laden winds of Grand Traverse Bay, on whose picturesque shores he spent all his manhood years, now sweep through the branches of the sighing pines that stand as stately sentries above his grave, while we, his colleagues, gather here about the seat he lately occupied, to pay our tribute of respect to his life and memory.

Seth C. Moffatt was born at Battle Creek, in the State of Michigan, August 10, 1841. He died in the city of Washington, December 22, 1887, and was buried at Traverse City, Mich., December 26, 1887.

Embraced within the parentheses of these dates was a life of earnest endeavor, of unsullied honor, of usefulness to his community, State, and nation, and crowned with a large measure of the appreciation of his fellow-citizens.

Born to that best estate of our American society, the intelligent middle class, he was neither fettered by the unhappy limitations of actual poverty, nor enervated by the seductions of wealth, which might relieve him of the beneficent necessity for effort and honorable work.

His boyhood was that of the average Michigan boy of forty years ago, when none were rich, when work was honorable to all, and indolence was discreditable to any. His early tuition was that of the public common school, that great equalizer of American citizenship, in which he made such good progress that in the fall of 1858 he removed with his parents to Colon, in St. Joseph County, where for two years he engaged in teaching, at the same time preparing himself for college. In 1860 he entered the literary department of the University of Michigan, at Ann Arbor. I was then in my last undergraduate year in that institution, and I still remember well the slight, smooth-faced boy who then came to us.

One peculiar physical characteristic, which must have struck all who ever became acquainted with him, impressed me the first time I ever met him: it was the extreme smallness of his hand. It was as slender and flexible as a girl's.

The acquaintance then begun was never long interrupted until his death, and by the appointment of this House it was my melancholy duty to stand by his open grave when under the wintery skies of his northern home he was laid in his last resting place.

I know not what changed his original purpose, whether it was pecuniary considerations or an impatience to engage in the actual work of life, but, for whatever cause, at the end of one year he abandoned the literary course and entered the law school of the University of Michigan, from which he graduated in 1863. During his last year in the law school he was a part of the time employed in the office of Hon. Thomas M. Cooley, then dean of the faculty and justice of the supreme court of Michigan, and now the distinguished jurist and chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

After his graduation and admission to the bar he entered the law office of Hon. Byron D. Ball, of Grand Rapids, Mich., (afterward attorney-general of the State), where he remained until the spring of 1864, when he removed to Lyons, in Ionia County, where he began the practice of the law. As fate would have it, to this same county of Ionia I came also, in the summer of 1866, to engage in the practice of the law, having in the mean time served three years in the Army and graduated from the same Michigan law school, and so once more our paths ran together.

In the fall of 1866 Mr. Moffatt was a candidate before the Republican county convention for the nomination of circuit-court commissioner, but was beaten by a young one-armed soldier lately home from the war and also commencing the practice of the law, and now a justice of the supreme court of Michigan, Hon. A. Benton Morse. Shortly before this time the county of Leelanaw had been organized. The county was new and they were short of material for prosecuting attorney. Mr. Moffatt was urged to come to Leelanaw County. He did so; and while yet only constructively a resident of that county he was nominated for the office of prosecuting attorney and duly elected, an office he continued to hold for four years. At the same time he was appointed deputy collector of customs at Northport.

Again, in 1867, it happened that I followed Mr. Moffatt's movement northward and put out my sign in the infant city of Manistee, so that once more Mr. Moffatt and myself were brought into the same legislative, senatorial, and Congressional districts.

In the autumn of 1870, at a senatorial convention held in my own town, and over which I had the honor to preside, Mr. Moffatt was nominated for State senator. He was elected and served for two years with marked ability, and at the end of that time was appointed by the governor, Hon. John J. Bagley, a member of the constitutional commission to revise the constitution of the State. He acquitted himself as an efficient member of that body.

Meanwhile the Legislature, of which he was a member, had made a new Congressional apportionment of the State, creating the new ninth district, embracing all the district recently represented by Mr. Moffatt (the Eleventh) and also all the counties embraced in the present Ninth district excepting Muskegon. In August, 1872, the first Republican convention met in the new district to nominate a candidate for Congress. The district was strongly Republican, and a nomination was considered equivalent to an election. There were four candidates before the convention, among whom Mr. Moffatt stood second in point of strength. The leading candidate was Hon. Hiram A. Burt, of Marquette. and after Mr. Moffatt came Hon. Jay A. Hubbell, of Houghton, while Hon. D. L. Filer had the two votes of Mason County. After balloting all the afternoon a combination was formed among the minor candidates. An arrangement was made that all the anti-Burt votes should be thrown to Mr. Moffatt three times, unless a nomination was sooner reached; then all should be thrown to Mr. Hubbell in like manner for three times, unless a nomination were made before that number of ballots. Each delegate had half a vote, and on the third ballot Mr. Moffatt lacked only one half a vote of sufficient to nominate him. Then the combination cast their votes for Mr. Hubbell, and on the second ballot he was nominated, having secured the vote of the one delegate necessary. Mr. Hubbell was elected and continued the Representative of that district for ten years and until the present apportionment was made. Thus, for the want of a single vote, Mr. Moffatt was delayed twelve years in his entry upon Congressional life.

In 1874 Mr. Moffatt was appointed register of the United States land office at Traverse City, Mich., and in consequence of this appointment he removed to that place, where he continued to reside until his death.

He continued to hold the office of register until the land office was removed to Reed City, in 1878. In the latter year he was elected prosecuting attorney for Grand Traverse County, and in 1880 he was elected a representative in the legislature, and on the convening of that body he was selected as speaker of the house. The session had hardly more than fairly commenced when he was stricken down with typhoid fever, which kept him from the duties of his office during most of the session and at one time threatened a fatal termination.

During his incumbency of the speakership a new Congressional apportionment was made, and Mr. Moffatt's county, with three other small counties, was detached from the "Lower Peninsula," and with the "Upper Peninsula" constituted the new Eleventh district.

In 1882 Mr. Moffatt's friends, after a lapse of ten years, again pressed him for the Congressional nomination, but the Hon. Edward Breitung, of Marquette County, was the successful candidate. Mr. Breitung's failing health constrained him to decline a renomination, and Mr. Moffatt, in 1884, succeeded in securing the nomination which had eluded him by so narrow a margin in 1872. He was elected by a majority of more than 7,000, and in 1886 he was renominated without opposition and re-elected to the Fiftieth Congress.

Of his career in this House it is unnecessary for me to speak. He was a quiet and unostentatious member, never conspicuous, and yet he brought about results without appearing to exert himself. He took a profound interest in the commercial development of his district and was ever on the alert for any measure that promised well for the upbuilding of the great interests intrusted to his care. At the time of his unexpected and lamented death he was planning large things for the improvement of the great northern water-way from the new Northwest to the sea.

Mr. Speaker, I shall not prolong this brief sketch of his life by any attempt to analyze his character. I shall leave that for others, with only a few words. One of the great secrets of his success, perhaps the chief one, was that he was a friendly man. He was essentially of the people. He never put any distance between him and the humblest or least cultured man. He met and greeted all in a friendly way. The same traits served him as a lawyer. He made friends with juries and gained their confidence, and he impressed a conviction of his sincerity upon the court. In the political campaign he made votes not so much by speeches or by public meetings as by mingling freely among the people, not with an assumed cordiality, but with a genuine and natural sincerity and real friendliness. He managed campaigns in such a quiet way that he did not appear to manage at all. He was an excellent judge of human nature. He knew upon whom to depend and where not to put his trust, and he was rarely mistaken in his judgments. He had a genuine love for politics and public life. Few were the State conventions of his party after he came to manhood at which the familiar face and form of Seth Moffatt were not seen. He had that most desirable faculty for a man in public life, an almost intuitive memory of men and names. There was no man of any prominence in either party in his State that he did not know and meet upon friendly terms. No man in the State was more familiar with its political history than Mr. Moffatt. He knew all about the men who had been the leaders in the State from the beginning. He was in no sense an idealist nor an extremist, but he was a man of strong convictions, and his political allegiance was held with a firm and unfaltering devotion.

Such were some of his more noticeable characteristics.

He was of a genuine American type, developed by our system of social equality and our political system of equal rights in government. He came from the people; he was emphatically of the people; and he was most highly esteemed by them. No one who witnessed the universal mourning of the community when he was borne to his rest could doubt for a moment that he held a place very near to the hearts of the people among whom he dwelt.

It was Christmas morning, and all the earth was covered with a deep mantle of beautiful fresh-fallen snow which was still falling in large feathery flakes, when the funeral train swept out from the somber pine and hemlock woods of Northern Michigan, on to the very shore of Grand Traverse Bay, and the long journey of more than a thousand miles from this capital to his lakeside home was completed.

It seemed almost as though the whole community had come out on that still Sabbath morning to show their respect for their neighbor and friend. Hundreds of hardy workingmen with the business men and professional men stood with uncovered heads in the fast-falling snow as the casket was borne from the station to the unpretentious home from which, just one month before, he had gone out full of high purpose and strong hope.

On the following morning, accompanied by a great concourse of his fellow-citizens of all classes and conditions, we bore him to his final resting-place. As we stood by the open grave, the clouds, which had hung heavy and snow-laden through the morning, parted, and a burst of brilliant sunshine out of a blue sky flooded the scene and gilded the white earth with a beauty and splendor indescribable.

There we left him.

Mr. Speaker, the task which was assigned to us is done. We have borne all that was mortal of our late colleague and friend from this capital, away beyond the mountains, across "the beautiful river," through great commonwealths, to the State that gave him birth, and to which he devoted his life; past the spot where he was born, on the banks of the Kalamazoo; past that modern Athens where he was educated; past the beautiful "valley city" where he commenced his professional life; past the capital where he presided as speaker and discharged the duties of a senator; past all that stands for the work and worry, for the stress and struggle of life, to that blessed spot, so redolent of all that is sweetest and most sacred, of all that is serenest and most restful—his home. In the midst of the great State where he was born and to which he was ever so loyal, among the constituents he represented so ably and faithfully, surrounded by the neighbors and friends who loved him and mourn him, and the dear ones who cherish his memory as their most sacred treasure, we have left him to his quiet sleep.

May he rest in peace.

Mr. FORD. Mr. Speaker, it is with deep sorrow that I rise to pay tribute to the memory of my friend and colleague, Seth C. Moffatt. I had known him a long time, and while we differed upon political questions, our relations were of the most friendly and cordial nature. And I am thankful that in all our intercourse no word or action ever occurred to interrupt the kindly feeling that existed between us.

Mr. Moffatt was a native of the State whose district he represented, being born in Battle Creek, Mich., in 1841. He received a common-school education, and graduated at the law school of the Michigan University. Many times had the people reposed confidence in him. He was a member of the State senate in 1871–'72, a member of the constitutional commission of 1873, and was speaker of the Michigan house of representatives in 1881–'82. He was elected to the Forty-ninth and Fiftieth Congresses. He was a thorough and consistent Republican. At the time of his death he was the leading apostle of that political faith in the district which he represented. But while he was a devotee of the principles of the Republican party, some of his most intimate associates were Democrats. He was a man who made friends wherever he went, and who had the respect of all who knew him, regardless of party.

It is customary to speak well of those who have passed away. The old Latin maxim, "De mortuis nil nisi bonum," is an excellent one. But in respect to my dead colleague it is not necessary to invoke the application of this maxim, because if we speak truthfully we can say of him nothing but good. He was a sterling man, true to the core, liberal and magnanimous, with a pure and stainless character. He possessed the qualities of activity and perseverance in a remarkable degree. He was an indefatigable worker in any matter on which he was bent, and no member of this House was more industrious in behalf of the interests of his constituents than he. He was of a kind disposition, open-hearted and generous, modest and gentle as a woman.

One would make a mistake to think that under his quiet and unostentatious manner there did not lie any resolution and firmness. He was peculiarly possessed of those qualities. I remember an instance which well illustrates this. When he was a member of the Legislature in 1881–'82 he was elected speaker of the house. Some time after serving at the regular session he was taken ill. His indisposition was protracted so long that it was feared he would not recover. Right at this time, while he lay upon a sick bed, an extra session of the Legislature was called by the governor. Thinking that he could not live to assume the duties of speaker, many members of the Legislature commenced to discuss the question as to who should be his successor. Just prior to the opening of the session this subject was considerably agitated. But Mr. Moffatt, with indomitable energy, arose from his sick bed, and when the hour for the convening of the Legislature arrived, to the surprise of a great many, he appeared in the speaker's chair, weak and pale, but very determined, and took the gavel and called the house to order.

When the committee of this House which accompanied his remains to their last resting place arrived at his home the scenes were touching indeed, and I can fully indorse all that has been said in that respect by the gentleman [Mr. CUTCHEON] who preceded me. I never saw more genuine sorrow manifested than at Traverse City when we laid him away. The town was draped in mourning, business was wholly suspended, and a sadness pervaded the entire community. Few men in Northern Michigan will be missed more than he who so lately was with us full of life, hope, and ambition. As I stand here it seems but yesterday that I sat in this very Hall in friendly converse with him, and to-day he is clasped in the bosom of the earth and the winter snow of the north rests upon his grave.

As a lawyer he was industrious and successful, as a citizen he was high-minded and exemplary, and as a friend he was staunch and true. By his death this House has been deprived of one of its most worthy and able members, his district of a faithful and conscientious Representative, and his family have suffered the irreparable loss of a kind and indulgent father, a tender and loving husband.

He was but forty-six years of age; an age at which most men are considered to be in the prime of life. It is inexpressibly sad, that one so beloved, at such an age, right in the zenith of his career, when such a fate was least expected, when his dear wife and children were a thousand miles away, should be so ruthlessly taken by the Angel of Death. But sooner or later it comes to us all.

> The glories of our mortal state
> Are shadows, not substantial things;
> There is no armor against fate;
> Death lays his icy hand on kings-
> Scepter and crown
> Must tumble down,
> And in the dust be equal made
> With the poor sickle, scythe, and spade.

His hopes and aspirations are crushsd, his family are heart-broken; but he has gone where no pain, no sorrow, no anguish exists. He has been taken to that unknown hereafter from whence no traveler returns. That there is a hereafter every man, it seems to me, must believe. I can not conceive how any one with human instincts can think otherwise.

If there exists a person who honestly believes that when his eyes are closed in death nothing remains, then I say such a person is to be pitied. Can it be that at the conclusion of man's existence on this planet for a comparatively infinitesimal period of time, can it be, I say, that then, when dust is rendered into dust, all is ended? No.

> When matter and mind are perished and lost,
> And all that we see into chaos is tossed,
> From nothing to nothing we pass out alone,
> Like a flash or an echo, unknown, unknown.

No word comes back; we know not what awaits us. Still, I have something here, in my innermost soul, which tells me that this life is not the end; that beyond all this we have a wider, a higher, a nobler destiny. There lies in the human breast a something which says, "This is not all." What an encouraging hope, what a divine thing it is for this world, this belief in a future existence! How could the widow and the fatherless children of our dead colleague bear up under their unutterable grief if the hope of a future reunion beyond the dark valley were taken away? To teach any other belief is unnatural—yes, it is monstrous.

Mr. Speaker, from all earthly scenes my associate is gone forever. But he will not be forgotten. His friends will ever keep his memory fresh in their hearts. And when the glorious summer comes, and the grass grows green, and the beautiful Michigan roses blossom on his grave, although hushed will be his lips in death, yet the tender blades and the perfume of the flowers will speak of him, and to those who knew him best will seem to say, "Beneath here sleeps one who was kind, and noble, and true."

Mr. OATES. Mr. Speaker, I can not permit this melancholy occasion to pass without uttering a brief tribute to the memory of my departed friend. I met Mr. Moffatt for the first time in the Forty-ninth Congress. I had barely a passing acquaintance with him until we were associated as members of the Special Telephone Investigating Committee.

Charges had been made assailing the honor of a member of the Cabinet and a number of other high officials, and published to the world in many of the leading newspapers. In the opinion of the House of Representatives these charges required an investigation, which was ordered, and a committee consisting of four Republican and five Democratic members was appointed for the performance of that duty. They were confronted by many difficulties, and sat for nearly four months, the greater part of the time during the sessions of the House. A large volume of thirteen hundred pages of close print attests the work done by the committee. And although the report died upon the Calendar with the expiration of that Congress, the evidence taken silenced the press and satisfied the country.

Nearly every day of the sessions of the committee controversies arose upon questions involved or incidental to the investigation we were instructed to make, which, owing to their supposed political significance, provoked unfriendly comment and sharp retort, not always unmixed with some warmth of feeling, in which nearly all at times participated; but Mr. Moffatt, in strong contrast, was ever calm, amiable, and genial on these occasions. True to his convictions, his party, and associates, he was never harsh, extreme, nor unfair, but always respectful, considerate, and tolerant of the opinions of those with whom he differed. He was never radical, but truly conservative in his methods. He acted upon the wisdom of the proverb, "A soft answer turneth away wrath, but grievous words stir up anger." In debate he was earnest, perspicuous, and sensible, rather than eloquent. By his urbane, pacific, and respectful demeanor he won the esteem and confidence of all of his associates. To estimate him at his true merit required an intimate personal acquaintance, and with those who enjoyed that he steadily grew in all the virtues which adorn true manhood.

Of the nine members of the committee of which I have spoken, he and myself were the only ones elected to the present Congress. When it assembled last December I met him apparently in good health. He greeted me with that hearty cordiality which was a part of his nature and which made him so estimable and popular. His prospects for a long and useful life were then apparently much greater than those of most of us who have survived him. But, alas! he has met that fate which is our common heritage, and passed over the river to repose peacefully in the shade of the trees upon the other side.

Mr. O'DONNELL. Mr. Speaker, upon the assembling of the Forty-ninth Congress, for the first time two members, to whom I shall allude, took their places in this Chamber. The elder came from the State of Louisiana, the younger from Michigan. They were much alike; in features there was some resemblance; both had held important trusts from their fellow-citizens. By nature they were reticent and retiring, but men of firm convictions. They were strangers when they came; in the drawing of seats they chose places in close proximity. The peculiar qualities and endowments of each attracted one to the other, and in a short time a warm friendship grew up. In a few months one was seized with an illness which in a brief time proved fatal. In his apartments, alone, while battling with death, the life blood welled up and he was found lying dead, his face to the morning stars, no longer ignorant of their solemn mysteries in his silent sleep. The survivor of the dual friendship grieved for his own and the country's loss. He served his term, and so well did he demean himself that he was again commissioned to represent his people. At the convening of this Congress he chose his accustomed place and entered upon his duties. In a few days a slight indisposition assailed him, and the feeble frame yielded to the malady which poisoned the vital current, and, like his friend of two years agone, he suddenly crossed the line that divides time from eternity—was taken from earth to the land where the soul wears its mantle of glory. They are released from earthly labor, and, like the soldiers of Mahomet, were speech a gift of the dead, would say, "In Paradise we shall rest."

Mr. Speaker, when the first of these was called away his colleagues invited me to pay a tribute to his memory. To this I acceded, and to-day, at these memorial services, in obedience to the wishes of his associates and to keep a promise to the dead—a pledge lightly exacted and more lightly given, but here solemnly redeemed—I attempt to weave a chaplet to the worth of my friend and late co-worker.

Seth C. Moffatt, whose loss we deplore to-day, was born in the year 1841 at Battle Creek, Mich., a pleasant city in the district which I have the honor to represent. In that place his youth was spent. Among its generous people he tarried a few years, where he laid the foundation of an education afterward finished at Michigan's institute of learning—a university which is the pride of the inhabitants of the Peninsular State and is honored in every civilized land. Possessed of this capital, he removed to the then sparsely-settled portion of Northern Michigan, which was his abiding place until he came to the national capital in December.

It is not easy to comprehened why this quiet man, in the midst of his preparations to join his loved ones in the far away but dear home, where he would observe with them the festival which commemorates the coming of One who brought "peace on earth and good will to man," should, in the presence of the very well and spring of life, be gathered to the cold company of death. His friends had thought his illness would be brief, and that he would soon resume his place. I remember, oh! so vividly, visiting him while he lay ill. Although he had endured but a few hours of suffering, it had left its imprint of agony. Even then he was upon the threshold of eternity, but we who stood about him did not realize it. He struggled for the breath which is life. He was released from the anguish of the disease that was sapping life, for kind nature had administered the anæsthetic of physical insensibility. As we two friends stood there the lips murmured "broken words through the closing door, which opened to one world and shut out another." The sister of suffering humanity who was the gentle minister of relief, who watched without weariness, told us he would be better on the morrow.

The morrow came; the sun gilded dome and marble palace; the morning, with eyes full of pitying sunshine, looked upon the face of the dead. The unseen messenger had waited round that couch until the hour when the disturbed chemistries of failing life could no longer resist, and as a new day came bore him away. He was better on the morrow, for as he was freed from the ligaments of the body he gazed upon the life to come as it is seen by the eyes of immortality. Wonderful mystery of life! Even greater mystery of death! How little indeed humanity knows of either. As we spoke to the leaden ears and told him of his dear ones journeying on the way to him we thought him returning. How meager our knowledge. The slender chord that moors us to time had been slackened and even then he was drifting away to that still, strange land, the shadowy home of the shadows. The nation's flag that floats above us was that day the ensign of woe, announcing his death to many before unaware of his illness.

Mr. Moffatt had aided in and was part of the development of his portion of our loved Michigan. He was animated by the same affection for that grand Commonwealth, his native State, that inspires all within its borders. The people of the section where he dwelt were not long in recognizing his merits. For over twenty-one years he served them in places of trust and responsibility, in positions executive, legislative, and financial, always to his credit and to their satisfaction.

At last they called him to the high and honorable position of their representative in the Congress of the United States, where he served them faithfully for nearly three years. He was not wont to mingle in the strifes and forensic contests on this floor, but this modest and retiring man attended to those other equally important duties pertaining to service here. He served his country and constituency with fidelity. It was his fortune to represent a district where but little was required in attending to personal interests, and he had the opportunity so longed for by laborers in this House to become familiar with the great questions of the hour and study the wants and needs of all the people. He was not burdened with duties which are so irksome to many, the accumulation of which makes membership here a pillory rather than a post of honor. With a well-trained mind and application the future gave promise of greater usefulness. He believed the great high road of human welfare to lie along the old highway of steadfast well-doing, and in all his duties remembered the wise words of Solomon as an admonition: "Whatever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might." All his work is ended, for he was, to our vision, too early summoned to the other world by death. Wherefore? This is humanity's same, eternally renewed question of our lives.

I have sketched imperfectly the life and services of Seth C. Moffatt. As a citizen he met all the requirements of the highest citizenship. That is much indeed, and when so filled the title "American citizen" is a proud one. As a husband and father he was tender, considerate, and loving. Indeed, I do not think this gentleman ever caused a tear save when he died. There was not a shred of littleness about him. He was always gratified at the success of any of his colleagues, and it is but justice to say, Mr. Speaker, the same kindly feeling permeates those from our State who survive him. It was not his intention to stay here long. His design was to serve his people as best he could for the remainder of the term allotted him, then go back to his home by the great lake, permitting others to bear the burden we all so gladly assume. He would turn aside from the thorny road of political life and devote himself to the profession he loved so well. He was happy in this resolve, and hope wove its roses in the blue web of the future. This decision he held to the end, and its contemplation sustained him. The thought of home was the last joy of memory that followed him to the boundaries of life.

This useful life is over, and its reward cometh. Occasions like this bring to mind the Persian prayer, first uttered in the youth of the world, which comes down to us through the centuries with all its beauty of truth, "Purity and glory are sown for them that are pure and upright in heart." In uttering the words of praise for this life whose heart throbbings are stilled, we speak them as reverently as we would lay our hands upon the face of the dead.

The people among whom his manhood's years were passed evinced their deep regret at his departure from the world. They who trusted and honored him in the past lament the termination of a career with which their hopes were so closely interwoven, and to his family they with gentle hand and tender hearts would have lifted aside the veil of sorrow. They and we mournfully realize—

Nothing is our own; we hold our pleasures
First a little while, ere they are fled.
One by one life robs us of our treasures;
Nothing is our own except our dead.

Mr. WHITING, of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I esteem it a very great privilege and a pleasure to add in a very few words my testimony on this occasion. For it was my good fortune also to have a personal acquaintance with the one in whose memory to-day this House lays aside its restless, urgent business and devotes most profitably more than a passing thought to the life and character of one whom to know was a pleasure and a benefit, and in whose death this House lost one of its most upright, consistent, and honored members.

Free from selfish ambition or personal resentment, he was loved by every true man with whom he was thrown in contact. Genial and unpretending, he had a face and a manner which inspired confidence and secured good will. Rising above the politician, he was a statesman above reproach from partisan or opponent—a pride to the State of Michigan, one whom in life she "delighted to honor" and in death she will not forget. Seth C. Moffatt builded well his own monument, for the memory and the influences of his pure life will live when the chiselings of marble will have been effaced and the emblems of mortal greatness have decayed.

Mr. OSBORNE. Mr. Speaker, Seth C. Moffatt was my friend. I can not therefore allow the hour to pass without paying a tribute of respect to his memory. He was held in very high esteem by all gentlemen who were acquainted with him and who knew his excellent qualities of head and heart. He was one of those pleasant, warm-hearted men whose company is always appreciated and whose deportment is commended by the best society.

Born in Michigan, educated in her schools and at her university, he there laid the foundations for a life of useful and intelligent action that brought distinction to himself and reflected honor on his native land. Indeed, his career is one to which his friends can point with just pride and from which may be drawn many practical lessons worthy of emulation by the youth of our land. I think his life is a striking example of the great work energy may accomplish when directed by an earnest devotion to truth and honor.

Few men have been more successful in producing solid results from life's battle than was he. Starting from an unpretending station, in the brief period of forty-five years he became a distinguished member of the bar, a leading and influential State senator, speaker of the lower house of the Michigan Legislature, a member of the constitutional commission, delegate to the Republican national convention, a Representative from Michigan in the Forty-ninth and in the Fiftieth Congress of the United States.

Chosen and rechosen, always indorsed by the people in his official stations; placed in the balance and never found wanting.

In truth, here was a man whose early death is most deeply to be deplored.

A quiet, modest man, who had a soul radiant with heavenly light. Full of generous, sympathetic impulses for his fellow-man, I do not wonder that his people mourned and refused to be comforted when they realized that he had passed away, and had gone out from amongst them forever.

I would pour oil and wine into the broken and contrite hearts of his bereaved family.

They have sustained a loss no words I may sound can alleviate. His taking off was so unexpected; so near the Christmas season, when the heart is aglow with affection, it did not seem possible that one so noble and true, and useful in the affairs of life, could be then selected as a target for death.

It is touchingly sad to those who knew him, to remember how anxiously he was looking forward to the time when his dear wife and children would join him at Washington for the winter. Only the day before he was confined to his bed he dwelt upon their coming with unusual warmth of feeling, and rejoiced exceedingly when he thought the day of their coming could not be deferred much longer.

Alas! how weak and insignificant is man. In the midst of our greatest prosperity we are traveling nearest the brink of destruction. When just ready to take a sip from the cup of earthly sweetness, it is turned to bitter gall.

His wife and children came; but how changed the conditions! The wife a widow and the children fatherless.

The affectionate husband, the kind and loving parent cold in death. The tenderest affections of the human heart are suddenly scalded by the bitterest tears of bereavement.

Human sympathy in such a presence is best shown in silence, bowing in humble submission to Him who sitteth on the circle of eternity, and ruleth the universe.

Men build cities and endow institutions of charity and die remembered for their beneficence. They erect the splendid mausoleum pointing towards heaven and cover it all over with the story of their deeds, and die hoping that the world will not willingly forget their names and memory. They stamp the record of their deeds upon their age in letters of enduring brass that generations yet unborn may rise up and call them great.

By the grave of Seth C. Moffatt I would plant a rose and a honeysuckle. I would bedew them with my tears. His name is written by the hand of affection in the hearts of the people, and there his memory is inscribed and will remain, a lasting tribute to truth and honor, a noble example of an upright life and an evidence of the blessings of our free institutions.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, Seth C. Moffatt and I were friends. During his service in the Forty-ninth Congress we lived at the same hotel, were associates and companions, and were seat-mates in the Fiftieth Congress. There was no member of the House to whom I was more attached. He was an honest, candid, able, modest man, a lawyer by profession. Nature gave him an excellent legal mind, which, aided by industry and character, enabled him to rank with the first class in his profession. Members of this body rarely if ever do themselves justice as legislators in the first Congress of their service.

Mr. Moffatt was not an exception to this rule. Knowing his competency, his friends frequently urged him to take an active part in the debates of the House; he generally declined, saying he would quietly serve one term in Congress and be more active in the future in the event of his continued service. His attainments at the bar, legislative experience in his State, having served in the Michigan Legislature as speaker of the house of representatives, coupled with his sterling personal qualities and liberal culture, promised a career in the House honorable to himself and useful to the country. His was a character that grew on those with whom he came in contact. He was of that class of men who can be depended upon to do their part, to answer the drafts drawn upon them. It is such men in public and private life that make our civilization both stable and progressive.

During Mr. Moffatt's last illness I saw him frequently. He suffered greatly, yet was cheerful and hopeful. Neither he nor his friends apprehended that his disease was to prove fatal. He greatly desired to spend the approaching holidays at his home in Michigan with wife and children, neighbors and friends, insisting that he could make the journey in his then condition.

On Monday prior to his decease on Wednesday, he realized that his strength was not sufficient to warrant the journey. His last conscious act was the writing of telegrams to his wife and son that he could not be with them on Christmas, but hoped the family would be together at home and have as good a time as possible. We telegraphed his wife to come. She did not arrive until after his decease on Wednesday. He was spending an eternal holiday on the other shore.

Of the state for us all on the other side, we only know through faith and hope. To my mind the most reasonable hope as to the future is that each one will find a place according to his loves. I shall be content—ay, more, glad—if, when my time comes to cross to the unknown, I shall find a place in company with Seth C. Moffatt and such as he.

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Speaker, there are quite a number of the members of this House that knew more of Mr. Moffatt in his manhood than myself, but I doubt if any more keenly deplored his untimely death or had more occasion for such feeling. His father and my own were pioneer doctors in Michigan when it was a Territory and practically a wilderness, living but 12 miles apart, and he and I were born in the same county in the same year, and were classmates at the Michigan University, graduating in the same class from the law department of that institution. While there a strong friendship developed between us, and cordial and pleasant relations were always afterwards maintained. When I was elected a member of this House I instinctively turned towards him, not only as a friend but as an adviser and assistant, on account of his experience in the duties and details of business here.

After leaving Ann Arbor he settled in a part of Michigan distant from myself, and I soon left the State, so that I saw but little of him personally thereafter until meeting him here; but I always watched his course with interest and rejoiced at his successes in life. However, from so watching his course, from seeing him as I did, and from the universal testimony of all who knew him, I feel competent to correctly speak of him, and I know that he was in his manhood the natural outgrowth and development of his early promise. It has been well said, "The childhood shows the man, as morning shows the day." He was spotless in his character, and his integrity, probity, and honor were never questioned. In his profession and life he was eminently successful, and not by the mere glamour of brilliancy and transcendent genius, but rather by force of character, industry, integrity, studiousness, level-headed judgment, good habits, a determination to do his duty under all circumstances, and withal, a laudable but reasonable ambition.

These qualities, as is almost always the case, led to success in life and to an honorable position among men. At the very threshold of his career his ability as a lawyer and worth as a man were recognized, and he was elected prosecuting attorney, filling this important position for some ten years. Following this he was a State senator in Michigan, a member of its constitutional commission, register of the United States land office, and for two years was a member of the Michigan house of representatives, and during this time served as its speaker, receiving such just recognition from his party that when elected to this important and responsible position he was a new member of that body. In 1884 he was a delegate to the Republican national convention at Chicago, and in the same year was elected a member of this body and had so continued until his untimely death, which occurred in the vigor of his manhood and at a time when it is reasonable to suppose his usefulness had just commenced.

When his various positions of honor, trust, and responsibility are considered, and it is remembered that they were all filled with credit to himself and an eye single to the interests of those whom he represented, and when in connection with this his life as a whole is viewed, it may well be said that his death was a public calamity as well as an inconsolable loss to his family and friends. It has, however, a bright side in the knowledge that the sum of his life and labors was a heritage of honor to his family and a shining mark well worth the emulation of all men.

Whoe'er amidst the sons
Of reason, valor, liberty, and virtue
Displays distinguished merit, is a noble
Of Nature's own creating.

Mr. CHIPMAN. I regret that my first utterance in this House is on an occasion of sadness, yet I am proud, very proud, that my native State has been represented here by a man entirely worthy of the encomiums which have just been bestowed on Mr. Moffatt.

In this age of ribald criticism and irresponsible accusation it is a great pleasure to know that a good man has been here. He indulged in no vain babblement on this floor, no fierce shrieking to catch the ear of fame. He was true and honest, consistent, laborious, useful. What higher eulogy can be passed on any man? Useful, sir, above everything—a faithful, efficient representative of his people. I do not say that he has anchored his name in history. How many have done that in the past—how many will do it in the future?

So it is saying a great deal to say that he was honest, he was useful, and that he has laid down to pleasant slumbers. The decent respect of this occasion is honestly his. "The actions of the just smell sweet and blossom in the dust." And he, though he has passed from mortal ken, has left us the perfume of his charity and kindliness.

Let us hope that all is well with him beside the great lake and beneath the snow of his native State—the beneficent snow which ripens the glory of the golden grain and presages the prosperity of happy homes.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. Speaker, I esteem it a great honor to have been invited, on this sad occasion, to bring a single utterance of tender and loving tribute to the memory of our late associate, Seth C. Moffatt. Others, who knew him longer and better than I, have spoken of his distinguished public services and of his superior qualities of head and heart. I knew him only from the opening of the Forty-ninth Congress, but his gentle manners and quiet, unobtrusive life attracted my attention, and led me to have a warm feeling of friendship for him. Our acquaintance began almost on the first day of the session, and many pleasant hours were spent in talking of the great possibilities and wonderful progress of the district he represented. Mackinac Island, that spot of almost unequaled beauty, around which cluster delightful traditions and historic memories, the marvelous lakes and rivers of the great State of Michigan, the famous "Soo," with its grand canal, unrivaled water-power, and magnificent commerce—all these served as topics for interesting conversation between us. His love for his State was sublime. On that theme he talked con amore, while on all general subjects he was a man of remarkable intelligence, wide culture, and great breadth of view. Withal, he was an amiable, honorable, conscientious gentleman.

His life was gentle, and the elements
So mixed in him that Nature might stand up
And say to all the world, "This was a man!"

When the Fiftieth Congress met no warmer grasp was given my hand than by our late friend and associate. Then came the intelligence of his serious illness, and my heart, accustomed in a professional way to the anxieties and sorrows of the sick chamber, went out in deepest sympathy to this good man, who, away from home and friends and family, was being ministered to by the hands of strangers. Death came soon, and the Christmas season, so full of joy and gladness to most of earth, brought unutterable grief to those who knew him best and loved him most. The devoted wife, on her mission of love, found when she reached Washington that death had preceded her, and then she realized, as every stricken and bleeding heart realizes, that—

Along the roadside where we pass bloom few
Gay plants of heart's-ease, more of saddening rue.

Mr. Speaker, I need not say more. Mine is but the tribute of a word. Our friend has gone never to return. He has escaped from the contentions and antagonisms of this world, and entered upon a better and higher life. Let us, in honoring his memory as we do to-day, strive to emulate his virtues, and to so live that it may be said of us as we would say of him:

The good, they drop around us one by one,
Like stars when morning breaks; though lost to sight,
Around us are they still, in heaven's own light,
Building their mansions in the purer zone
Of the invisible; when round are thrown
Shadows of sorrow, still serenely bright
To faith they gleam; and blest be sorrow's night,
That brings the o'erarching heavens in silence down,
A mantle set with orbs unearthly fair!
They dwell, divinely dwell, in memory,
While life's sun declining bids us for the night prepare,
That we, with urns of light, and our task done,
May stand with them at last in lot unchangeable.

Mr. CONGER. Mr. Speaker, this House has to-day put away the bustle and tumult of ordinary work to pay a merited tribute of respect and love to the memory of one of our number who has been recently called to a higher life, a nobler work. It is for us a sad yet grateful service. Sad because the places that have known our brother here shall know him no more forever; grateful for the associations hallowed by his presence; sad because of his untimely death, yet grateful for the sweet memories of his eventful life.

Seth C. Moffatt was one of the first acquaintances I made in the Forty-ninth Congress; our first hand-shake was under such circumstances as made us friends, and I have ever counted that day blessed which gave me such a friend. I therefore gladly bring my laurel branch for the chaplet that we on this occasion shall weave for the memories and the victories of our departed colleague.

Others have most eloquently told the story of his distinguished life, of his birth, his boyhood, and manhood, all in his own loved Michigan, and of his splendid service to his native State. I only knew him here, in this national capital. But I knew him thoroughly; knew him as faithful and industrious Representative, as able and conscientious legislator, as genial companion, as trusted friend, as devoted husband, as loving father, and as a Christian, manly man.

There is no place in the world where the measure of a man is more quickly and accurately taken than upon this floor. This measurement placed Seth Moffatt high up on the roll. His words were few, but his sentences were golden; his judgment was safe, and his convictions unfaltering.

As a friend, he was ever kind and true; as a husband, he was tender and thoughtful; as a father, most loving and indulgent. His family circle was truly and in the strictest sense a home. He gave every spare moment from his professional and public duties to his family, and was idolized by every member of it. His children and

His loving wife beguiled him more than Fame's emblazoned zeal,
And one sweet note of tenderness than Triumph's loudest peal.

As a citizen he was of the highest type. He was a man of profound reverence, of unfaltering faith in God and implicit trust in His divine promises, and a firm believer in the immortality of the soul. He also believed that moral character was salvation; that in this and all worlds men should and would be happy or miserable according to their deserts. He saw the revelations of God in the laws and forces of the universe and in the thoughts and loves of mankind.

He was a religious evolutionist, basing his hope for the future upon the record of the past, beholding a constant development in the spiritual as in the physical world, and hoping for an outcome of creation which would justify the infinite wisdom, the infinite love, and the infinite fatherhood of the Creator. His was a religion broad enough, deep enough, and high enough to take in all mankind. He believed and very often said that—

There's a wideness in God's mercy,
Like the wideness of the sea;
There's a kindness in His justice
Which is more than liberty.

And his daily walk was ever consistent with and continually emphasized his religious faith.

Our friend was indeed small of stature, but in the kindness of his great heart, in the depth and strength of his friendship, in the tenderness and trustfulness of his love, in his devotion to duty, in the incomparable power and unstinted reverence of his intellect, in his faith that over all is God blessed and blessing forever, he was a large, complete, well-rounded man; a splended type of those men who have given strength and glory to the past and promise security and perpetuity for the future of our Republic.

What constitutes a state?
Not high-raised battlement or labored mound,
Thick wall, or moated gate;
Not cities proud, with spires and turrets crowned,
Not bays and broad-armed ports,
Where, laughing at the storm, proud navies ride;
Nor starred and spangled courts,
Where low-browed Baseness wafts perfume to pride.
No! Men, high-minded men,
With powers as far above dull brutes endued,
In forest, brake, or den,
As beasts excel cold rocks and brambles rude;
Men who their duties know,
But know their rights, and, knowing, dare maintain!
These constitute a state.

Of just such men was Seth C. Moffatt. On the 22d day of December last he died; but as sure as God's sun shines he lives again. His life was a noble mission. Our heritage is his blessed memory. Let us emulate his virtues and profit by his example.

The question being then taken on the resolutions submitted by Mr. BURROWS, they were adopted unanimously; and in accordance with the concluding resolution the House (at 5 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m.) adjourned.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, March 1, 1888.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

CREDENTIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented the credentials of JAMES F. WILSON, elected by the Legislature of Iowa a Senator from that State for the term of six years beginning March 4, 1889; which were read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Owing to some complication arising from the state of the law in Iowa and the statute of the United States of 1866, governing the election of United States Senators, there are two certificates of election. The other will not be read, but both will be filed.

Mr. GEORGE presented the credentials of EDWARD C. WALTHALL, chosen by the Legislature of Mississippi a Senator from that State for the term of six years beginning March 4, 1889; which were read, and ordered to be filed.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a letter from the Secretary of War submitting an estimate for an appropriation of $30,000 required to construct barracks at David's Island, in New York Harbor; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a letter from the Attorney-General submitting estimates of deficiencies in appropriations for expenses of Territorial courts in Utah; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, in compliance with section 194 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, a list embracing the names of the clerks and other persons employed in the several bureaus of his Department during the calendar year ending December 31, 1887, and showing the time each was employed and the sum paid to each; which was read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. What disposition shall be made of this communication?

Mr. SHERMAN. Let it be laid on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will lie on the table and be printed, if there be no objection.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not think it is necessary to print the accompanying papers. Such tables are not usually printed.

Mr. HALE. I think it may be well to have them in print; they may be wanted. I move that the communication, with the accompanying papers, be referred to the Committee on Printing.

The motion was agreed to.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

He also presented a petition of the executive committee of the Grand Lodge of Good Templars of Vermont, representing 4,000 citizens, praying for the appointment of a national commission of inquiry on the liquor traffic and the submission to the people of a prohibitory amendment to the Constitution; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. HALE presented the petition of G. T. Hadlock and other citizens of Maine, praying that the salary of the keepers of the Life-Saving Service be increased to $1,000 a year, and that the pay of surfmen in the same service be raised to $75 a month; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. MITCHELL presented the petition of John McBean and other citizens of Oregon and Washington Territory, praying that John McBean be allotted 160 acres of land on the Umatilla Indian reservation; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. STOCKBRIDGE presented a petition of 23 ex-Union soldiers and sailors, citizens of Vernon, Mich.; a petition of 62 ex-Union soldiers and sailors, citizens of Corunna, Mich., and a petition of O. S. Smith and 111 other ex-Union soldiers and sailors, citizens of Michigan, praying for the passage of the per diem rated service-pension bill; which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. TURPIE presented a petition of ex-Union soldiers and sailors, citizens of Indiana, praying for the passage of the per diem rated service-pension bill; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. DAWES presented a petition of 117 citizens of the Second and Twelfth Congressional districts of Massachusetts, praying for prohibition in the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. BLAIR presented a petition of citizens of New Hampshire, praying for the enactment of legislation providing for the settlement by arbitration of differences arising between the United States and Great Britain; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. DAWES, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 37) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to make sale of certain lands of the Umatilla Indian reservation, in Oregon, to William S. Byers and others, and to issue patent therefor, reported it without amendment.

Mr. HAWLEY, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1371) for the relief of Alfred Hedberg, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. MITCHELL. I am instructed by the Committee on Claims to report a new bill as a substitute, with an accompanying report, for the bill (S. 608) for the relief of Robert Morrison and Laura E. Maddox, executor and executrix of Joseph H. Maddox, deceased, and others.

The bill (S. 2201) for the relief of Laura E. Maddox, widow and executrix, and Robert Morrison, executor of Joseph H. Maddox, deceased, was read twice by its title; and the bill (S. 608) for the relief of Robert Morrison and Laura E. Maddox, executor and executrix of Joseph H. Maddox, deceased, and others, was indefinitely postponed.

Mr. MITCHELL, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 440) for the relief of Samuel Noble, moved its indefinite postponement, which was agreed to; and he submitted a report accompanied by a bill (S. 2202) for the relief of Samuel Noble; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. HOAR. I suppose when a substitute bill is reported it is entered on the Journal as an original bill, is it not?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair would state that under the rules a substitute is not recognized. A bill can be reported with an amendment, or a new bill can be reported and the bill referred to the committee indefinitely postponed, but there is no substitute recognized by the rules.

Mr. MITCHELL. The bills I have just reported are in the nature of substitutes.

ALIEN OWNERSHIP OF REAL ESTATE.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am directed by the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4756) to amend an act to restrict the ownership of real estate in the Territories to American citizens, etc., approved March 3, 1887, to report it favorably without amendment.

As this bill is almost in exactly the same words and to the same effect as a Senate bill which passed a few days ago, I ask that the Senate now act upon the House bill, as it has already passed a similar bill.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to so amend the act of March 3, 1887, that it shall not apply to or operate in the District of Columbia so far as relates to the ownership of legations or the ownership of residences by representatives of foreign governments or attachés thereof.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PRINTING OF TARIFF DOCUMENTS.

Mr. MANDERSON. I am directed by the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred a resolution submitted by the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. FAULKNER] February 13, 1888, to provide for the printing of certain tariff documents, to report it back and recommend its adoption with an amendment. I ask for its present consideration.

By unanimous consent, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution; which was read, as follows:

Resolved, That there be printed for the use of the Senate, to be paid for out of the contingent fund, 8,000 copies of Treasury Department Document No. 937, embracing "the tariff on imports into the United States, and the free-list, as contained in the act of March 3, 1883; also, the Hawaiian reciprocity treaty, and extracts from the navigation and oleomargarine acts."

The amendments reported by the Committee on Printing were, in line 1, to strike out the words "to be paid for out of the contingent fund, eight thousand," and insert "seven thousand;" so as to read:

Resolved, That there be printed for the use of the Senate 7,000 copies of Treasury Department Document No. 937, embracing "the tariff on imports into the United States, and the free-list as contained in the act of March 3, 1883; also, the Hawaiian reciprocity treaty, and extracts from the navigation and oleomargarine acts."

Mr. MANDERSON. That brings it within the limit of the law and under the cost of $500.

Mr. TELLER. What is the document?

Mr. MANDERSON. The document is a reprint of the tariff acts now existing.

The amendments were agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

CATTLE AND DAIRY FARMING.

Mr. MANDERSON. A Senate resolution for the printing of additional copies of Executive Document No. 51, first session Forty-ninth Congress, on the subject of cattle and dairy farming, came with amendments from the House of Representatives and was referred to the Committee on Printing. I move that the Senate non-concur in the amendments of the House of Representatives and ask for a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution passed by the Senate will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the concurrent resolution passed by the Senate February 6, 1888, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed 7,000 additional copies of Executive Document No. 51, first session Forty-ninth Congress, on the subject of cattle and dairy farming, 2,000 copies for the use of the Senate, 4,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 1,000 copies for the Department of State.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The action of the House of Representatives will now be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, February 14, 1888.

Resolved, That the House concur in the foregoing resolution of the Senate, with amendments as follows:

In line 2 strike out the word "seven" and insert the word "twenty-five."

In line 5 strike out the word "two" and insert the word "eight."

In line 5 strike out the word "four" and insert the word "sixteen."

At the end of the resolution add the following:

"And that there is appropriated out of the Treasury the sum of $62,500, or so much thereof as may be necessary, out of any moneys not otherwise appropriated, to pay for the same, and said work shall be bound in two volumes."

Change the resolution from a concurrent to a joint resolution by striking out of lines 1 and 2 the following words: "Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring)," and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled;" and give the resolution the following title: "Joint resolution to print Executive Document No. 51, first session of the Forty-ninth Congress, on the subject of cattle and dairy farming."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska moves that the Senate non-concur in the amendments proposed by the House of Representatives, and ask for a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. MANDERSON, Mr. HAWLEY, and Mr. GORMAN were appointed.

REPORT OF LIBRARIAN OF CONGRESS.

Mr. EVARTS. I am instructed by the Committee on the Library to present the annual report of the Librarian of Congress exhibiting the progress of the Library during the calendar year 1887, and I report a resolution which is in accord with what has been usually adopted for printing the Librarian's report. I ask for its present consideration.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the annual report of the Librarian of Congress be printed, and that 500 additional copies with covers be printed for the use of the Librarian.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. BATE introduced a bill (S. 2203) to increase the efficiency of the Signal Corps of the Army; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. REAGAN introduced a bill (S. 2204) for the relief of Albert Wood; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. FAULKNER introduced a bill (S. 2205) granting a pension to Rachel J. Gormley; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2206) granting a pension to David H. Lutman; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PALMER (by request) introduced a bill (S. 2207) for the relief of the holders of District of Columbia special assessment lien certificates, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. HAWLEY introduced a bill (S. 2208) to remove the charge of desertion from the record of Allen Powell; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2209) to increase the efficiency of the Inspector-General's Department; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. FARWELL introduced a bill (S. 2210) to revive the grade of General in the United States Army; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. EVARTS introduced a bill (S. 2211) granting a pension to John Curran; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, introduced a bill (S. 2212) granting a pension to Virginia Hively; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. MITCHELL introduced a bill (S. 2213) for the relief of John McBean, of Umatilla County, Oregon; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. HOAR introduced a bill (S. 2214) granting a pension to Calvin W. Smith; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. DAWES introduced a bill (S. 2216) for the erection of a fireproof workshop at the National Armory; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2217) to accept and ratify an agreement made with the confederated tribes and bands of Indians occupying the Yakama reservation, in the Territory of Washington, for the extinguishment of their title to so much of said reservation as is required for the use of the Northern Pacific Railroad, and to make the necessary appropriations for carrying out the same; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2218) to accept and ratify an agreement made by the Sisseton and Wahpeton bands of Sioux Indians, and to grant a right of way for the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul Railway through the Lake Traverse reservation in Dakota; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. TELLER (by request) introduced a bill (S. 2219) authorizing the purchase of condensed statements, with covers, of the Compendium of the Tenth Census; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. GEORGE introduced a bill (S. 2220) to correct an error in and to further amend "An act to authorize the Georgia Pacific Railroad Company to construct bridges across the Sunflower, Yazoo, and Tombigbee Rivers, in Mississippi;" which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. HISCOCK introduced a bill (S. 2221) for the relief of Seth Wheeler; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Patents.

AMENDMENT TO A BILL.

Mr. GEORGE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the urgent deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

EASTERN BRANCH BRIDGE.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I offer a resolution, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Whereas complaint is made of the delay in constructing the bridge across the Eastern Branch of the Potomac River, authorized by act of Congress approved February 25, 1887: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and hereby is, requested to inform the Senate what further action by Congress, if any, is necessary or expedient to expedite the construction of said bridge and best promote all the interests involved or affected by said proposed structure.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of this resolution?

Mr. HOAR. I do not object to the present consideration of the resolution, but it seems to me that it is introducing a new custom in our relations with the Departments to direct them to give their opinion as to proposed legislation. That function is confined by the Constitution to the President, and an order to the Secretary of War, or whatever is the Cabinet officer, to give his opinion as to what legislation is necessary or proper for Congress in a certain exigency is, in my judgment, improper.

Mr. MCPHERSON. If the Senator will suggest an amendment to the resolution, I will accept it.

Mr. HOAR. It seems to me if the Secretary of War were ordered to inform the Senate of the cause of the delay, that would be all that would be necessary or proper. I suggest to the Senator that he simply require the Secretary of War to inform the Senate of the cause of the delay.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Very well; let the resolution be amended by striking out the part to which the Senator from Massachusetts objects.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution as proposed to be modified by the Senator from New Jersey will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. Strike out the following words:

And best promote all the interests involved or affected by such proposed structure.

So as to read:

That the Secretary of War be, and hereby is, requested to inform the Senate what further action by Congress, if any, is necessary or expedient to expedite the construction of said bridge.

Mr. HARRIS. That does not quite answer the purpose. Let the inquiry be simply as to the cause of the delay.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will submit the resolution in any form desired by the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. HOAR. Let the Secretary of War be directed to inform the Senate of the cause of the delay. That will cover it.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Let it read:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and hereby is, requested to inform the Senate of the cause of the delay.

Mr. HOAR. I suggest the word "directed," instead of "requested."

Mr. MCPHERSON. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read as modified.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to modify the resolution so as to read:

That the Secretary of War be, and hereby is, directed to inform the Senate of the cause of the delay.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

STEAM-SHIP ATLANTA.

Mr. HAWLEY submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, directed to transmit to the Senate the several reports concerning the United States steam-ship Atlanta, made by Capt. F. M. Bunce to the Secretary of the Navy, dated July 16, 1887; to the Bureau of Ordnance the same date; to the Bureau of Construction the same date; to the Secretary of the Navy, dated October 21, 1887; also the report of the board (Captain Ramsay, president) to the Secretary of the Navy, dated July 26, 1887.

DUTIES ON SUGAR.

Mr. HOAR submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to communicate to the Senate all reports which have been made by special agents or other officials of the Treasury in regard to frauds and evasions of duties in imports of sugar in the port of New York within the past two years, and any maladministration in the custom-house at said port in regard thereto.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 5034) to provide for the purchase of United States bonds by the Secretary of the Treasury;

A bill (H. R. 7052) relating to postal crimes, and amendatory of the statutes therein mentioned; and

A bill (H. R. 7546) to amend sections 2595 and 2596 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, and to provide a collector at the port of St. Paul, Minn., and for other purposes.

DEATH OF HON. SETH C. MOFFATT.

The message also transmitted to the Senate the resolutions of the House of Representatives commemorative of the life and character of Hon. Seth C. Moffatt, late a Representative from the State of Michigan.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVAL.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had yesterday approved and signed the act (S. 1900) to carry into effect the international convention of the 14th of March, 1884, for the protection of submarine cables.

EXCLUSION OF CHINESE LABORERS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there are no further resolutions, concurrent or other, there are resolutions coming over from a former day, which the Chair will lay before the Senate in their order. The Chair understands that the resolution reported by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] from the Committee on Foreign Relations will be first in order. The resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution reported yesterday by Mr. SHERMAN, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate of the United States, That, in view of the difficulties and embarrassments that have attended the regulation of the immigration of Chinese laborers to the United States under the limitations of our treaties with China, the President of the United States be requested to negotiate a treaty with the Emperor of China containing a provision that no Chinese laborer shall enter the United States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Will the Senate agree to the resolution?

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, I favor the adoption of the resolution, not because I think there is any necessity for putting the Senate in action in the effort to hasten anything in the way of negotiation with China, but because it is an expression of opinion on the part of the Senate which I understand corresponds with the opinion and sentiment of the people of the Pacific coast and with an evident need now developed, through several years of painful experience, for the restrictions of the privileges of immigration by the Chinese into this country.

I concurred in the reporting of the resolution to the Senate, and I feel that it is due to the present Administration to say that I have information which I may consider as authentic that the Government is proceeding with all proper diligence for the purpose of negotiating a treaty with China which is expected practically to reach the result stated in the resolution.

The resolution of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART] was before the Committee on Foreign Relations, but the committee were not quite willing to accept it. I suppose that was reported back adversely, but the substance of it is embodied in the pending resolution, which I hope will be entirely satisfactory to all concerned, because this resolution goes to the pith of the whole subject. It goes to the proposition that it is the duty of the Government of the United States to conduct further negotiations with China to get out of our way those treaty restrictions which prevent us from legislating to prohibit Chinese laborers from immigrating to this country with a view to settlement or with a view to hospitality.

I do not believe that there is any absolute necessity for the passage of the resolution; yet I think it is very well that the Senate should express its opinion upon this question, if the opinion of the Senate concurs with that of the committee, because perhaps it will strengthen the hands of the Government in endeavoring to bring about an arrangement with China, which must be the eventual result of our dealing with the subject of Chinese immigration.

We have tried restrictions in almost every form that has been heretofore possible, and we have not succeeded in keeping out the Chinese laborer. It appears from all accounts that by one arrangement and another, and by the evasion of our laws, the body of Chinese immigration into the United States is increasing.

I have always opposed the immigration of Chinese to this country for the purposes of settlement. I think that it is contrary to the settled policy of the Government of the United States that the people of any of the Oriental nations should be either invited or permitted to come here in large masses for the purpose of mingling with those heretofore imported from Oriental countries, who have proved a fruitful source of controversy and trouble to the people of the United States ever since the first negro was set upon the shores of America.

I do not wish to see that body of Orientals increased, whether they come from the Chinese coast or from Hindostan, or where they come from. I think there ought to be some place in the United States where an American can feel at home, and there are not very many of them now.

I do not object to the immigration of good people from foreign countries who bring with them intelligence and means and capacity for improving society and cultivating the soil and developing our resources; but as to those men who come here for the mere purpose of living upon us and speculating upon the earnings of our fathers, earnings that have been harvested with blood as well as with money and toil, I object to distributing that out into the hands of any foreign countries, especially of the lower classes. I think it is time that we had engaged in making some reservations of our public domain and of the privileges and facilities and benefits of this liberal Government of ours for the people of the United States and their posterity. I therefore accord with any sentiment which looks in that direction.

The sentiment expressed in the resolution meets my hearty approval, and I only rose to say that in concurring in that resolution and in the report of it I did not in the slightest degree intend to criticise the Administration for being slow in its movement, for it is not slow; or of being indecisive, for it is not indecisive. The Administration, according to my opinion of its work, is doing all that can be reasonably expected, and in the best possible way, to bring about the results which the resolution contemplates.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, whatever differences there may have been in the Senate or in the country with regard to the restriction of Chinese immigration, the time has come when I believe the general sentiment of the people is that the law on the subject should be fairly enforced; that the Chinese laborer should be excluded from enjoying the benefits of our country, because he will not adapt himself to the civilization of our country. That feeling is most strongly expressed by Senators and Representatives from the Pacific coast, among whom the 100,000 or more Chinese in the country live, and they have expressed that opinion to the Committee on Foreign Relations so decidedly and unanimously, and supported by such potent reasons, that I believe every member of that committee is of the opinion that the object of the law to exclude the immigration of Chinese laborers should be effectively carried out.

Under the law as it now stands there are two classes of laborers who are still coming to this country from China. One is a class that left our country after November 17, 1880, and prior to June 6, 1882, after the adoption of the Chinese treaty and prior to the passage of the exclusion law, who under the law had been allowed to go out without certificates. The other class are those living now in the country who go abroad under certificates issued under existing laws. Some are now coming back, claiming the right, and they have the right, to come back into our country at any time at pleasure under the terms of "the most-favored-nation" clause. But the trouble is that thousands of Chinese laborers come into this country under the false pretense that they are the persons who are entitled to come and under certificates issued to persons who are entitled to come. It is impossible, according to the decisions of the courts and according to a letter which I now hold in my hand, to distinguish between them. Many cases have occurred, amounting to thousands of fresh Chinese laborers, that have been recently imported into this country under pretense that they were here before 1882, and the proof furnished was absolute and clear, so clear that the courts had to decide in their favor, and yet it was equally clear that the whole statements made, the proof furnished, and the certificates furnished were all false and fraudulent.

I hold in my hand a statement made by Judge Hoffman, of the United States district court in California, in which he makes these statements: that there are now five hundred cases pending, questions of identity as to the persons who have come over, and there will be in the next steamer, he says, probably as many more; and so the number of cases of persons claiming to have left this country more than six years ago and to be now entitled under the treaty to come back will be a thousand cases, blocking up the whole business of the courts of the United States on the Pacific coast.

There are, as I said, but two classes of persons who are entitled to come back to this country—those who left prior to 1882, and those who live here now and who go abroad armed with a certificate. Those certificates are forged in many cases, and all sorts of frauds are committed under them. Besides, a large number of Chinese laborers who are excluded by the terms of the treaty drift in through the Canadian border, which is almost an intangible line, or through the harbor of Victoria or Vancouver, or through the straits of Port Townsend to Seattle, Tacoma, and other points. There are constant controversies as to the persons entitled to come into this country, and that has led to a state of public opinion along the northern border which is perfectly irresistible, and has led to crime and in some cases to murder and outrage.

The Government of the United States is now called upon to pay, and it has been during the last year called upon to pay nearly $200,000 for wrongs of this kind—large sums of money for injuries done along the border.

It is utterly impossible for the courts to ascertain whether or not the Chinese entitled to come back again are the persons named and described in the treaty or the law. Therefore it is that, in the opinion of the committee, and I may say in the opinion of the Department of State and of the Treasury Department as well, the time has come when the exclusion must be absolute as to Chinese laborers coming into the United States, in order to prevent these frauds from being committed and in order to prevent our courts from being crowded with applications, many of which are admitted to be fraudulent, and our officers from being disturbed and their duties made difficult in the different departments, especially in the collector's office at San Francisco.

Therefore it is that the Committee on Foreign Relations concluded that it was better to pass a resolution of this kind in pretty strong language, with the proviso inserted, asking that a treaty be made now to absolutely exclude Chinese laborers from this country; in other words, to repeal the exceptions under the existing law. The resolution sent to us drawn by the Senator from Nevada contained an abrogation of the treaty. The Committee on Foreign Relations thought it was not wise to do that—that it was better to change the treaty in the ordinary mode, through the proper channel, the State Department. We understood that such a treaty is in negotiation, but not being rapidly advanced, and that there was no great difficulty in the way. We thought we would emphasize the opinion of the committee by the opinion of the Senate that the State Department should proceed as rapidly as possible to effect a new treaty to relieve us from the embarrassments in which we are now placed.

Pending this negotiation, because a treaty with China is a very difficult and generally a long drawn out process, we have reported a bill, the sections of which are recommended by Judge Hoffman and by the Pacific coast delegation, which I believe will be unobjectionable when brought before the Senate, and the passage of which I will ask as soon as I can get an opportunity to call it up.

In the mean time it was thought it would be right, supported by the State Department and the President, who no doubt are doing all they can in the right direction, to fortify them by the opinion of the Senate, and I think it is now becoming the general opinion of the country that it is better at once and for all to cut off all possibility of immigration of Chinese laborers into this country.

Mr. STEWART. I am very much gratified at the information furnished by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] that the President of the United States and the State Department are already negotiating a treaty for the utter exclusion in the future of Chinese immigration. I have no doubt that an expression of the Senate will be beneficial to the Department in their efforts to secure a proper treaty which will give the Chinese Empire to understand the determination of this country to exclude Chinese laborers altogether, and I am exceedingly gratified that the country now sufficiently understands this question to deal with it intelligently, and that it is not a matter of passion or prejudice on the part of the people of the Pacific coast. It is a question, when reduced to its ultimate results, whether we or the Chinese shall occupy this country. We can not live together. Wherever they come and occupy the soil, the white people, our race, must give way. They occupy it in such a way, their institutions are such, so entirely different from ours, their capacity to live on so much less than our people, that it becomes impossible for us to stay with them; and wherever they come in numbers the white people must leave. It is a question of allowing our people to occupy the country which belongs to them.

I do not wish to elaborate or take time. I simply rose to express my gratification that the question is now so thoroughly understood, that there is a general concurrence that an effort should be made to exclude Chinese from this country altogether and preserve it for our own race.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I wish to ask a question for information. I desire to know how there can be any effective restriction on the importation of Chinese laborers into the United States as long as the neighboring country, British America, has no restrictive laws. I understand that contracts are being made for the transportation of Chinese to the British possessions lying north of us. There are railroads in Canada, and throughout the whole length of their lines they carry Chinese, who easily find their way across the border. I can readily see that where restrictions are enforced, and where the officers are always on the alert to prevent improper admission, something may be accomplished; but I can not see how any restrictive legislation can be made potential to prevent large numbers of Chinese from coming to our country as long as the condition to which I have referred exists.

I understand that all along our northern border there are thousands of Chinese coming in. Unless we undertake to get some concurrent action on the part of the British Government controlling the lines in the territory north of us, it is to my mind absolutely foolish to undertake to make any new treaty with the Chinese Government prohibiting the further importation of Chinese laborers to this country. Has the Senator from Nevada any remedy or can he suggest any remedy which will meet that difficulty?

Mr. STEWART. I do not see that the suggestion made by the Senator from New Jersey is any reason why we should not attempt to protect ourselves from what the whole country now acknowledges to be an unqualified evil, why we should not make an effort to retain our own country for our own people.

I am aware of the evil spoken of by the Senator from New Jersey. It has been discussed throughout the Western country, and particularly in the country affected by it. A great many Chinese come in in that way; but I can inform the Senator that the people of British Columbia feel equally keen on the subject with ourselves, and they are constantly petitioning the Canadian Parliament to relieve them from the difficulty, and public opinion in the Dominion is fast changing on the question, and there is no doubt we can soon get united action.

Independent of that, various remedies have been suggested. It has been suggested by a member from California in the other House that there should be a registry, and those found without a registry excluded and prevented from coming in from either Mexico or the Dominion of Canada. I have no doubt that we shall be able, if we move on, to carry the whole of this continent with us on this question, because the public sentiment is fast forming in relation to it.

A treaty of this kind made by us will probably accomplish the whole purpose. If we exclude Chinese laborers, British Columbia will demand that they shall be excluded from there. We can have a treaty that they shall not come across the line, and we can prevent most of them from coming. I do not think that the proposition is so difficult that we can not fully accomplish it.

This is a step in the right direction, and there is no reason why we should not go forward. If they are to continue to come here they will be an evil compared with which no other evil ought to be considered, because it is a question of whether we shall have a country at all, whether it shall be occupied by servile labor, by a race so far superior in the matter of endurance and cheap labor that our existence with them is impossible. It is the duty of this Government to move forward, and I am much gratified, as I said before, that the Committee on Foreign Relations have taken the matter up, and that there is a general concurrence of opinion that it is an evil which demands attention and is now receiving it.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I wish to say a word before the resolution is passed. It is, as the honorable Senator from Nevada remarked, a step in the right direction. In my judgment, however, it is a very short step. The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON] has pointed out in the interrogatory propounded by him to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART] that the great difficulty is that Chinese immigration comes into British Columbia and gets into our country from across the British border. Chinese laborers have not come into this country directly from Chinese ports for the last eight years, but have come from the British port of Hong-Kong, not only directly by steamer to San Francisco, but through the British possessions north of us, and by these different routes large numbers have been coming into this country. Therefore it does seem to me that a mere treaty on our part with China can not accomplish very much. Of course it is all right as far as it goes; but what does it amount to? What can it amount to if we have a treaty to-day with China in which the Chinese Government stipulates expressly that their laborers shall not come to this country, if this is all we have?

Mr. SHERMAN. I should like to ask the Senator from Oregon whether it is not just to consider this resolution in connection with the bill which was reported? The first section of that bill reaches the very difficulty suggested by the Senator from New Jersey and the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Will the Senator please speak louder?

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask the Senator from Oregon, in justice to the Committee on Foreign Relations, to connect this resolution, which is a simple resolution of the Senate, with the bill that was reported at the same moment, the first section of which covers the very point raised by the Senator from New Jersey and the Senator from Oregon, and grants every affirmative act of legislation that has been demanded by the Senators representing the Pacific coast. I think that bill contains three sections covering the very point now complained of.

Mr. MITCHELL. I am not censuring the committee, and am willing to vote with the Committee on Foreign Relations on this resolution. I am glad to find the chairman of that committee expressing himself so strongly and emphatically in favor of the principle of absolute exclusion as applied to Chinese laborers. The only difference between the honorable Senator from Ohio and some of the rest of us is as to the manner in which this thing shall be done.

The Senator has referred to the bill reported yesterday. I shall probably discuss that when it comes up. But in regard to the first section of that bill, which, the honorable chairman of the committee has stated, meets the very objection suggested by the honorable Senator from New Jersey, I desire to say, in answer to the Senator from Ohio and to the Committee on Foreign Relations, that in my opinion the first section of the bill reported yesterday is simply declaratory of what the law is to-day on that very subject.

The restriction act now in existence, the law of the land to-day on this subject does not restrict or attempt to restrict merely those who come from Chinese ports, but the restrictive law goes further; and unless I am very much mistaken, and I am quite sure I am not, the first section of the bill reported yesterday by the Senator from Ohio is simply repeating what the existing law is to-day as construed by the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. STEWART. Allow me to make a suggestion. The Senator made a remark that may be misunderstood. He remarked that this was a small step or an unimportant one.

Mr. MITCHELL. I admit it is a step in the right direction; but it will not accomplish the result the committee expect or desire.

Mr. STEWART. Does not the Senator regard it as a very important step to remove what is an objection on the part of many Senators to direct legislation, to remove that objection which now exists that it would be in violation of a treaty, so that all may agree in passing a bill? Does he not think it important that we should take steps to relieve every person who desires to stop Chinese immigration into this country by removing the objection of any treaty allowing them to come in? A treaty on this subject is intended to act in that direction. Nothing else, it seems, can be done, and it is an expression of the sentiment that we ought to exclude the Chinese, and after a fair trial I suppose everybody will be willing to vote for an exclusion bill.

Mr. MITCHELL. I am in favor of the resolution so far as it goes, and I shall vote for it with a great deal of pleasure. Not only so, I introduced a similar resolution myself during the first session of the Forty-ninth Congress, and it was referred on my motion to the honorable Committee on Foreign Relations, where it slept the sleep that knows no waking. It was never reported; it was the same kind of a resolution that has now been reported by that committee. If that resolution or some similar resolution in the form of a suggestion to the President had been adopted eighteen months ago, when it was first proposed here, it might have facilitated the execution of a treaty between the two Governments.

All I wish to say, and all I have to say, and all I propose to say in regard to the pending resolution, is that if we had a treaty to-day with China providing for absolute exclusion, the work would only have been commenced. In so far as the great work of excluding Chinese laborers from this country is concerned, it would be necessary to follow that up in order to bring about any very important result by a similar treaty—first with Great Britain, second with France, and third with Mexico. It would not be enough even then; but after all these things had been done it would be necessary for Congress to take hold of the matter and provide by law for the execution of the provisions of the treaty; and in my judgment until all these things are done this country will never stop the immigration of Chinese laborers to the United States.

Of course that is one way to do it, and that is perhaps the better way, and in deference to the opinion of men who look upon treaties with some degree of awe and as surrounded by a sanctity which Congress must not under any circumstances disturb, no matter how great the emergency, perhaps that is the proper way, and I for one, as this is the plan proposed—I am in favor of co-operating with every Senator and every member of the other House who is in favor of maintaining treaties inviolable, no matter how pernicious they may become, to the end that a treaty may be entered into with the Chinese Government which will, so far as it goes, exclude any Chinese laborers from coming into this country. But, as I have said, you must go further; you must have a treaty with Great Britain, with Mexico, with France, and you must have legislation that will make the treaties effective; otherwise they will amount to nothing.

There has been any amount of misrepresentation in regard to the coming of the Chinese into this country in the last two years. The New York Herald the other day and some other Eastern journals put down the number that came in in one year, 1884, I think, at 8. I have the statistics here, taken from the records of the steam-ship companies of San Francisco, certified to by the surveyor of the port, showing that not only hundreds but thousands have arrived every year. I have before me now a clipping taken from a leading journal at San Francisco, the Examiner, the issue of February 3, in which this item appears:

> Two hundred and eighty-five Chinese came on the Belgic yesterday. It was a poor day for Mongolians, but still they managed to muster thirty-five times as many as the total number that came last year, according to the New York Herald's figures.

Mr. SHERMAN. I wish the Senator from Oregon would put in his remarks a table that he furnished the Committee on Foreign Relations on the subject of the number. There is a great misapprehension in regard to the number of immigrants. The tables that were published in the New York Herald only contain those who come in who have never been here before; consequently they included but few. The table to which I have alluded shows all the persons who came in under the claimed exceptions, having gone out of the country and come back again with certificates under the treaty.

Mr. MITCHELL. I regret very much that I have not that table here. I thought I had it. I will get it, however, and with the consent of the Senate either insert it in my remarks now or present it hereafter.

That statement shows under the certificate of the surveyor of the port of San Francisco the actual number of Chinese persons who have arrived in San Francisco by steamer in each and every year, commencing with the year 1850, and it shows this remarkable and astounding fact, that the immigration of that class of immigrants to this country since we entered into treaty relations with the Government of China in 1880 has been infinitely in excess of those who came in preceding years.

I did not intend to make a speech, and do not wish to delay the passage of the resolution. I only meant to indicate my views in regard to the effect of any treaty with China, although I earnestly hope the United States will succeed in negotiating just such a treaty as is suggested in this resolution, and that then it may be supplemented by similar treaties with France, Great Britain, and Mexico, and that then Congress may consummate the good work by the passage of an iron-clad exclusion act.

If I had my way about this matter I would to-day pass an absolute exclusion bill without reference to the provisions of any treaty with China. I would do it for a number of reasons which I might give, but I will not take up the time of the Senate now to state them. I would not hesitate to do it for one because the Chinese Government itself has time and time again and repeatedly violated various provisions of the existing treaty between this Government and the Chinese Government. I would do it because I do not consider it would materially interfere with the commerce between China and this country. If Congress were to pass an absolute exclusion bill to-day, I have no idea that there would be any interruption to commerce. I would do it, moreover, because I believe that that is the only absolutely efficient measure by which the United States can accomplish the desired end.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, I do not wish to make a speech on the pending resolution, but I have voted several times for bills excluding Chinese from this country, and I wish to say that the ground upon which this resolution is based is not a satisfactory one to my mind.

This resolution practically declares that the world was created wrong, that there are some four or five hundred millions of people who ought not to have been created and with whom there should be no kind of intercourse. I gravely question whether anybody can make a declaration of that kind with any propriety. Certainly you are going back upon the history of this country. Your fourteenth amendment to the Constitution declares:

> Nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law, nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws.

That is an affirmation that every State should give the equal protection of its laws to every human being. It is an implied affirmation that every human being has a right to the equal protection of the laws and to laws which equally protect him. Although that is not within the express letter it is clearly within the meaning and the principle of this declaration.

Now, while it is certainly true that any community has a right to exclude any person whom it may regard as unfriendly or as not a proper portion of its population, I question whether we should make a broad declaration that the Chinese people are not fit to be the associates of any other people, whether we should declare that they are beyond the pale of civilization and improvement.

The troubles which exist in our country are said to be due to the fact that they are a more economical people, capable of working for less and subsisting upon less than other people. If the Pacific States do not want the Chinese we could arrive at legislation which, leaving to their local laws the power to exclude them, would effectually exclude them; and that is the extent to which they can be effectually excluded. It must be done by authority of the State and the execution of the laws in every community of the State. If the people of any State want them, why not allow them to have them, and if they do not want them, so legislate as to allow them to exclude them? In the absence of either treaties or naturalization laws they would be subject to the laws of the States excluding them.

I am indifferent as to the passage of this resolution because it does not affect the people of Florida; but I wish to make my protest against the theory upon which it is based, which declares that a great part of the human race, five hundred millions of people of Asiatic origin, were improperly created, and are not capable of civilization, and can not contribute anything to ours, and against the other declaration of this resolution that intercourse between all nations of the world is a bad thing and ought to be prohibited; that we shall build a Chinese wall around this country—while excluding the Chinese, adopt their policy—and separate ourselves from all others. If it be true in part, it is true in whole. If there be so large a portion of the people of this globe as the whole Asiatic portion of the world that, because of their origin, and because of their locality, and because of habits that are peculiar to them, are incapable of elevation, incapable of civilization, unfit for contact with us, then the other doctrine is true that we should build this wall around ourselves and make the hemisphere divisible into two parts, one of which shall be full of barbarism and darkness, and the other of our civilization and progress.

I do not accept the theories on which this resolution is based.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR subsequently said: I should like to say, if I may be permitted by the Senate, in regard to the resolution which has just now passed, that I was obliged to leave the Chamber after it was taken up. I was unable to concur in the passage of it when it was voted upon. As I supposed a large majority of the Senate was in favor of it, it was hopeless for me to make a contest. I shall take an opportunity to express my views on that general question on some other early occasion, probably when the restriction bill comes before the Senate, in a few days.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills, received from the House of Representatives, were severally read twice by their titles, and referred as indicated below:

The bill (H. R. 5034) to provide for the purchase of United States bonds by the Secretary of the Treasury—to the Committee on Finance.

The bill (H. R. 7052) relating to postal crimes, and amendatory of the statutes therein mentioned—to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

The bill (H. R. 7746) to amend sections 2595 and 2596 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, and to provide a collector at the port of St. Paul, Minn., and for other purposes—to the Committee on Commerce.

CAPRON COLLECTION OF JAPANESE WORKS OF ART.

Mr. VOORHEES. I ask leave to have recommitted to the Committee on the Library the bill (S. 1033) providing for the purchase of "the Capron collection of Japanese works of art."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The order to recommit will be made if there be no objection. The Chair hears none.

Mr. VOORHEES. I am authorized by the Committee on the Library to report in lieu thereof a bill, accompanied by a report of Professor Goode, which I ask leave to file with the bill as a report on the subject of which it treats.

The bill (S. 2215) providing for the purchase of "the Capron collection of Japanese works of art" was read twice by its title.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is this an original bill from the committee?

Mr. VOORHEES. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

CATTLE AND DAIRY FARMING.

Mr. PALMER. I move to reconsider the vote by which the Senate on the report of the chairman of the Committee on Printing this morning non-concurred in the amendments of the House of Representatives to the concurrent resolution authorizing the printing of 25,000 copies of the report on cattle and dairy farming. I do this in the interest of many of the constituents of every Senator here in all probability. We have received a great many applications for this valuable work on cattle and dairy farming. I think I receive more applications for it than for any other single work published by the Government; and I hope the Senate will concur with the House and make the number 25,000 instead of reducing it to 20,000, as I understand is proposed by our Committee on Printing.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Michigan moves that the Senate reconsider the vote by which the amendments of the House of Representatives to the resolution were agreed to and a committee of conference ordered. If there be no objection, that order will be made.

Mr. PALMER. I think that the Chair misstates the proposition. It was the adoption of the resolution or at least of the report made by the chairman of the Committee on Printing to non-concur that I moved to reconsider.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will submit the question in any form the Senator from Michigan may desire.

Mr. MANDERSON. The motion of the chairman of the Committee on Printing was simply that the Senate refuse to concur with the amendments of the House, and ask for a conference on the disagreeing votes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Which orders have been entered.

Mr. MANDERSON. Now, as I understand the Senator from Michigan, he desires a reconsideration of the vote by which the Senate refused to concur.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That was the question which the Chair put.

Mr. MANDERSON. So I understood it.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. PALMER. I moved the reconsideration; and now I move that the Senate concur with the House.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Michigan moves that the Senate concur in the amendments to the resolution made by the House of Representatives.

Mr. VEST. That will put the number at 25,000.

Mr. MANDERSON. I will explain exactly the condition of matters to the Senate. The Senate passed a concurrent resolution by which it was determined to print 7,000 copies of the consular report on cattle and dairy farming. The distribution of the 7,000 copies was 2,000 for the Senate, 4,000 for the House, and 1,000 for the State Department, it being substantially the resolution introduced by the Senator from Texas [Mr. REAGAN]. That concurrent resolution went to the House and was amended by the House so as to increase the number to 25,000, making 8,000 for the Senate, 16,000 for the House, and 1,000 for the State Department. The resolution was also changed by the House so that it became self-appropriating, appropriating the sum of $62,500 for the printing of the 25,000 copies.

Another amendment is that the work shall be bound in two volumes instead of one.

The Committee on Printing, deliberating over the matter, while it was perfectly willing to see a substantial increase because of the very great demand for this valuable work, felt that 25,000 copies was in excess of any fair or proper demand for this expensive publication. The work as originally printed cost the Government about $11 a volume, printed as one volume.

There are in it many very expensive plates. The entire work being electrotyped and the plates prepared, the cost now of any additional number would be less than $3 per copy bound in two volumes, I think between $2.50 and $2.60 for each two volumes.

So far as I am concerned I do not particularly object to concurring in the amendments of the House. I did think the number was excessive; but if the Senate wish to have 25,000 copies of this publication printed I certainly have no objection to make to it.

Mr. FRYE. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question before he sits down?

Mr. MANDERSON. Certainly.

Mr. FRYE. In his opinion how long will it take to furnish the House and the Senate with the document?

Mr. MANDERSON. That is a very difficult question for the chairman of the Committee on Printing to answer. The work at the Public Printing Office is very greatly in arrears. Publications that were ordered a year ago are not yet in. I think, as there is such pressing demand for this publication, the Committee on Printing of both Houses might take such course as would expedite its printing.

Mr. FRYE. I should like to ask the Senator whether or not there was ordered a little over a year ago the printing of what was known as the report of the Committee on Fisheries, and whether or not that has ever been printed yet?

Mr. MANDERSON. I only have an understanding of that matter from the statement of the Senator from Maine a day or two ago. I understand that he made the inquiry and found that it had not yet been received.

Mr. FRYE. And the Senator from Delaware just went to the document-room to find that document, and it is not there.

Mr. MANDERSON. I have no question it is so. There are many works ordered over a year ago that are not yet printed.

Mr. ALLISON. I wish to say that many of the ordinary and necessary reports for the facilitation of the public business are not yet printed, such as the report of the Supervising Architect. Reports which have usually been laid on our tables at the very earliest days of the session, before the holidays, are not yet accessible to the committees of this body, who are called upon every day to legislate respecting the subjects treated of by them.

Mr. FRYE. Is the report of the Commissioner of Navigation printed?

Mr. ALLISON. No, sir.

Mr. MANDERSON. I do not think any members of the Senate are more embarrassed by this delay than those Senators who compose the Committee on Printing. Where the fault is I confess I am not ready to say. I do not know that I have the knowledge which would permit me to state. There is this embarrassing delay, and there is complaint elsewhere as well as here. Of course the Committee on Printing of the Senate, or the joint committee of both Houses of Congress, can do nothing in the way of the practical working of the Public Printing Office. We can not even give directions. The duty that we are charged with, as we understand it, is to investigate the question as to whether certain documents shall be printed, and in what number. That we seek to do, and our time is daily taken up with that effort.

Mr. ALLISON. I did not mean to reflect upon the Committee on Printing or to say that they could remedy this trouble. The cause, I think, is in the failure of the Public Printer to appreciate the importance of the work committed to him.

Mr. MANDERSON. That may be the excuse, but I simply make the statement of facts and each member of the Senate can draw his own conclusions.

Mr. HAWLEY. So far as resolutions containing appropriations in them are concerned, there is no excuse for great delay. If we were acting under the annual appropriation, the Printer might say that the fact that it was exhausted before the work of Congress was done was a cause of delay; but in a case like this, $62,500 for the work is before him, and he has nothing to do but to call in new men if there be room in the building for them.

Mr. CULLOM. So there is no excuse for delay.

Mr. GORMAN. I was in the Committee on Printing this morning, and agreed to non-concur in the amendments of the House to the resolution; not that I desired to limit the number, but in this work the illustrations are contracted for, and are not done in the Public Printing Office.

The Committee on Printing, on the part of the Senate, have had no estimate of the exact cost of this work so far as it is done outside of the office. The committee would like to expedite the matter. They have asked for a committee of conference, and then whatever statements the Public Printer may have to make in regard to the publication can be made. It would really expedite the matter by letting it go to a committee of conference, I think. We have not had an explanation of it before our Committeeon Printing, but we desired to expedite the disposition of the subject and have the work facilitated. That is the reason why we proposed a committee of conference.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PALMER) in the chair). The question is, Will the Senate concur in the amendments of the House of Representatives to the resolution?

Mr. CULLOM. I wish to say one word in confirmation of what has been said by the present occupant of the chair, and that is that there is no volume that has been printed by the Government in which the people of the country, especially the agricultural people, take as much interest as they do in this; and while I know nothing about the cost of the volume, I am very anxious that the largest number that has been named should be printed for the use of the people.

Mr. GORMAN. I ask my friend from Illinois whether, in the absence of a regular estimate for the cost of the work, he does not himself think that it would be better, in order to accomplish his desire, to let the matter go to a committee of conference?

Mr. CULLOM. I have no objection to that motion. The only thing I desired to say was that eventually I hope we shall get a large number of this volume printed. If the Committee on Printing have not got the proper estimate, showing what it is going to cost, I think they ought to have it. So I have no objection to the motion the Senator from Maryland indicates.

Mr. GORMAN. I hope the motion to concur will not be adopted, and that the original suggestion of the chairman of the Committee on Printing will be agreed to, and have it sent to a committee of conference.

Mr. MANDERSON. I think that will be better, on account of the suggestions made by the Senator from Maryland. I think the estimate of $62,500 that came from the Public Printer to the House was an estimate for binding the work in one volume, and I believe it will be necessary to increase the amount of the estimate somewhat, in order to bind the work in two volumes.

I am quite gratified to hear this expression from different members of the Senate in reference to the character of this work and the great demand there is for it, and I think that in committee of conference the difficulty will not be over the number to be printed so much as the necessity for the amount of the appropriation, and I hope the Senate will adhere to its determination.

Mr. CALL. I understood the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations to say that the delay in the execution of orders for printing has been caused more by the failure of the Public Printer to appreciate the importance of the work than for any other reason. I desire to say that I have given somewhat careful attention to the course of the Public Printer, and I do not think this criticism upon him is deserved. I think he has been a model of industry and economy. If there is delay in the public printing, it is not the fault of the Public Printer, but the fault of the appropriations for that service.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Will the Senate concur in the amendments of the House of Representatives to this concurrent resolution?

The amendments were non-concurred in.

Mr. MANDERSON. I now renew my original motion that the Senate, having non-concurred with the amendments of the House of Representatives, ask for a conference on the disagreeing votes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Nebraska.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MANDERSON. I ask that the committee of conference heretofore named by the Chair be again named.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, that request will be granted, and the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON], the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY], and the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] will be appointed the conferees on the part of the Senate.

PRINTING OF A PETITION.

Mr. HOAR. I yesterday presented, for reference to the Committee on Finance, the petition of C. P. Hovey & Co. and others, praying for a return of certain duties. I omitted to ask that the petition and accompanying papers be printed. It will be very convenient to the Senate and to the committee to have it in print. I now make that request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRIS in the chair). The petition was referred?

Mr. HOAR. It was referred.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the order to print will be made.

URGENT DEFICIENCY BILL.

Mr. DOLPH submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the urgent deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. PAYNE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the urgent deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENT TO A BILL.

Mr. STEWART submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 2169) authorizing the issue of circulating notes to national banks to the par value of bonds deposited therefor; which was referred to the Committee on Finance, and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 1923) providing for the establishment of a life-saving station at the harbor of Kewaunee, Wis.;

A bill (H. R. 3215) to authorize the construction of the Ohio Connecting Railway Company bridge;

A bill (H. R. 3613) for the relief of Joseph Casson;

A bill (H. R. 3859) for the relief of the Sone and Fleming Manufacturing Company, limited, of the city of New York;

A bill (H. R. 4880) for the relief of A. Cusimano & Co.; and

A bill (H. R. 6291) for the relief of R. S. Stanley, postmaster at Booneville, Miss.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 158) authorizing the Secretary of War to transfer to the trustees of the Porter Academy certain property in the city of Charleston, S. C.

LAND-PATENTS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PALMER in the chair). The next resolution coming over from yesterday will be laid before the Senate.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution submitted by Mr. CALL February 29, 1888, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Lands of the Senate are hereby instructed to report a bill declaring all patents on the public lands of the United States issued by the Secretary of the Interior without authority of law to be absolutely void, and requiring the Attorney-General of the United States to bring suit to vacate and set aside the same.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, I have received in the past year a great many letters from Florida from settlers on the public lands of the United States in that State under the laws passed by Congress. I will read one of these letters, and ask the consent of the Senate to print extracts from the others, not delaying it by reading them. I read from a letter from Fort Meade, De Soto County, Florida, dated January 22, 1888:

Hon. W. CALL, Senator:

DEAR SIR: I write you to learn the status of certain descriptions of lands in Southern Florida. There are lands here in De Soto County, held or claimed by a colonizing company under the "Disston purchase," lands claimed to have been donated to the State as "swamp and overflowed lands." Here there is a large portion and in large tracts of so claimed lands that can in no respect be described as swamp or overflowed and have not been within the memory of man.

Now, what I wish to know, are these lands subject to homestead, pre-emption, or private entry?

C. E. DEWEY.

P. S.—I am located on section 27, township 33, and range 28, De Soto County. This township is now claimed by the "Avon Park Colonization Company," claiming purchase from Hamilton Disston. Has governor made them any show of title?

I sent that letter to the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and received the following reply:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., February 21, 1888.

SIR: I am in receipt, by reference from the Hon. WILKINSON CALL, of your letter of January 22, 1888, relative to land in township 33 south of range 28 east, said to be claimed by a company under the "Disston purchase," and stating that you have resided for two years on section 27, and asking if the land claimed by said company is subject to entry under the homestead law.

In reply you are advised that this office has no knowledge of what land said company may own or claim in this or other townships, as their claim or title must have been obtained from the State.

All the land in township 33 south of range 28 east, except section 16, was patented to the State February 14, 1880, in patent No. 20, Gainesville series, as swamp land. The land having been patented to the State it has passed beyond the control of this office, whether it is swamp land or not, and it is not subject to entry.

As requested, I return your letter to Senator CALL.

Very respectfully,

S. M. STOCKSLAGER,
Acting Commissioner.

C. E. DEWEY, Esq., Fort Meade, Fla.

The report of the register of public lands of the State of Florida for 1885, which I have here, and extracts from which I shall insert in my remarks, exhibits the fact that of 36,000,000 acres of land in the State of Florida over 20,000,000 have been either patented to the State or have been selected—over 15,000,000 having been selected and withheld from settlement—as swamp and overflowed lands.

Since the 1st day of January, 1883, the following patents for swamp lands have been received from the United States:

* * * * * * *	*

The swamp and overflowed land-grant act of 1850 contained the express words "swamp and overflowed lands," and the regulations required that upon each 40-acre tract, the lowest subdivision known to the land laws, there should be more swamp and overflowed than dry land. Under this state of the law there are large numbers of people who have settled on what they insist is high and dry land, never having been either swamp or overflowed, who have made their homes there, and who are now dispossessed or about to be dispossessed under patents alleged to be issued under this law.

I make no objection to the State getting all the lands she can. I make no objection to the policy which she adopted of granting lands to railroad companies. I am not responsible for that policy, but I have no war to make upon it. It has developed the State of Florida to a large extent; but when the people having a right under the laws of the United States, occupying land that never was swamp or overflowed land, the poor men with families of children who have put homes upon this land, ask me in my official position as a Senator to do what may be in my power to secure to them the right which the law has given to them, I shall always respond to that demand.

This letter exhibits the fact that the Interior Department claim that, in violation of the law that prohibits anything but swamp and overflowed lands to pass under that act, the patents, falsely asserting that land overflowed, can deprive a poor man of his home and divest him of his rights. A false statement by a Federal agent and a false statement by some other person in collusion with him, according to the interpretation of the law in that Department, is sufficient to destroy the rights of a citizen under the act passed by Congress, and of which they are the executors, to the property which the Government has given to him. More than a year ago I offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That a special committee of five Senators be, and are hereby, appointed, who shall be, and are hereby, charged with an investigation of all alleged unlawful, unauthorized, or fraudulent appropriations of the public lands of the United States in the State of Florida to the detriment of actual settlers or homesteaders or purchasers for cash, or of the United States, under the several acts of Congress making grants of the public domain to the State of Florida and otherwise; and that the Commissioner of Public Lands furnish said committee with a competent clerk from the office of Public Lands; and that they have authority to send for persons and papers, and to employ a stenographer; and that said committee report to the Senate the evidence taken by them and their recommendations on the subject.

It was referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and it was reported adversely. There was no reason alleged except that the Department stated that they had the means to make this investigation, and it was unnecessary that a committee of the Senate should do it, and a year has passed away and the investigation has not been made.

As this letter shows, the poor people, too poor to be able to maintain a lawsuit, at the mercy of the persons having grants from the State of these large bodies of land, are being deprived of their homes.

There is no remedy for them unless the Congress of the United States exerts the power which the Constitution and the people have given to it to afford them protection. More than half of the whole area of the State, 20,000,000 acres, larger than some States of the Union, is disposed of under these selections. As I said, I have no opposition to make to this policy. I am not responsible for it, but the Senate is responsible, the Interior Department is responsible for every home of every poor man and every family that is turned out upon the highway without a place to rest their heads upon—they are responsible when that is done in violation of law.

This resolution simply declares what the law in question is.

Mr. DOLPH. I should like to ask the Senator from Florida when these selections of which he speaks were made.

Mr. CALL. Under the act of 1850. Some of them have been made since 1856, running up to 1880, 1881, and 1882.

Mr. DOLPH. What proportion of the lands were selected prior to March 3, 1857?

Mr. CALL. A very large quantity was selected. There is no controversy about that which is embraced in the confirmatory act of 1857. Congress passed an act confirming all the selections theretofore made and approved in the Interior Department, and that gave a title, whether they were good selections or bad, whether they were in conformity with the law or in fraud of the law. Since that time there have been a great many selections made.

I only desire that there shall be a law which shall be imperative on the Department, first declaring, what is obviously true, that any act of an Executive Department issuing a patent to public lands in violation of law shall be void, and that the Attorney-General of the United States shall be required to bring suit to set aside that patent in cases where justice demands it. I think that legislation will cover the case.

I shall renew my resolution for the appointment of a committee of the Senate to investigate the condition of these lands in the State of Florida so far as they deprive actual settlers of their homes. As I have said before, I do not desire to interfere with any rights which are supposed to have grown up permissively unless they interfere with the right of a settler on the land, but only to afford to every meritorious individual case that may occur of a poor man who is in the occupation and improvement of lands of the United States that have never passed under any law of the United States to any person such assistance as shall give him the right, notwithstanding the patent unlawfully issued, to appeal to the Government and the courts for protection.

A judge of the United States court has said in a case where he had no jurisdiction in reference to a vast body of the public land in the State of Florida, in a suit between two private claimants, a railroad company and an agent, suing for a fee alleged to be due under a contract with the company for lobbying here in the Senate and for the payment of a money consideration to Senators, which was false—and I vindicate the committee to which this reference was made from the possibility of such an allegation—but that judge has undertaken, in the face of that statement in the record, to decree to this claimant, this lobbyist, this agent, the homes of many of these poor people in the State of Florida, and there has been up to this time no redress possible to be obtained in the Interior Department for it.

It is a shame and an outrage and an insult to this body and to the American people that such a condition of things should be allowed, and it will be a disgrace to this Congress if investigation and prompt redress shall not be given. I have no reason to doubt that the present able Secretary of the Interior will do all in his power, but the action of Congress is needed to afford complete relief and protection.

I think, Mr. President, that these facts exhibit clearly the necessity of the legislation which I ask for, and I point here to a law of the Department affirming expressly to a poor man asking for the protection of his home that whether the land is swamp or not swamp, whether it was provided in the act of Congress or forbidden in the act of Congress to be given to the State, the Department charged with the duty of executing the laws of the United States has no power to protect him when that is the interpretation of the law; that the Department has no power to execute the law, but has power to allow it to be violated and the property of the Government to be taken away. It is time that Congress should assert its power and control of the executive department of the Government. If not, we shall soon have neither a Congress nor a government.

Mr. PLUMB. Mr. President, there is no question about there having been great frauds in regard to the grants of swamp lands. I think the State of Florida has had more benefit of such frauds than any other State in the Union, and it is with great propriety that a resolution of this sort comes from a representative of that State.

When the Government entered upon the policy of the reclamation of swamp lands by means of donations to the various States, it was supposed that the amount of land to be covered by this process of reclamation would be very slight. As I remember, the first report made to Congress estimated that in the States of Missouri and Arkansas there would be about 1,800,000 acres in the two States. The State of Arkansas has had, if I remember rightly, more than——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, it becomes the duty of the Chair to lay before the Senate the unfinished business.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask that the Senator from Kansas have an opportunity to conclude his remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the Senator from Kansas will be permitted to proceed. The Chair hears none.

Mr. PLUMB. I think the State of Arkansas alone has had over 8,000,000 acres of land granted to her, alleged to be swamp and overflowed, and the State of Missouri has had about three-fifths as much, and there are very considerable claims outstanding in behalf of those States for more lands.

Mr. BERRY. The State of Arkansas has had only 7,000,000, or a fraction over 7,000,000. I desire to have the statement corrected.

Mr. PLUMB. The claim of the State is for 10,000,000 acres. There are 30,000,000 acres of land the States claim—one-third of the entire area—as swamp and entitled to have the claim certified for that land or to have indemnity in cash for it.

The State of Florida has an area of less than 40,000,000 acres of land, and has had certified to it already over 16,000,000 acres as swamp and overflowed, and has claims pending for between three and four million acres more. In other words, the State of Florida has to-day received or is in process of receiving more than one-half the area of the State as swamp and overflowed land.

I was somewhat surprised to read in a recent report of the Commissioner of the General Land Office some characterization of the fraudulent nature of the claims for swamp lands in Minnesota, but I looked in vain for any characterization of the fraudulent character of these entries in the State of Florida or any other Southern State.

Mr. President, these lands were granted to the State of Florida; that is to say, Florida got them by patent and they became the property of the State. Now, the Senator from Florida, with all his amiability and high sense of justice—and no one appreciates it more than I do—says that he indorses what the State has done with these lands. He shakes his head. I have listened very carefully to him, and if he does not indorse it I am very much mistaken. At all events, with all his denunciation he fails to dissent from it. He says he does not complain of it, but he is not responsible for it at all.

Mr. CALL. What I said was that I do not oppose the policy of the State granting these lands to corporations on condition of building railroads and internal improvements; but I did not say that I approved taking the lands from settlers.

Mr. PLUMB. The Senator has not yet stated what he does mean.

Mr. CALL. I will state that I believe a law which gives the swamp and overflowed lands to a State or to an individual covers nothing but swamp and overflowed lands, and I believe that any executive officer of the United States violates the act of Congress, be he President or Secretary, when he allows an inch of high and dry land not within the terms of that act to be patented.

Mr. PLUMB. That still avoids the point I made. The point I made was as to the disposition which the State of Florida had made of these lands.

Mr. CALL. The State of Florida had a right to make disposition of the lands. It perhaps might have been done in a better way, but the way adopted was not altogether an unwise one.

Mr. PLUMB. Then I come back to the specific charge the Senator has made, that by reason of what he says was an improper disposition—and I have no doubt on that point—made by the officers of the General Government to the State of Florida and by means of the conveyance by the State of Florida to railroad companies, and improvement companies and so on, this last step being the important one, settlers have been deprived of their homes.

As I said, I have yet to hear the Senator say that he did denounce, as he ought to denounce, the action of his own State in thus conveying to railroad and improvement companies land settled upon by settlers. There is where the trouble is. The State of Florida has been to blame. It had the lands in fee. It could at least have set apart all the lands for settlement that were fit for settlement. One thing it did not do. It did not do anything towards reclaiming them. It has never given to the General Government a single dollar of advantage on account of receiving this large body of land, but in its grant to railroads, proper enough, of course, it has taken away the rights of citizens. That is what it chose to do, and I want to have this responsibility located exactly where it belongs. The Senate has nothing to do with it. The original grant was improvident; there is no doubt about that. It has been improperly availed of; there is no question about that.

The State of Florida has had its share in whatever fraud there could have been in the passing of the title to this land from the Government to that State, and all the States to some extent undoubtedly have participated in frauds of that character, because I have no doubt all of them have been certified lands which were not swamp lands. The swamp character was noted on the field-notes, and they have been accepted in many cases as conclusive. In other cases agents were sent out to examine the land, and either falsely or indolently have certified other lands as being swamp and overflowed when they were not.

It was part of the common knowledge which existed twenty years ago that some of the alleged swamp lands in the State of Florida were on the tops of the highest hills, and any one who is at all familiar with Florida must know that one-half of the area of that State is not swamp land. It is a libel on the State to say so; and yet the State, through its agents, has asked from the General Government and has received from the General Government certifications to the amount of nearly one-half of the area of the State, and is pressing for the receipt of more.

I do not complain. I am simply referring to that part of the speech of the Senator from Florida in which he puts the responsibility on the Senate in this matter. There is no responsibility here at all. He went to the administration of the Land Office under the late Commissioner, a gentleman whom he has commended frequently very highly as being a high-minded public official in sympathy with the people, and he got no comfort from him. He got no comfort from the administration of that office in any portion of it, either at the head of it or at the foot of it. And now, his own State having itself given this very land, occupied by the meritorious people of whom the Senator speaks, to railroad and improvement companies who now dispossess them, he very conveniently omits to characterize the act on the part of his own State Legislature and the authorities of that State, but comes here to berate Congress upon it. I say the shoe is on the other foot. The State had ample power to protect every settler on the land, and it ought to have done it, and I think it would have been a wise thing for them to have opened large portions of the land to settlement.

I do not know what the remedy may be. I am not willing, however, to accept as conclusive statements made here as to what can be done. It is always to be considered whether in the pursuit of some proper object it may not be pursued too far. We may not destroy rights that exist in those we are seeking to subserve. But after all the Senator has said about the fraudulent character of the appropriation of this land, I come back to the point and say that if anybody has been defrauded, if any settler is imperiled by the loss of his home, it is because the authorities of the State of Florida have acted in fraudulent, willful, and I was going to say malicious, disregard of its duty to its own citizens.

Mr. CALL. I ask consent of the Senate to be heard.

The Senator from Kansas is altogether wrong in his facts and in his logic. The State of Florida is not to blame. The officials of the State of Florida are not to blame in the respect which he has stated. I will not here enter into a eulogy of my own State. I am proud of it; proud of its administration; proud of its people and their adherence to the public obligations that the law imposes upon them; and in seeking to protect the settlers on the public domain in the right to their homes which the national law has given them I am neither reflecting on the State nor contravening their will.

Soon after the conclusion of the war the entire domain known as the swamp and overflowed lands of the State of Florida was taken into the custody of a United States court. The judge of that court, I believe, thought he had a right to be a kind of satrap or proconsul with legislative and executive powers. I saw all the officials of the State under the Republican administration in the State of Florida sitting upon a bench in a court-room with the governor at their head, and the judge said to them that he would put every one of them in jail if they did not give obedience to his orders respecting the disposition of these lands. My colleague [Mr. PASCO] says that was before the change of administration from Republican to Democratic; and he is right, but I did not intend to bring politics into this discussion.

Mr. PLUMB. Was it after that change of administration that the 4,000,000 acres of land were sold to the Disston Improvement Company, of Philadelphia?

Mr. CALL. No; but the whole body of the land was sold to a bankrupt for a nominal consideration of 16 cents an acre, to a Republican that went there to buy the Legislature. I do not blame the Republican people of Florida for that. I have great respect for them. There are as good men among the Republicans of the State as there are anywhere; but Republicans in Florida know the fact. It was an era of misrule and of wrong-doing in many respects, and perhaps they were not to blame for this transaction. If I am not mistaken, this proposed sale of all the fifteen or twenty million acres of internal-improvement lands was by a consent decree of the judge of the circuit court of the United States, which was set aside afterwards by Judge Frasier of the district court.

Mr. PLUMB. Have there been no grants of these lands to railroads since the Democratic party came into power in Florida?

Mr. CALL. Oh, yes; almost all of them have been made since the Democratic party came into power, and the railroads have been built and honestly built, and are doing a great deal for the property of the State.

Mr. PLUMB. Did they make any reservation in granting these lands to railroad companies, in favor of settlers on the lands?

Mr. CALL. Always.

Mr. PLUMB. They did?

Mr. CALL. Always.

Mr. PLUMB. Then how comes the peril the Senator speaks of?

Mr. CALL. These lands were all locked up in the United States courts, and in order to get them released from the authority by which they were held a sale was made. They held there was certain money due, and sold the 4,000,000 acres which the Legislature of Florida before the war had authorized, if the conditions of the law had been complied with, to be applied to the education of the children of the State, with a right to every settler upon the land to purchase it upon the same terms as the United States law allowed. Under that condition of the law the land was seized by the order of this judge and was sold under the order of the court to the extent of 4,000,000 acres, the governor of the State acting simply as the adviser, making the contract, but the court affirming it in order to relieve it from the custody of the court.

Mr. PLUMB. Was not the sale to the Disston Improvement Company by authority of an act of the Legislature of Florida?

Mr. CALL. No.

Mr. PLUMB. It was not?

Mr. CALL. No.

Mr. PLUMB. Did not the proceeds go to pay the debt of the State of Florida? I ask if the sale was not made in direct response to authority given by an act of the Legislature of Florida?

Mr. CALL. No. There is no doubt it was recognized by the Legislature after it was agreed upon, but it was the act of the court and the trustees.

Mr. PLUMB. I will undertake to refresh the Senator's recollection within the next forty-eight hours.

Mr. CALL. The Senator may refresh my recollection a great deal, but he can not refresh it on something that I know more about than he does. It is not material to my argument here, but I state the fact that some persons criticised the governor because of the sale; but he made it under the order and with the approval of the United States court. The lands had been in the custody of the court, and the purpose of the sale was, as stated by him, to relieve the fund of the debt and release it from the court.

Mr. PLUMB. Sold for 25 cents an acre.

Mr. CALL. A very good price it was claimed to be under all the circumstances then existing. But I am not going into that.

In the respect in which the Senator has criticised the people of the State of Florida his facts are wrong. The State of Florida appointed an agent here in the city of Washington to confer, I suppose, with the Secretary of the Interior. I do not know what else he had to do. I do not know what else he could do here. Senators are here, Congressmen are here, the Executive Departments are here to execute the law, but I find there are agents of all these States. I think they are unnecessary, and there is absolutely nothing for them to do.

I think that the law alone prescribes the conditions on which this land passed to the State, and the officers of the United States should execute the law without solicitation by agents. The people of Florida had no knowledge about the selections or their approval, and they have not now, nor had I until these complaints came to me from settlers upon the land, who all say, as does this one whose letter I have read, "I am living upon high and dry land which there is no law to pass the title to the State of Florida or to anybody claiming under the State, but for which there is law and right and a pledge of the faith of the people of the United States that I shall have it upon certain conditions." Now I bring forward that case. I say that the Committee on Public Lands of the Senate, and the Senate, and the Congress are responsible when that man makes out that case, no matter what has been done unlawfully by others, to pass such laws as will protect him in his home and in the rights which the law has conferred upon him. That is all.

If an executive officer of the United States, in violation of law and of the duty imposed upon him, takes away the property which the law has given to a man, what harm can it do to say that act is void? Is it not void? The Interior Department is not the Legislature; the Secretary is not Congress; and all that mass of rules and regulations and customs in the Interior Department by which a whole empire of public land has been fraudulently passed away in violation of law ought to be swept away. There is no question that this Government has been disgraced more than any civilized government ever was, by the action of an Executive Department, in violation of law, giving away the whole public domain of the people to those to whom the laws and the public policy had not given it.

I have brought up another case and I have said time and again, here is the case of a great land grant for which there is not a word, nor a syllable, nor a dot of an "i" nor a cross of a "t," in any of the laws of the United States or in those of the State of Florida, giving an interest to the claimants, and yet the Interior Department, when you ask it to show the law, remains impassive and silent. I challenge the production of any law that ever gave a railroad company in the State of Florida from Tampa Bay to Waldo a right to the land grant of the 17th of May, 1856. It can not be found.

But this is not the only case. I have very great respect for my friend, the late Secretary of the Interior, the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER]. I believe in his administration of the Department he acted with integrity and with zeal and with intelligence. But I know that during the last nights of the last Administration a patent was issued, a patent based in fraud, a patent depriving a poor man of a home which he had had for twenty years, and that for his benefit and others in like cases my then colleague, Mr. Jones, had an act passed putting it upon the market under the land laws of the United States and giving him the prior right of entry and purchase. Under a law of this description this poor man was deprived of a valuable possession which he had lived on for years.

Why should not the Government institute suit and if the facts be found as stated protect this man and his family in the right and the property of which he has been unlawfully deprived by the mistake of an executive officer?

Mr. DAVIS. I dislike very much to interfere with the Senator from Florida, but I must call for the unfinished business, the regular order of the day.

Mr. CALL. I can continue what I have to say hereafter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The unfinished business is before the Senate.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 7264) for the erection of a public building at Bridgeport, Conn.; and

A bill (H. R. 7265) for the erection of a public building at Hoboken, N. J.

DEPENDENT PENSION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 181) granting pensions to ex-soldiers and sailors who are incapacitated for the performance of manual labor, and providing for pensions to dependent relatives of deceased soldiers and sailors, the pending question being on the amendment proposed by Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, in line 5 of section 2, after the word "from," to insert the words "infirmities of age or from;" so as to read:

> And who are now or who may hereafter be suffering from the infirmities of age or from mental or physical disability not the result of their own vicious habits, etc.

Mr. BECK. Have the yeas and nays been called for on that amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. They have not, as the Chair understands.

Mr. BECK. I desire to have the yeas and nays upon that amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. GEORGE. I would like the matter proposed to be inserted by the amendment read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be again read.

The Chief Clerk read the amendment.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, I do not know very much about the details of this bill, nor do I propose to discuss its provisions elaborately. It relates to matters with which I am not very familiar, never having been on any committees that had them in charge; but as I understand the amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON], every man who served in the late war, or in the Mexican war, or any of the Indian wars, for ninety days or thirty days, whether he ever heard a gun fired or not, is to receive a service pension if he is suffering under the infirmities of age; and what the infirmities of age are is a question, I suppose, to be determined by the Commissioner of Pensions in the usual way. I suppose every man over sixty years of age will be considered suffering under the infirmities of age. Perhaps a million or more of men and seven or eight hundred thousand widows and children of the soldiers of the civil war, saying nothing about former wars, will get $12 a month, or $144 a year, whether they ever heard a gun fired or not, and their fathers and mothers will get it if the soldier is dead. Does any member of the Senate, does the Senator from Iowa know? Can he guess within a hundred million dollars how much money this amendment of his will take out of the Treasury? I doubt whether he can. If he has formed any estimate of how much it will require to make the annual payment to this new class of pensioners, I should be very glad to hear it. I am unadvised on that point.

Mr. COKE. If the Senator will allow me——

Mr. BECK. I will yield to any gentleman who will tell me about how much this amendment will cost.

Mr. COKE. In the line of the observations the Senator is making I beg to call his attention to the President's message vetoing the dependent-pension bill in the last Congress. The President says:

> The pension it awards is allowed to enlisted men who have not suffered the least injury, disability, loss, or damage of any kind, incurred in or in any degree referable to their military service, including those who never reached the front at all and those discharged from rendezvous at the close of the war, if discharged three months after enlistment. Under the last call of the President for troops, in December, 1864, 11,303 men were furnished who were thus discharged.

Mr. BECK. I understand all that. I wish to know what is the best estimate of the amount of money that will have to be paid if the amendment of the Senator from Iowa is adopted.

Mr. DAVIS. I will say to the Senator from Kentucky that I have an extract from the report of the House committee, a portion of which was read by the Senator from Texas.

Mr. BECK. Does that apply to the service-pension bill?

Mr. DAVIS. The total-disability pensions.

Mr. BECK. I am asking what amount is to be paid under the service pension proposed by the Senator from Iowa. I can get all the other facts. It is not worth while perhaps to ask—I do not believe that any Senator can even make an approximate guess—but I venture to assert that if the amendment of the Senator from Iowa to this bill is carried $500,000,000 will not begin to cover the amount of pensions.

Mr. PLATT. Will the Senator permit me a question?

Mr. BECK. Certainly.

Mr. PLATT. Does he understand that the language which is proposed to be inserted by the amendment would pension all people who are suffering in any manner from the infirmities of age?

Mr. BECK. All who have enlisted and served for three months.

Mr. PLATT. Notwithstanding they may not be incapacitated for the performance of manual labor?

Mr. BECK. The language is, "And who are now or who may hereafter be suffering from the infirmities of age, or from mental or physical disability." The word "or" is in the disjunctive, and it means "all who are now or who may hereafter be suffering from the infirmities of age." It might for all purposes of construction stop there.

Mr. PLATT. That is simply a matter of construction of the language.

Mr. BECK. Certainly. That is my construction of it.

Mr. PLATT. The Senator did not intend any such thing.

Mr. BECK. It is so plain that it can not be misconstrued. A pension of $12 a month is granted to all who are or who may hereafter be suffering from the infirmities of age.

Mr. DAVIS. Which, I beg leave to say, incapacitates them for the performance of manual labor.

Mr. BECK. It is disconnected with the provision "or who are suffering from mental or physical disability."

Mr. DAVIS. Or who have not the means of self-support.

Mr. BECK. I know $500,000,000 sounds like a large sum of money, but it will not, in my opinion, cover the claims under this amendment when the test is made. I hold in my hand another bill which is part of the system, I presume.

Mr. BLAIR. Does the Senator——

Mr. BECK. Please let me state the case. It seems that I can not get much accurate information. The bill I hold in my hand, proposing to repeal existing limitations on arrears of pensions, is now before the Committee on Pensions. I presume it will soon follow and supplement the measure now under consideration. The propriety of passing it has been argued elaborately more than once. It is now offered by the President pro tempore of the Senate [Mr. INGALLS]. It proposes to remove the existing limitation on the payment of arrears of pensions. How much does any Senator suppose that measure, if passed, would take? It applies only to invalid, not to service, pensions. I went to the Department this morning and looked into that question myself, assuming that it would follow the present bill very promptly. The number of original claims which have been filed since July 1, 1880, amounts to 483,786, all of whom will be entitled to arrears of pensions the moment the limitation is removed; and at the rate, say, of $4 a month, or $48 a year, which is below the average, in twenty-two or twenty-three years, the average would be nearer twenty-five years than twenty-two, it will amount to $1,100 each. Almost five hundred thousand men have already applied to whom the present limitation applies. At $1,100 apiece, that amounts to $550,000,000. That is an immense sum, yet I do not believe that the removal of the limitation from the arrears-of-pension law would take more than half as much in the long run as would be taken out of the Treasury by the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa.

I do not propose to discuss the patriotism or want of patriotism of Senators in regard to their votes upon this question. The debate has been conducted on the other side of the Chamber as though all the patriotism in this body was centered in them, and as though it was their special desire to reward the men who had fought in the armies of the United States, and they seem to assume that every Senator who objects to giving all that they ask is a poor, miserable, disloyal miser who has no regard for the honor of the country or the welfare of the men who fought its battles.

Gentlemen forget that this is simply a business question which ought to be looked at as though we were imposing new taxes on the people to-day, and were for the first time furnishing the ways and means whereby these vast sums of money could be collected from the tax-payers of this country to meet them. Talk about the surplus in the Treasury, it would not last a year if either of these bills passes; and we are dealing with bills which will be an annual drain on the people for generations to come. Forty years will not see the end of the policy sought to be inaugurated. Once these burdens are imposed they must go on; they can never be repealed, no matter how onerous they may become. Instead of talking about a vast surplus being in the Treasury, the moment you undertake to pension all enlisted men who have become old and infirm, even as now proposed, embracing as is done those who never took any part in the strife, but barely enlisted and remained subject to call for three months, you will bankrupt this country, unless you double your taxation, yes, treble it or quadruple it.

There is no use talking about surpluses in the Treasury in the face of propositions like these; there is no use quarreling any more as to whether the President was right or wrong in the message which he sent to us urging Congress to give relief from taxation. This bill settles that for many years to come. If it had been drawn in the interest of the great trust companies and pooling combinations of the country, in the interest of the protected monopolists, who have been robbing the tax-payers for years under the forms of law, it could not have been more adroitly drawn than it has been to accomplish these ends. When it can be done under the guise of a patriotic purpose, to give it to support the soldiers and sailors of the late war and the Mexican war and the Indian wars, including enlisted camp-followers, white and black, and substitutes, good and bad, the real object is artfully concealed. Add to that, when every man can be clamored down as an enemy of the country and an enemy of the soldier who does not move up and vote away all the money demanded, I repeat that the protected barons who are now perfecting the trusts shown in the papers I hold in my hand, devised under tariff protection to plunder the country by all sorts of illegal schemes, could not invent a better way to do it than to have the propositions made by this bill carried out.

The pretense that the Federal soldier has been neglected is a sham. We have by laws already passed provided for every soldier who was wounded or in any way disabled or injured in the Army, and for his wife and his children; and whenever any soldier can show any sort of disability that is outside of the laws, all he has to do is to come to Congress, and without opposition, on the suggestion of a single member of the Committee on Pensions, his bill is always placed upon the Calendar, given precedence over all other business, and passed unanimously by the Senate, members on both sides of this Chamber being equally earnest in giving relief; and so it is at the other end of the Capitol. No worthy, deserving soldier who served his country during the late war has ever made an appeal in vain for help to the Congress of the United States. The general laws protect nearly all. Whenever they do not, and a special case is presented, the claimant comes to Congress; and the committees of both Houses, no matter whether the men on those committees served in the Federal or Confederate Army or whether they did not serve in either Army, have recognized, without distinction of party, the right of the man, when he is suffering from wounds or any sort of disease or infirmity incurred in the service, or from disabilities which might by reasonable probability be assumed as in any way arising from exposure, to be provided for.

Not content with that, and against the will of the best class of Federal soldiers, in my opinion, and as if for the purpose of preventing any relief from taxation, the Senator from Iowa, by a wholesale, sweeping provision, proposes to pension all who were enlisted, whether they fought or suffered or not, who from any cause are not able to make a living otherwise than by their manual labor, and they are to be pensioned at the rate of $144 a year.

It was said yesterday by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. WILSON], who is a member of the Committee on Pensions and uncommonly well informed, and therefore I assume his statement is correct (I am not perfectly familiar with the exact facts myself), that we are paying now somewhere between eighty million and eighty-five million dollars a year for pensions, and that our present pension-rolls exceed those of the three leading European nations. The Senator from Maryland said, as the RECORD shows:

> Vast as that sum is, for the last fiscal year $75,000,000, and for the current year $80,000,000, constituting at this time, exclusive of interest and payments on the national debt, the one-third of the whole expenditures of the Government raised by taxation; nearly as much as it costs the German Empire to support its vast army; almost double the aggregate of the military pension-lists of all Europe west of Russia; and far exceeding in liberality all other pension systems the world ever saw or dreamed of. I believe the great army of impoverished agriculturists of the country, who with difficulty save themselves from an annual deficit in their incomes, and the hordes of laborers who can scarcely earn enough to support their families, and the multitudes of people who have small incomes barely sufficing for their maintenance, are willing patiently to bear this immense burden, so long as it is applied to the relief of those who are crippled in any degree in their ability to gain a livelihood by disabilities incurred in the service of their country.

That is true. We are willing to do almost anything whenever our soldiers incurred disabilities in the service of the country. We are doing it now by general laws and by special acts of Congress, without stint and without complaint. Surely that ought to suffice. It was said by some Senator yesterday in debate that we have paid nearly $900,000,000 in pensions since the late war. I believe the sum was stated at about $900,000,000.

Mr. HARRIS. At $883,000,000.

Mr. BECK. At $883,000,000. We are so much in the habit of talking about millions that men do not seem to appreciate what millions of dollars mean. Any Senator can turn to any of the Finance Reports and he will find there a list of the expenditures of this Government from its organization. It is on page 17 of the Finance Report I have in my hand. Perhaps the page of the report for some other year might differ, but there is in them all an annual statement of the expenditures of this Government, by years, from 1791 down to the present time.

It will be seen by making a calculation, a very simple one, that the net annual expenditures of the Government for the War Department, for the Navy Department, for Indians, for pensions, for miscellaneous expenses—in short, for every purpose from 1791 down to 1850, including the war of 1812 and the war with Mexico, and all pensions paid down to that time, amounted only to about $900,000,000. We have paid out nearly that vast sum for pensions alone since the late war; as much or more than it cost this Government with all its varied and complicated machinery for its net ordinary expenses for the first sixty years of its existence, and yet we are told that we are permitting our soldiers who have served their country in its hour of need to go to the poor-house. I deny it. Eighty million dollars a year is what we are paying for pensions now; $20,000,000 more, as the Finance Report shows, than were paid in the most extravagant years of the extravagant administration of Mr. Buchanan, as it was called by its opponents, for all the purposes of the Government. Surely there can be no just complaint on that score.

Mr. GEORGE. What is the report?

Mr. BECK. It is the annual Finance Report. Every volume of the Finance Report contains that table, and every Senator can make the calculation for himself.

Senators and the country ought not to forget that we are dealing, as I said, with a question of permanent taxation in the measure before us that will continue perhaps for twenty years to come without diminution of taxation. We are already raising, as the Secretary of the Treasury shows in his reports and estimates, $340,000,000 a year now. One hundred and twenty million dollars are raised every year by internal-revenue taxation on whisky, tobacco, and beer. The other $220,000,000 is raised mainly by tariff taxation. Perhaps a few million dollars are obtained from the sale of public lands or other things, but substantially $220,000,000 are raised by tariff taxation and $120,000,000 by internal-revenue taxation.

The problem we are now grappling with is how to get relief from the most onerous of those taxes. Is it not obvious that any material extension of the present pension laws beyond the $80,000,000 or $85,000,000 we are paying now would be adding unnecessarily to the burdens of the taxation of the people? Senators ought not to forget, and the country will not forget if Senators do, while they are impressing this side of the Chamber, as they delight to do, with great emphasis, as though we were reluctant to do our duty, that the taxation now is so adjusted that, while it is said, and no doubt truly, that there are very many men in this Chamber who are many times millionaires, our system of Federal taxation is so adjusted to-day that there is not one of them who pays any more taxes to support the Federal Government than the liveried coachman does who drives him to the Capitol, and the Republican leaders do not intend that taxation shall be otherwise adjusted; they are determined that it shall continue to fall upon the labor of the country and the unorganized masses of the people, on the poor soldiers and their families for whom by their generosity, as they call it, they are giving these great sums of money. The Republican leaders are very generous with the money that the poor laborer himself toils day in and day out to make. We are here as trustees, not to dispense bounty, but to secure equal rights to all, and grant unequal and unjust privileges to none. By the legislation of that very patriotic party they have so adjusted Federal tariff taxation that it not only falls upon the necessaries of life, principally on what is eaten, drunk, used, and worn, but the very things that the poorest man must have pay a tax very often nearly double what the millionaire requires. The poor man pays a tax of 300 per cent. on his whisky, while less than 40 per cent. is paid on the fine madeira and the sherry, which is the favorite beverage of the rich; the coarse tobacco pays more than the fine cigar; the plain blanket under the specific form of duties paying nearly twice as much as the fine blanket, which only the rich can buy.

Mr. PLUMB. Will the Senator let me interrupt him? While he is enumerating the subjects of onerous taxation I hope he will not omit whisky.

Mr. BECK. I did not, and I repeat, the coachman who drives distinguished Senators and has to drink whisky if he drinks at all, pays 300 per cent. tax on it.

Mr. PLUMB. Is the Senator in favor of taking that off?

Mr. BECK. I will answer that in a moment.

Mr. PLUMB. I want to see how much——

Mr. BECK. Wait a moment. Contain yourself in peace, if possible. The tax is 300 per cent. on whisky and from 20 to 40 per cent. on sherry and madeira, according to the price abroad. Is not that true? Do any of the millionaire Senators drink cheap whisky? Not one. Perhaps the Senator from Kansas might, but when he is drinking his sherry and madeira, which is worth $5 a gallon, he pays 10 per cent. tax on it, while the coachman who drives him here and who has to buy whisky is paying 300 per cent.

Mr. PLUMB. I want to know——

Mr. BECK. No; let me answer further about the tax on whisky, and what I would do about its repeal. I believe that no more legitimate tax was ever imposed than the tax on whisky and on tobacco, and upon things that the poor man's family can live well without the use of; and it is a legitimate tax for the further reason that every dollar that is thus paid goes into the Treasury.

Mr. PLUMB. What is the Senator making a row about, then?

Mr. BECK. I am making a row, if you call it a row, because I object to the patriotic gentlemen on that side of the Chamber seeking under false pretenses to deplete the Treasury, so that the present condition of tariff taxation must continue, and because I regard this bill as a cunningly-devised scheme to prevent any relief from being given to the poor men of the country, and because those patriotic gentlemen do not pay their fair share of the taxes they are seeking to maintain.

Mr. PLUMB. If the Senator will vote to take off the tax on whisky he will find some help he does not expect, or if he will vote to reduce it; but he knows confounded well he will not do it.

Mr. BECK. The Senator from Kentucky knows "confounded well," in the elegant language of the Senator from Kansas, that every dollar that is collected from whisky goes into the Treasury of the United States, less 3 per cent., the cost of collection; and he knows equally well that the taxes collected upon railroad iron, upon blankets, upon all the manufactures of wool and cotton and everything else are so adjusted that not over one-third of the taxes paid by the consumer goes into the Treasury, but two-thirds go into the pockets of the protected pets of the gentleman from Kansas and his political friends.

Mr. PLUMB. Including the tax on whisky?

Mr. BECK. I have no doubt every man on that side of the Chamber will vote to repeal any tax that is fairly and wholly paid into the Treasury in order to maintain taxes that go into their own pockets, or the pockets of their friends, and call themselves patriots protecting American industries while doing so. In the face of their professions they employ the cheapest labor they can obtain from all parts of the world to drive the American laborers out of their workshops and factories. Of course they are all willing to take the tax off of whisky and to take the tax off of tobacco—none of that money goes into their pockets—but they are only too glad to pile tariff taxation mountain high on all the things they produce which the people want and must have, because they are the owners of the iron mines, the furnaces, and workshops. They own and control all the great cotton and woolen manufacturing establishments. Congress has so arranged the taxation of their products that the protected monopolists can by trusts and combinations destroy all competition, and keep up the price of every article they produce, that every American citizen has to use, to a point equal to what all the other people of the world have to pay for it with the American tariff tax added.

Since I am on this subject of trusts, will the Senator from Kansas listen? He may learn something that he has not looked into before. I have the papers in my hand, and I hope Senators will examine them. Certain trusts are being looked into now by the proper authorities. I have here the New York Times of February 20 and of February 27, containing much valuable information concerning the operation of these patriots who profess to be the protectors of American labor. The Senator from Kansas and his friends will see by reading the statements how these trusts and combinations operate.

I did not intend to go into the details of these matters at any length now; perhaps, this is as good a time as any. Even the protective organs, such as the Times, of Philadelphia, the New York Tribune, and the other leading organs of the protectionists, have to tell these men, "For God's sake, be careful; you are destroying the protective policy by your combinations." Their mode of operation is not new; but it has only been developed of late to an extent that is attracting public attention, and perhaps will make the people understand how they are robbed by tariff laws. More than twenty years ago one of the predecessors of the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON], and a relative of his—a very able man, by the way—made a speech on the floor of the Senate when the protectionists were seeking to pile up tariff taxation, as they succeeded in doing in spite of his protest. Mr. Grimes, of Iowa, said, in 1867—turn to the record and you will find the speech in full:

Threats of political extinction—

Said Senator Grimes—

Threats of political extinction are hurled against every man who, in the exercise of an independent judgment, is not prepared to impose upon his constituents the burdens which the various manufacturing combinations demand. That portion of the public press suborned to their interests is rife with charges that "the capital is thronged with free-traders, and that British gold is operating to secure American legislation for British interests." Every man is condemned in advance who would inquire before he would vote.

We know what this means; that two or three large manufacturing interests, not satisfied with enormous profits during the last six years, are determined at whatever hazard to put more money in their pockets, and to this end have persuaded some and coerced other manufacturing interests to unite with them in a great combination demand for what they call protection to American labor, but what some others call robbery of the American laborer and agriculturist.

I unite with that Senator and adopt the language he used. It is robbery of the American laborer and the American agriculturist. What he predicted would follow is the case now, under the existing law, which is substantially that passed in 1867, for its modifications in 1883 amounted to nothing under the manipulations of a conference committee, led by the two distinguished Senators now before me, the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] and the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL], who, as I said at the time, in plain violation of their known duty, imposed taxes in conference upon this people by the act of 1883 beyond what either House had sought to impose, and in some important matters, after both Houses had agreed what the tax should be, they raised it in secret conference and imposed it upon the country, thus adding to the power of the trusts and combinations to plunder the people. We are living under that system now, until the taxation to-day on many of the leading articles of industry is higher than it was before the act of 1883, made so in that conference by those gentlemen, as I will have occasion to show when the debate on tariff taxation comes up again, as I hope it will very soon.

Returning to the trusts, as set forth in the papers referred to, illustrating the extent to which they have been and are now being carried, let me read a few extracts:

If the sincere friends of American industry would protect protection—

Says a leading protectionist organ—the Times, of Philadelphia—

they must promptly separate it from the extortion of trusts and monopolists. It can survive the hostility of open, manly foes; it can not survive the suicidal blows of those who use protection only to abuse it by arbitrary oppression of consumers that would not be tolerated in despotic Russia.

That is the condition to-day, as described by the Philadelphia Times. I have said nothing worse than that about them. The writer of the article takes up the trusts one by one—first the sugar-refiners' trust—and he shows that they are exacting to-day, by their combinations, $30,000,000 by extortionate prices, under a trust, combination, or pool—call it what you please—and they now threaten to raise their prices another cent a pound, which will be equal to $60,000,000 taken out of the pockets of the consumers, and all that is made possible by the enormous tariff tax imposed upon sugar in the interest of the refiners, by prohibiting competition from abroad with the monopolists at home.

I do not care to read the whole article. I will cut out a few extracts from it and insert them in my remarks. It goes on to show that not only are the parties to the trust putting up the price of the sugar they sell, but they have by their combinations so arranged things as to get their raw material at the lowest possible prices, and to boycott everybody who does not belong to their pool. They are thus able to cut down the prices of common sugar to the producers of Louisiana, whom they pretend to be protecting.

Another smaller set have advanced the price of school-slates in the last eighteen months 12½ per cent., protected by a protective tariff of, say, 30 per cent. I presume they have now raised the price to a point just under the foreign price with the tax added. The facts are all given in the Times article.

Another important combination which is fully exposed is the steel-rail trust. It was organized in order to bring up the price of their product almost to the point of the English price with the tariff tax added. They had it up to that point at one time, but the railroads rebelled, and they had to reduce it, as this article shows.

Mr. BLAIR. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question? I have watched the Senator's statements with some care and great interest, and if they are reliable I can not but view them with some alarm. In the earlier parts of his discourse he spoke of the tariff increasing the price of the commodity to the consumer in such a way that the manufacturer gets two-thirds of the amount of the taxes represented by the existing tariff.

The Senator was saying, and I was drawing my inferences upon the accuracy of his statement, that the imposition of the tariff while carrying some money into the Treasury carried the great mass of the difference between the price of the foreign article and of the American article into the pockets of the manufacturers. He now reads to us from the movement of the trust combinations somewhat, and among other items he specifies the trust combination as to school-slates, and he says to us that the price was such that, in order to bring the cost of the American school-slate up to that of the foreign slate plus the tariff, the combination were able to impose some 12½ or 15 per cent., whatever it was, upon the former price—the price which resulted from competition among the school-slate manufacturers of our own country and the price of the foreign school-slate coming into our country. He took this trust combination to accomplish this end—the trust combination abolishing competition added 12½ per cent. to the price of the American-made school-slate in order to bring it up to the point of the cost of the foreign school-slate.

I ask the Senator if his own figures here and this matter of the trust combination he puts in here are not an absolute reply to and a total refutation of his first statement, that the amount of the tariff stated by him went into the pockets of the American manufacturers? In other words, has he not demonstrated what the protective-tariff people always have said to us, that the imposition of the tariff has led to home competition to such an extent that now the school-slate and other commodities are reduced vastly in price from what they otherwise would have been but for the imposition of the tariff? I should like to have the Senator explain that.

Mr. BECK. I think I can explain it to the Senator from New Hampshire. To begin with, what is the object of a tariff tax of, say, 50 per cent.? It is to prevent goods from being brought from abroad, unless the people who propose to use them here will pay 50 per cent. more than they are sold for in the foreign market, in order to enable the American manufacturer to produce them and sell them without competition from abroad if he sells for less than the foreign price and the tax added. That is the object of the protective tax. If it fails to do that it does not protect to the full extent authorized by law.

Mr. BLAIR rose.

Mr. BECK. Wait a moment. Give me time to answer.

Mr. BLAIR. Oh, certainly.

Mr. BECK. You asked me a question.

Mr. BLAIR. Certainly; I was asking for information.

Mr. BECK. In the next place the Government of the United States does not trade with the people of any other country. We simply collect toll from those who do. The individual man who wants any article, great or small, is the person who does the trading and pays his money. He buys where he can buy cheapest whenever he is allowed to do so; therefore it must be obvious that no goods would ever be bought by an American citizen which come from abroad unless the individual purchaser concludes that it is cheaper for him to pay the foreign price and the 50 per cent. tax added than it is to buy the American-made article. It is only when the individual American citizen, who has obtained the money to buy any kind of goods he needs by his own exertions, it may be by raising wheat, hogs, cotton, tobacco, anything, comes to the conclusion that he had better pay the foreign price and the 50 per cent. tax because that is the cheapest way to get the article that the Government ever gets any revenue out of goods that come from abroad. It depends on the option and the determination of the American purchaser as to what is best for him to do in order to save money or make it. The price of home products of like quality is, in his opinion, higher than the foreign price and the tariff tax; if he did not think so he would buy the home-made article. All the tax comes out of him, and all the enhanced price of the home-made goods is pocketed by the man who makes them; the Government gets no part of that. The foreigner of course pays no tax. He is not a consumer of goods that have passed the American custom-house.

The foreign importer will not bring his goods to this country for sale unless he can sell them to American citizens at a profit, after paying the 50 per cent. tariff tax, which is part of his selling price, because he has the whole outside world to trade with. Nearly all markets are free to him except the United States; he only comes here because he can make more money by coming here, and selling here cheaper than home manufacturers will after paying the tax, which the American purchaser repays to him, than he can by selling to other people in other countries without having to pay a tax. It is simply a question of money-making. Of course every once in a while, with competition at home and with improved methods of production everywhere, prices are reduced and American manufacturers find that if they were to keep the price of the products up to the foreign price and the tax, everybody would rush into the business, and as the market is limited to our own people it would be overstocked; therefore, every once in a while, as perhaps was the case of school-slates and other things produced here, men compete with each other and bring the price down until there is and can be no importation, as there is hardly now any of school-slates. They have brought down the price so that the foreigner can not bring in the article and pay the 50 per cent. tax and get it back when he sells. What do they do and say, according to the report I read from? Our manufacturers say to each other, "Our schoolmasters and our school children can not buy these school-slates from anybody but us; we have excluded foreign competition by a tax that was never needed; what is the use of letting the price of our product go down? Let us get together and put our price up to the foreign price and, say, 29 per cent., just keep a little under the foreign price and the tariff tax, and let us go into a combination." Congressional destruction of competition from abroad is the life and soul of all these combinations. They say, "We will not sell to anybody in this country unless they will pay us what this combination agrees upon. Congress will not let the people buy abroad; they are compelled to come to us and pay whatever we demand. We will just put our prices so far below the foreign price and the tariff tax as to exclude foreign competition and force all our home consumers to deal with us alone. All we need to do is to sell 5 per cent. cheaper than foreigners can after paying the tax. Our people of course will buy from us to save that 5 per cent."

That is exactly what these Congressional pets are now doing. That is what the sugar refiners are doing. That is what the American steel-rail producers are doing. That is what the producers of nails, the producers of horseshoes, and what every one of them is doing; they have by combinations succeeded in putting up iron ore, and especially copper, until the gentlemen who are the owners of the Calumet mines could pay any ordinary pension bill out of their own pocket, as these mines pay about 100 per cent. annually; they have gone into combinations with a number of French and other foreign gentlemen, it seems, and are sending their goods abroad and selling them in Europe much lower than they are charging for them here. Let me read:

The New York Tribune, which urges everybody to support high tariff rates because, it asserts, they cause cheapness through competition in the home market, has said that the dividends paid by the Calumet and Hecla mine between 1870 and 1883, upon a capital of only $2,500,000, amounted to $23,500,000. Additions since 1883 have, it is said, raised the total to $30,000,000. And it is estimated in Boston that by supporting the Secretan ring the company has provided for an annual dividend of more than 100 per cent.! This is the gratitude of the copper barons who have used the protection granted by the American people as an instrument for extorting money from the same people, and whose riches were heaped up by the aid of legislation which blotted out the copper-smelting industry on the Atlantic coast and in that way raised a barrier between the United States and Chili, diverting to Europe trade which naturally should come to us.

Mr. BLAIR. Will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. BECK. Certainly.

Mr. BLAIR. I admit that I do not understand what the Senator has been saying to me in answer to my question. I do not quite understand his reasoning. He finally substantially admitted the point, as I understand him, for he says it applies only to a little industry, the slate-pencil or the slate industry.

Mr. BECK. Oh, I did not say that.

Mr. BLAIR. The Senator said that occasionally in some small matter—that was the remark—occasionally in some small matter (and he instanced the slate industry) there would be such competition as to reduce the price of the domestic commodity below that of the foreign.

Mr. BECK. With the tariff tax added.

Mr. BLAIR. Yes, with the tariff added; but does not the Senator see how idle his instance is when he immediately goes on to read how all or nearly all the great industries of the country have by their competition so reduced the cost of the domestic commodity that these trusts have become possible? The sugar trust, the iron trust, and all the trusts which he has enumerated are exactly a repetition of the case of the slate industry, which first attracted my attention.

Mr. BECK. Now, Mr. President, let me go on.

Mr. BLAIR. The Senator has demonstrated by his own instances that the operation of the protective tariff—not the revenue tariff of which he speaks, but the operation of the principle of protection—has reduced the cost of domestic commodities in such a way that these atrocious trusts have become possible, and now they have reached a point when upon the Republican theory there should be such a reduction as to let in foreign competition to destroy the trusts, unless the law is able to do so.

Mr. BECK. The Senator from New Hampshire and myself of course can not convince each other. I have said more than once that the protective-tariff tax was imposed up to the maximum point, not for revenue, but to give favored classes control of our markets at the time of its imposition, its object being as nearly exclusive as possible, to enrich the men who through their lobbies pushed it through Congress, many of whom, I regret to say, were on the floors of both Houses, personally interested in the measures they were voting for.

Mr. BLAIR. Now the Senator draws out the point of the raising of the price by the trust; and if that thing is possible, does not the operation of the tariff reduce the price of the commodity?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRIS in the chair). The Senator from New Hampshire will suspend until the Chair ascertains whether the Senator from Kentucky consents to be interrupted.

Mr. BLAIR. I thought he had consented.

Mr. BECK. I do not object to being interrupted very much, but I want a chance to answer once in awhile.

Mr. BLAIR. Well.

Mr. BECK. A tariff tax is imposed under then existing condition. The conditions of the world change. For example, Bessemer steel at one time could not be made anywhere in the world for less than $70 or $100 a ton. When that condition of things existed some twenty years ago, $28 was imposed as a specific duty upon Bessemer-steel rails by Congress; I believe at the time it was considered equivalent to 45 per cent.; but new processes were afterward discovered and invented—not American processes, but by Sir Henry Bessemer, by the Siemens-Martin, by the open-hearth process, by German and English inventions, patented there and the patents purchased by American combinations—until the original tax of $28 per ton, instead of being 45 per cent., was over 100 per cent. duty. That was so obviously excessive and prohibitory that it was cut down to $17 in 1883. The processes of improvement cheapening steel went on the world over, not by American competition alone or even as a considerable factor, but in part, of course, so far as American inventions helped. So with nearly all other things, the cheapening processes of new inventions everywhere are progressing now until everything is cheapened. Look at the great harvesting machines of the present day, the reaper, the mower, the hay rake, and the thousand things that have been invented since the Senator and I were boys, when a cradle was the best implement we had to cut wheat with, and a common scythe the best to cut hay with; we could then perhaps cut an acre a day; now with a machine we can cut ten. The Senator perhaps may have had to do it, as I had, and I never have been clearly reconciled to the fact that those things were not invented twenty years sooner. When I see a fellow riding on a mower and another boy on a rake, one cutting down ten acres a day and the other gathering it up, when I had to sweat from morning until night to mow an acre, I still feel aggrieved that these inventions were not made a little sooner.

But, Mr. President, the compensation is that these are cheapening processes; they apply to all branches of manufacturing industry; they are not confined to any particular country. International patent laws equalize all that. They are bringing down the prices of things all over the world and are adding to their production. But what I insist upon is this—and we do not disagree, I think—when by these processes prices are brought down, as they must be, then it is that a high protective tariff imposed under former conditions so as to make every consumer in America, and that means everybody, pay the foreign price and the unjust tariff tax added, fosters trusts and combines, makes competition impossible, and destroys every legitimate American industry. With foreign goods excluded by law, when home competition brings down prices, then the trusts and combinations get together and put prices back to the highest point that excludes foreign goods; they pool their issues and will not sell to and will not buy from anybody except upon the terms they propose; and Congress forbids the citizen from buying elsewhere by a protective tariff maintained up to the highest notch, and will not change it, but its advocates clamor to throw away the $120,000,000 of revenue now collected from whisky and tobacco, as the Senator from Kansas suggests we ought to do, so as to make it impossible for us to remove the high protective tariff, which alone makes these infamous trusts possible.

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. BECK. Certainly.

Mr. BLAIR. I now understand the Senator to say that the trust combination results from the cheapening processes of which he speaks. The Senator undertakes to answer my question or get around the point by saying that there are cheapening processes which have been invented from time to time. I ask the Senator if these cheapening processes are not common to all manufacturing countries?

Mr. BECK. Certainly; I said that.

Mr. BLAIR. And therefore the cost of manufacture in England, for instance, diminishes in just the same proportion that it does in the United States by reason of that process?

Mr. BECK. Certainly.

Mr. BLAIR. So that relatively, the tariff remaining a fixed quantity makes no difference and does not enter into the question of the origin of the trust at all——

Mr. BECK. Now, Mr. President——

Mr. BLAIR. Or the diminution of the cost of the domestic commodity at all?

Mr. BECK. Before the Senator mixes up things any more let me take his own statement. He agrees that the cheapening of commodities is going on all over the world, in England, Germany, and in the United States; therefore he says, as that is going on the tariff does not make any difference at all. Can anything be more absurd? I say it respectfully. Twenty-eight dollars, as I said, was the specific tax per ton on Bessemer-steel rails once. Bessemer-steel rails were then worth, say, $75 a ton. Two years ago they were worth $17 a ton free on board at Liverpool, and they can be made in this country profitably for $25 a ton; the manufacturers of them here were content with that price, as Mr. SCOTT says, until the last two or three years. Would not $28 a ton specific duty, that was imposed before England could land her goods when they are now only worth $17 a ton free on board at Liverpool, make a wonderful difference in the power of the trust or pool combination over what it had when it cost $75 a ton to ship them from England? Is not $28 a ton over 120 per cent. protection now under the improved processes common to all countries, when it was only 45 per cent. at the time it was imposed? Therefore, as these processes are common to all countries, and the cheapening process has gone on here in this country until steel rails can be manufactured at twenty-odd dollars a ton when they could not be manufactured for less than $60 or $80 some years ago, and can be manufactured in England now at $17 a ton when they could not be manufactured for less than $50 in past years, the tariff protective tax of $28 a ton, or 120 per cent. on the cost of the goods, would absolutely exclude competition from abroad, as the tax exceeds the home cost. Does not that enable the combinations and the trusts to add 100 per cent. to their legitimate profits and exclude foreign competition still, and at the same time impose all the burden upon our people at home? That must be plain.

Mr. BLAIR. I do not wish to interrupt the Senator further; I am aware that I am trespassing upon his time, but I was drawn inadvertently into this matter.

Mr. BECK. So was I.

Mr. BLAIR. If he will allow me to say just a word more, I will not trouble him further.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. BECK. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLAIR. I hope the Senator will not forget that the original point, and the only point to which I called his attention, because it is the vital one in reference to his own original proposition, is whether the operation of the tariff is to diminish the cost of the domestic manufacture. I think that these instances of the trust combinations are an absolute demonstration that the protective tariff does have that effect. The Senator after his explanation attributes the diminution in price not to domestic competition which the protective tariff has given the opportunity for, but to the invention of divers important processes which are common to all nations. In reply to that suggestion or explanation of his difficulty I suggested to him that that would make no difference for the reason that these processes are common to all nations.

Mr. BECK. Now, Mr. President——

Mr. BLAIR. The Senator——

Mr. BECK. Do not make another speech just now.

Mr. BLAIR. I wish to make the point clear. I do not wish the Senator, by any means, to evade my point in the confusion and dust he kicks up himself.

Mr. BECK. Go on; go on.

Mr. BLAIR. Very well, then; permit me. I was tracing the process of our discussion and the evasions of the Senator rather than the explanations touching the point which I had raised, which I see caused him great difficulty, as it has all men to whom it has ever been propounded. He says that these combinations and these trusts are made worse by the fact that the tariff has not been revised and reduced as it ought to be, and by reason of the existing amount of the tariff, so great that it far more than excludes the foreign commodity, so that there is no reasonable or possible competition at all. He says that that is the reason of the combinations; but the combinations exist entirely independent of that, and I recall him to the point——

Mr. BECK. That is not a question.

Mr. BLAIR. I recall him to the point that the tariff is at any given time a fixed quantity; that the trust combination is an impossibility until the domestic commodity has been reduced in price by the operation of the tariff; and if, by reason of the continuance of an existing high tariff, the trust combination can be made worse now than it otherwise would have been, is no explanation of his difficulty at all.

Mr. BECK. I was about to go on. I suppose I need not. The Senator from New Hampshire seems to be an advocate of trusts as the only way to keep it up.

Mr. BLAIR. The Senator must not put me in a false position. I denounce trusts. They are horrid, they are malicious, they are destructive of the good of the country, and they ought to be destroyed themselves.

Mr. BECK. That is a pretty important admission. How can they be destroyed? Only by reducing the tariff that makes them possible, and thus enable home consumers to buy at reasonable prices elsewhere; yet the Senator from New Hampshire and all those who agree with him will stand up and resist, as they have stood up and resisted in season and out of season, any reduction of the tariff.

Mr. SHERMAN. I should like to ask a single question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. BECK. Certainly.

Mr. SHERMAN. If trusts only arise out of the tariff, how comes it that there are whisky trusts and some other trusts of that kind in this country, the most formidable and horrible in the country?

Mr. BECK. There are combinations that can exist without a tariff. Wherever there is a monopoly or when a combination gets very strong, a trust can exist even independent of a tariff; but a trust connected with clothing, with iron, with things that the world produces and can sell in competition with our manufactures, would be impossible but for the tariff, because the competition of the world would come and prevent trust combinations except for their exclusion by the tariff. There may be, through Standard Oil Companies and in other articles, monopolies of things made in this country cheaper than they can be made anywhere else that can not be controlled. Wherever the product or the business is in this country only, great corporations and great powers may get together and may control it, as great railroads control and eat up small ones, as great telegraph companies destroy small ones, as great oil companies destroy small ones, or as great banks and distilleries destroy small ones. All these things are possible; Congress is not responsible for these conditions. But in the great classes of goods that the men of America have to eat, drink, use, and wear the world makes them as well as us, and the world has them for sale; the people of all the other nations of the world buy them at the price the manufacturer is willing to sell them in open market for.

We, and we alone, protect our trusts and our combinations by telling our protected organizations, "You can go into the trust or pooling business to the extent of 50 per cent. beyond what every other person in the world is paying for like goods, and we will protect you by tariff taxation." That character of legislation destroys competition and creates monopoly by law. It prevents our citizens at home from buying the goods in the open markets of the world. The Senator from New Hampshire did not seem to be aware, while speaking of the confusion of my statement, of the confusion he himself was developing when he avowed with one breath that the cheapening process was going on among all the nations of the world—England, Germany, France, for example—as well as here, by inventions and new methods, and yet because it was going on there and here, without seeming to appreciate the effect of his observation, he turned around and asked triumphantly, did not the tariff enable us to do it? Did our tariff enable England to do it? Did our tariff enable Germany to bring down prices? Did our tariff enable France to bring down prices? They all reduced prices as the power of machinery increased, just as they were reduced here from like causes. The tariff had nothing to do with it. Human inventions, new modes, new devices, intelligent skill in producing everything brought down prices everywhere, and the tariff stands here alone to protect trusts and combinations and to enable a few men to rob the rest of the people and thus become rich by law instead of by labor.

Mr. SHERMAN. I should like to ask the Senator—because the subject of trusts is now becoming very interesting—whether he claims that trusts arise out of the tariff laws, and whether or not——

Mr. BECK. I claim——

Mr. SHERMAN. Let me ask another question. I ask him whether he does not know that nearly all the importers of this country importing goods from foreign countries are combined in trusts and are sending their goods here in trust, which are sold by agents; and whether this combination of trusts does not exist not only in domestic production but in foreign production, and there are fewer in domestic production engaged in competition with foreign productions than in any other class of production?

Mr. BECK. What was the first question?

Mr. SHERMAN. I will ask the Senator whether nearly all commercial people engaged in importation are not now tied together by trusts, and whether he does not know and has not reported in a bill that foreign goods are sent from foreign countries, owned by foreigners, consigned to foreigners, in trust by foreigners, held by foreigners in this country under trust to control the market?

Mr. BECK. The first question was whether I hold that the tariff protected the trusts, I believe. Was that it?

Mr. SHERMAN. No; I say——

Mr. BECK. What was it?

Mr. SHERMAN. Does the question of trusts grow out of the tariff?

Mr. BECK. Beyond all question, to a very great extent. In all the articles that are protected by 50 per cent. tariff, is it not possible for men in this country, with all competition from abroad to that extent excluded, by combination to raise their prices to the foreign price with the tariff tax added, less 1 per cent.?

Mr. SHERMAN. Then I still——

Mr. BECK. Let me ask if that is not the fact?

Mr. SHERMAN. No, sir; I say this——

Mr. BECK. Why is it not the fact?

Mr. SHERMAN. I say there are fewer trusts in domestic productions competing with foreign productions than there are in foreign productions themselves——

Mr. BECK. That is not a question. I will come to that after awhile.

Mr. SHERMAN. Or in a foreign country; and whether they do not compete with foreign goods; so that therefore the question of trusts has nothing to do with it.

Mr. BECK. As the Senator knows and will not deny—he is too well informed to deny it—the tariff of 50 per cent. on any class of imported goods that are made in England, Germany, or France as they are in this country, protects home trusts here, by preventing foreign competition, to the extent that they can adjust their home prices by combinations up to the foreign prices with the tariff tax added, less perhaps 1 per cent. That will exclude the same class of goods coming from abroad and being sold here. Therefore the combination can put up their prices to that point, and that is exactly what every one of these trusts is doing——

Mr. SHERMAN. No——

Mr. BECK. Wait a moment until I get through with the other question. That I assume no man will deny, and if he does, the proof is in the papers I have quoted from, taken before committees of the Legislature of New York and elsewhere. The facts admitted and proved demonstrate the truth of my position. As to the other matter, relative to the foreign importers and their combinations——

Mr. SHERMAN. Before you go any further——

Mr. BECK. Let me answer as to the foreign importers, as that was the last suggestion. The foreign importers can not combine unless the American consumer wants to buy. Who buys foreign-made goods here? Foreigners do not buy anything here; the individual American citizen alone buys; and he buys with his own money that he has earned by labor at home in some form; of course he only buys when the men bring goods from abroad and offer them cheaper than he can buy them at home.

Mr. STEWART. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. SHERMAN. I wish to ask a question.

Mr. BECK. Foreigners may combine to put up prices as much as they please, but they can not sell anything in America unless they sell it cheaper than the home price after they have paid the tax.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask the Senator whether he is able to state to the Senate any trust of great American production, such as cotton goods and woolen goods or any other great department of American industry competing with foreign countries? I ask whether there are such trusts? On the other hand, I ask whether the trusts in this country which are exciting the attention of the country do not arise out of domestic productions, where they can combine together and have no competing market abroad, like cotton-seed oil, the Standard Oil Company, and whisky and the sugar refiners? These are the trusts. There are also trusts of foreigners, who combine their productions and hold them in trust by trustees here, and those give us the worst form of trust, that of foreign importations.

I ask the Senator to state now, and this is a serious matter, what large branch of American industry now competing with foreign countries is protected by trusts? Is there a trust among the cotton manufacturers, the woolen manufacturers, or the iron and steel manufacturers?

Mr. BECK. Yes.

Mr. SHERMAN. Not in this country. Is there a trust in boots and shoes? I can show you that the foreigners have trusts in all these things, and one of the great trusts in Belgium, right in sight of the battle-field of Waterloo, created almost a revolution in Belgium. But they are foreign trusts. This plan of trusts is a foreign importation, and our domestic producers have not yet fallen into the habit of protecting themselves. Perhaps they will.

Mr. BECK. I am asked if I can point out any great American industry that has gone into a trust or a combination. I have before me at least half a dozen, and there are plenty more of them.

Mr. SHERMAN. What are they?

Mr. BECK. The great steel-rail trust.

Mr. SHERMAN. There is no such trust.

Mr. BECK. Here they are laid down and quoted from the Bulletin——

Mr. CHACE. There is no such thing as a steel-rail trust in this country.

Mr. BECK. I know that there is, and we have known it for years. I have seen, and the Senator from Ohio knows it well, the Vulcan works at St. Louis closed some years ago and 700 men turned out of employment at one time, and a bonus of $150,000 was paid to those works as part of the great steel-rail trust to keep them from overproducing and to keep the price up in this country. The Senator from Ohio was on the Committee on Finance when all that was developed, and the Vulcan works lay there idle for a year. We saw the salt works at Kanawha closed, and dead rent was paid to them for years to keep them from competing with the Ohio Valley salt and underselling it. Here is a statement in regard to the steel-rail trust in the New York Times, to which I heretofore referred. I do not want to take time to read it all, but here it is. I ask the Secretary to read this article about the steel-rail combination. I have not read it all myself, but there it is. I may be obliged to consume the day at it. If Senators want to keep this up, all right. Now go on reading.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the article referred to.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

STEEL RAILS.

The contest between the steel-rail "combine" and the great railroad companies over the price of rails seems to have come to an end, for the companies have recently given to the rail-makers orders for more than 500,000 tons of rails at the ruling price of $31.50. The companies were standing out for $30, and the makers were unwilling to take less than $34 or $35. All the old tales about the losses that must be incurred if rails should be sold for less than $32 or $33 were told again, but it appears that the "combine" has consented to make a quantity equal to one-quarter of the entire product of last year for $31.50. An attempt was made a few weeks ago in certain quarters to create the impression that the steel-rail industry had been blighted by the President's tariff message; but the truth was that the railroad companies had become weary of paying exorbitant prices and had determined to bring the ring to terms. During the great development of the railroad system in the West last year they had been forced to pay even $40 a ton. They did not propose to do this again. The Bulletin, organ of the "combine," complained piteously early in December that the companies withheld their orders. It said:

"A few large contracts in October and early in November for rails which must in any event be bought before the middle of winter would have helped wonderfully to arrest any tendency to dullness in the industries of the country. But instead of taking this course, which they could well have afforded to do, having plenty of money saved up from two years of prosperous business, these friends of ours virtually said to the steel-rail manufacturers that they would wait until prices were lower."

And then the companies were warned that low prices for rails "mean also low freight rates" and ruin generally. But the companies had their way. Of course the members of the association would have the people believe that it is nothing more than a social organization, while in fact it fixes the price and regulates the output of a product through whose cost the nation can be taxed. "Harmony prevailed," said the Tribune in its report of the association's meeting of November 15, "and it was agreed to leave the matter of output and other details to the board of control. Prices are to be maintained at current rates." One month later the same paper gave publicity to the statement that the association would "order all steel-rail mills closed if the price of rails should go below $32 a ton." When the ring finally made concessions and the orders were given the work was distributed. On the 1st instant it was announced that the Lackawanna Iron and Coal Company had sold 30,000 tons of rails. At the same time the following statement was made:

"The Lackawanna Company has now sold its full proportion of the allotment to all companies of 800,000 tons, and can take no further orders at present. The Bethlehem Company is in the same condition."

This was published upon the authority of Mr. B. E. Clarke, president of the Thomas Iron Company. The "allotment?" The board of control regulates the output and distributes the work.

The present association was formed two years ago, when the price was $27, and it was enabled by the extraordinary demand of last year to push the price up to $40. There are about a dozen rail mills, and they are all in it. The demand for English steel rails increased last year 47 per cent., but in spite of this the price was raised only 4 per cent. This appears to have been the regulating effect of competition. Here, in the absence of competition, an increased demand was accompanied by a great advance in the price. While making a public address at Erie, in October, 1886, Hon. WILLIAM L. SCOTT declared that he had bought, eighteen months earlier, 10,000 tons of home-made steel rails at $25.50 per ton, and that the sellers were "perfectly satisfied with the price."

There was no "combine" at that time. The association was formed some months after this purchase, and at the date of Mr. SCOTT's speech the price was $33. The advance in cost of production had not exceeded 10 per cent. Allowing for that, and assuming that at $25.50 there was a fair profit, the rate of $33 yielded an additional profit of $5. The price has since been $40; probably the average for last year was not less than $36, and upon the basis of Mr. SCOTT's figures this price afforded a profit of $8 a ton in addition to a fair profit. Upon the year's production of 2,050,000 tons (for 1886 it was 1,562,000) this profit would be $16,400,000. The normal profit may have been $6,000,000 or $8,000,000 more. The 12,724 miles of new road laid last year required 1,300,000 tons of rails, if the weight of those used was 65 pounds to the yard, so that the extra or ring profit on these was more than $10,000,000. The reduction of price to $31.50 shows that the profits yielded last summer, when the price was $39 or $40, were extraordinary. All this excessive profit comes out of the people. As Mr. SCOTT said, "The railroads simply advance the money, and it is you who travel over the railroads, and who transport your merchandise and produce over them, who in the end pay this immense profit to the manufacturers." In the same speech Mr. SCOTT referred to the success of "a subject of the Queen" who had gone into the business of making iron and steel at Pittsburgh. "I know positively," said he, "that although he did not own the entire works he drew out of that establishment during a period of three hundred days profits amounting to $5,000 per day, or $1,500,000 in one year." Possibly he had in mind Mr. Carnegie, whose rail factory is in the "combine." He also said:

"Less than a year ago I was talking with a friend of mine on this question of steel rails. He probably purchases more steel rails than any man in the United States. I said to him, 'These mills are putting up rails pretty fast. Don't you think they ought to stop?' 'Yes,' said he, 'I think they ought to.' Said he, 'You know how the iron industries have been for the last few years—apparently hardly alive. But do you know one thing?' and then calling a certain iron and steel company in Pennsylvania by name, he said, 'That company represents a capital of $10,000,000. You know how the iron and steel industries have been depressed, and yet I know that the principal bone of contention in the board of directors of that company for some time has been whether or not they should make an extra dividend of $10,000,000.'"

And at the time of that conversation the price of rails was below $30. The average for the year 1885 was only $28.50. Well might the Philadelphia Times, a protectionist journal, say a month ago, "Of these trusts or combines which are now hanging like millstones around the neck of protection the steel-rail trust is the most defiant of common fairness, and most false to the protection that created it and gave millions of profits to its investors."

Mr. BECK. The Senator from Ohio, I think, is satisfied that there is at least a great steel-rail trust.

Mr. SHERMAN. On the contrary, if the Senator will allow me, the combination made between steel works, as I understand it, is not a trust. There was no trust formed, no common interest.

Mr. BECK. Call it a pool; call it a combine.

Mr. SHERMAN. It was what they call a combine, an agreement among certain manufacturers to try to advance the price. That has always existed, and with cotton it has existed; but what I mean by a trust is where persons engaged in a common business pool their capital. Take the case recently disclosed of the cotton-seed oil trust. While I am opposed to all these trusts and to all unlawful combinations, yet I say to the Senator from Kentucky, if he will examine it patiently and not be in a hurry about it, he will find that the great objectionable trusts in this country are either combinations of the producers of domestic articles where they have no foreign competition, as in the case of cotton-seed and whisky and oil, and they are great combinations, or in the case of foreign importations, where a few people engaged in foreign trade in a particular article can combine. But if the Senator from Kentucky will look to it he will find very few, if any; and I am told by representatives of those who manufacture that there are very few, and it is impossible to make a trust of any great article of domestic production coming into competition with foreign production, like cotton.

Mr. BECK. Would the Senator like to hear a statement about the copper trust read from the desk?

Mr. SHERMAN. As a matter of course the copper trade is one participated in by several nations. I have no objection to the Senator reading all the newspapers on the subject he chooses.

Mr. BECK. For the gratification of the Senator from Ohio, I will ask that the two articles—they are long, I agree—giving the sugar trust, the copper trust, the iron trust, and the other trusts that are exhibited in the papers, taken from the New York Times of February 20 and 27, shall be inserted as part of my remarks. The Reporter may select such as he likes.

Mr. SHERMAN. They are only an illustration of what I have already said. In this country we have control of the copper market.

Mr. BECK. Certainly; and we have by a tax on copper of I do not recollect how many cents a pound—probably four now, it was six once—prohibited any competition with those people. Wherever trusts are possible, competition is rendered impossible. The tariff has made it possible to bring about these trusts and destroy competition, because by the tariff we have excluded the rest of the world from competing with our Congressional pets, and have prevented our own people from buying, except from the protected combinations.

I said before that in the case of the Standard Oil Company, where we produce more and cheaper oil perhaps than anybody else, perhaps in the case of cotton-seed oil, combinations can be formed because we produce it cheaper than it can be imported; but is that a reason why all the people of the country should be excluded by trusts and combinations, through an average of 50 per cent. ad valorem tax on everything, from buying the goods that they need where they can buy them cheaply, especially when they seek to buy them in the markets where they are compelled to sell what they labor to produce? I will hand these articles to the Reporter, long as they are, for him to insert what he can, and then Senators can read them for themselves. They are very valuable. I had no idea of going into a debate on that subject now. I thought I might take part in it some of these days, but Senators seem anxious to press it now, and the information will be valuable for future reference. Let the articles be printed.

The articles referred to are as follows:

TRUSTS AND COMBINATIONS—SUGAR.

The demand for sugar in this country is supplied by the refiners, in whose factories the raw sugars from abroad or from the plantations of Louisiana are prepared for use. The schedule of tariff duties on the several grades of sugar is so arranged that the rates on foreign sugar which would compete with the refiners' product are prohibitory. The duty on foreign raw sugars which are not above No. 13, Dutch standard, in color, ranges from 1.40 to 2.40 cents a pound, according to their comparative purity as determined by the polariscope. These are the sugars which pass through the refineries, and the duty collected upon them last year was more than $56,000,000. The grade most largely imported and refined is that which contains more than 94 but not more than 95 per cent. of pure sugar, and the rate of duty on it is 2.20 cents a pound. The rates of duty upon the grades above No. 13, Dutch standard, range from 2⅞ to 3½ cents, but the value of such sugars imported last year was only $14,503. The country, then, depends upon the refiners for its supply.

The refiners have recently formed a trust monopoly upon the plan used by the Standard Oil speculators. The trust appears to have been completed in October last. "It may be considered a settled fact," said Messrs. Willett and Hamlen in their circular of October 16, "that a combination has been completed, including all the New York sugar refineries and the Boston refineries, with one exception, thus bringing under the management and control of a committee of eleven refiners almost the entire consumption of raw sugar and production of refined sugar in the United States." At that time there were outside of the ring two refineries in Philadelphia, one in Boston, three small ones in New Orleans, one in St. Louis, and two in San Francisco. A few days later the St. Louis and New Orleans refineries were absorbed. It is reported that the Revere Refinery, in Boston, will soon cease to have an independent existence. Even if it should remain outside of the trust its attitude would be entirely satisfactory to the ring. "The best possible relations exist between the trust and the outside companies," said one of the owners of the refinery a few days ago. "Between us and the trust there is no fight. Granulated sugar now brings 7⅛ cents a pound. Suppose we put the figures down to 6 cents. Why, it would simply be gobbled up by the trust through its agents, and would do the consumer no good. The prices rising are adopted by us, and as our small output does not threaten the trust we arouse no antagonism and go on making money."

At last accounts the two refineries in San Francisco had not come in, but their operations are a matter of little concern to the trust. The monopolists have made their compact in secrecy. Even to this day prominent sugar-men connected with the trust do not admit that it exists. But it is understood that the value of the pooled property was about $15,000,000, for which trust certificates were issued in the ratio of 4 to 1, so that the inflated certificate capital is $60,000,000. A sale of a block of these certificates has been made at 80, which would indicate a belief on the part of some one that the value of the property has been raised from $15,000,000 to $48,000,000 by the monopoly process. The trust is governed by ten directors or trustees. Three votes are cast, it is said, by Havemeyer & Elder, two by the Matthiessen & Weichers Company, one by the Brooklyn Refining Company, one by Dick & Meyer, one by the Boston Sugar Refining Company, one by the Standard Refining Company of Boston, and one by the refineries of New Orleans. By common report, the president is Harry O. Havemeyer, and the secretary and treasurer is J. H. Searles. The Boston trustees are Charles O. Foster and Captain Thomas.

These ten trust magnates sitting in council can by one vote raise the price of sugar for more than fifty million people. Nothing is required beyond a motion, the seconding of it, the calling of the roll, and the issuing of instructions to the trust's agents. The people are powerless. They must pay the trust's price or go without sugar. Even the refiners through whose mills in New Orleans passes the sugar of the protected planters of Louisiana have conspired against them.

The trust exercises enormous power. The quantity of sugar consumed in the United States last year exceeded 3,000,000,000 pounds. An advance of half a cent per pound on this quantity is $15,000,000; 1 cent brings $30,000,000, 2 cents yield $60,000,000. Let us see what has happened in the sugar trade since the trust was formed. The Tribune said a few days ago: "At present it (the trust) is demanding 56 per cent. of the cost of raw sugar as its additional charge for refined; in January, 1887, the additional charge was 35 per cent., and in January, 1886, it was 32 per cent." The trust has depressed the price of raw sugars brought to this country for sale to be refined, and at the same time has raised the price of the refined product. For example, a cargo of raw Manila sugar was sold in this port on January 6 at the rate of 4⅛ cents a pound. Three weeks later a cargo of the same kind was sold at 4½ cents, because there was and could be only one buyer and bidder—the trust—and the trust did not choose to pay any more. Just before these sales were made the Tribune said, "Since it (the trust) became a fixed fact 'cut loaf' has gone up to 7¾ cents a pound, granulated to 6¾, and the soft sugars have all advanced. Raw sugar, on the contrary, has a downward tendency." Why? Simply because the protected trust buys raw sugar and sells refined. A few days ago the price of crushed sugar had been pushed up to 8 cents; it has since been permitted to fall one-fourth of a cent, possibly because certain conservative trustees saw that the pace was too hot.

An anonymous circular, written by some one familiar with the refining business, declares that the trust has already made a profit of 12 per cent. on its inflated certificate capital ($60,000,000) or 48 per cent. on the estimated value of the property put into the ring. Is it probable that the operations of four months have yielded so much? Such a dividend would be $7,200,000. We have said that a profit of 1 cent a pound upon one year's consumption of sugar in the United States is more than $30,000,000. In the first week of October, when the trust is said to have been completed, the price of cut loaf and of crushed sugar was from 6⅜ to 6½ cents and that of granulated was 6. Three weeks later the price of cut loaf and crushed had risen to 7 cents. At the beginning of January it was 7⅛, while that of granulated was 7. In the second week of January and at the beginning of February the price of cut loaf and crushed was 8 cents; that of granulated was 7½. On the 17th instant the price had receded to 7⅞ for cut loaf and crushed and 6⅞ for granulated. These quotations show that after the formation of the trust prices were advanced from 1⅛ to 1⅜ cents for cut loaf and crushed, and 1 cent for granulated, and that of this advance 1¼ cents in one case and three-fourths of a cent in the other are still maintained. And on the 17th instant, when the price of cut loaf and crushed was greater by 1¼ cents, and that of granulated by five-eighths of a cent, than on October 10, the prices of "fair refining" and "centrifugal" sugars were even less than on that date. A profit of 1 cent a pound on the entire quantity consumed in four months would be more than $10,000,000. Has not the average additional profit of the trust in the last four months been nearly 1 cent a pound? The estimate of a 12 per cent. profit on $60,000,000, or $7,200,000, does not seem to be far out of the way after all.

While the trust has the power to depress the price of raw sugar and raise the price of refined directly by its bid or decree, it also affects the market by reducing the supply. Since it was formed at least four of its refineries have been closed. Said one of the owners of the Revere Refinery (the independent but friendly factory in Boston) a few days ago, "Really we are benefited by the trust. It has, for instance, in this city four refineries. Now, to decrease production so as to raise the price they shut down three of these for the winter." A special dispatch from Boston to the Chicago Tribune, dated the 3d instant, contains the following description of the work of the trust there:

"When the sugar trust went into operation the public was assured that the combination would not close down any refineries, and that the price of sugar would not be put up, the trust being able to make a fair profit because of the decreased cost of manufacture. Careful inquiry, however, shows that the trade in this city is demoralized, that the majority of the refineries are shut down, and that a large number of men are thrown out of employment, with no hope of getting work this winter. There are five sugar refineries in Boston: The Revere, in East Cambridge; the Boston, in Marshall street; the Continental, in Granite street; the Standard, in Granite street, and the Bay State, in Eastern avenue. Last summer all these refineries were running, employing 1,500 men, and incidentally giving employment to a large number of teamsters, freight-handlers, and seamen. But the Continental Refinery, in anticipation of the trust, shut down in November, and not a barrel of sugar has been turned out since that date. The men are discharged, with the exception of some of the expert workmen and the superintendent. The Standard Refinery has a capacity of 2,000 barrels a day, and is now running on small capacity after a month of idleness. The force now employed there is not nearly so large as formerly. The Bay State Refinery, which has a capacity of 1,000 barrels a day, is shut down, and except, as in the case of the Continental, that a few expert men are under half pay, has discharged its complement of workmen. The Boston Refinery, with a capacity of 2,000, is shut down and does no work whatever. The Revere Refinery is to be sold to the Boston and Maine Railroad soon, and then to be closed."

This shows how solicitous the managers of one protected industry are for the welfare of the workingman. The refining business is protected by duties on refined sugar that are prohibitory. In this region the trust has shut up four of its factories. The fourth to be closed was that of Moller, Sierck & Co., at 502 Kent avenue, Brooklyn. Fifteen hundred sugar workmen in that city were recently reported to be out of employment. Their wages had been low even when there was work for them; lower, some of them say, than wages for the same work in England, although refining here is protected by a duty of from 87 to 89 per cent. It is plain that a reduction of the tariff rate on raw sugars might not aid the consumer, but only increase the trust's profits. The ring would get its raw material just so much cheaper and could maintain the price of the refined product of its factories. What the people should demand is such a change of the schedule and such a reduction of rates now prohibitory as will admit raw sugars of high grade and refined sugars in competition with the monopoly's product.

MONOPOLIES IN TRADE—COPPER.

Last year saw the beginning of a gigantic speculation in metals. This year may see the end of it, but there is reason to believe that it will be continued for two or three years. While other metals have been handled, it is with copper that the speculators have been most successful and most daring. It is not a trust that the speculators have made, but a world corner prolonged and upheld by contracts. There is no formal combination of mining companies, no board of trustees holding all the stock and issuing certificates, but the great mines of the world consent to surrender their whole product for a term of years to one buyer, who undertakes to insure to them a certain price and to supply the world from his store. Such is the scheme which was devised last fall by a man who has leaped to the front rank of the world's speculators, M. Eugène Secretan, of Paris.

M. Secretan is the managing director of the Société Industrielle et Commerciale des Métaux, the largest metal manufacturing corporation in the world, whose output of copper in a manufactured form is 25,000 tons per annum, or about one-ninth of the world's annual product of that metal. Among the société's shareholders are some of the wealthiest capitalists of France. M. Secretan is said to have made a fortune by the manufacture of cartridges during the Franco-Prussian war. He sold his business to a company which was formed with a capital of $5,000,000 under the auspices of the Comptoir d'Escompte, one of the oldest banks of Paris. The capital is now reported to be $9,000,000, and it will soon be raised to $15,000,000. But while the organization serves to support M. Secretan's assertion that he invades the copper market as a manufacturer, it does not supply him with the vast resources which he uses. "The whole thing has been managed by me," says M. Secretan, "in behalf of the Société des Métaux," but it is understood that some of the greatest of European capitalists stand behind him. At ruling prices the annual output of the world's copper mines is worth about $85,000,000, and the Secretan syndicate proposes to control three years' supply, at the same time making heavy investments in other metals and in mining shares.

Cornerers do not usually approach the market with a brass band, but in this case there are peculiar reasons for secrecy. The four hundred and nineteenth article of the Code Napoléon was intended to prevent the strangling of competition and the restraint of trade by corners and "combines," and some of the troublesome people of Paris have urged the enforcement of it against the members of this copper ring. So M. Secretan says there is no ring or syndicate, and talks about the immense resources of the copper company and the philanthropic motives which send him to the market as a buyer. "Our only purpose," he says, "is that every miner, dealer, and manufacturer shall have fair remuneration for his work. We want to put the copper trade on a sound and healthy basis."

The demand for copper has considerably increased in the last few years, and the supply has risen about 40 per cent. since 1880. The visible supply was falling rapidly, however, last fall, when the Frenchmen began to buy, and the price was low. In August the visible supply was 66,000 tons; on October 1 it was 49,000 tons, and the price of Chili copper was £39 15*s*. The Frenchmen first set out to get possession of all the copper in sight and for sale. In a short time they held more than 30,000 tons. The price advanced, and every one interested in copper mines was ready to lend a hand. In January the price of Chili bars rose to £85 12*s*. 6*d*., and it is now in the neighborhood of £79. Lake Superior copper rose in this market from 10½ to 17¾ cents a pound, and is now about 16½.

All recent wheat corners have broken down, and those who made them have lost heavily or been ruined, because the operators miscalculated the size of the supply and were unable either to buy the quantity offered or to control the price of it by agreement with holders. The Frenchmen, having what seemed to be enormous resources, undertook to hold up their corner at its most critical stage until agreements could be made, not with opposing speculators who desired to sell for a fall, but with the producers themselves, who desired to maintain high prices. And in this work of putting a great part of the world's supply of copper under bond no one could succeed who could not show power to carry out the terms of the contracts. The progress thus far made is evidence that M. Secretan and his associates have displayed that power to the satisfaction of shrewd capitalists in America. Their plan was to buy at a stipulated price the product of copper mines for three years. How many mines have entered into contracts with them?

The total product of copper in 1886 is estimated to have been 212,500 tons, of which 69,800 were supplied by the United States, 49,600 by Spain and Portugal, 35,000 by Chili, 14,400 by Germany, 10,000 by Japan, 9,700 by Australia, 6,000 by South Africa, and 18,000 from other sources. More than half of the entire product is furnished by only six mines. The syndicate at the beginning controlled the Chilian product by enormous purchases of Chilian copper, both spot and futures. At least one of the Chili mines has accepted the syndicate's terms, and it seems probable that the whole Chilian output for three years was under control some time ago. The Namaqua Company of South Africa has issued a circular stating that its ores have been sold to the ring for three years. The three great mines of the Iberian peninsula are the Rio Tinto, the Tharsis, and the Mason & Barry. Control of the Rio Tinto appears to have been obtained by purchasing the company's shares on the Paris Bourse and in other markets. The par value of the shares is £10, and they were selling at £7½ in October. The syndicate is said to have bought 100,000 shares. The price has recently been in the neighborhood of £22. If the managers of the mine were hesitating about accepting the syndicate's offer these heavy purchases were sufficient to turn the scale. The Tharsis and the Mason & Barry made contracts on or about February 1. The product of this country in 1886 was 69,800 tons. Last year the Anaconda mine in Montana, we learn from the Engineering and Mining Journal, almost doubled its output, and the total was raised to 79,100 tons. The Calumet and Hecla mine, in the Lake region, and the Anaconda, in Montana, supplied last year more than 71 per cent. of the entire annual product in the United States. The copper of the first-named mine is the finest in the world; that of the second is of lower grade. Of course M. Secretan longed to obtain control of these great deposits. Without them his purpose could not be attained.

For various reasons, some of them not unconnected with the tariff and the natural indignation aroused when a viper stings the hand that has warmed it, the details of the contracts made by the very large American companies have not been trumpeted from the housetops, but the facts seem to be pretty well known in copper markets, especially in Boston, and the syndicate's agents have recently spoken freely as to their employers' undertakings. The syndicate broker in this city declares that the Anaconda mine, which is owned in part by a Senator of the United States, "was the first to go into the combination." Mr. D. L. Demmon, treasurer of the Franklin mine, tells the Boston Herald that the price named in the contract for Anaconda copper was 11 cents, and that the same price is to be paid for the product of the Boston and Montana mine. The Boston Commercial Bulletin reports that the price is 11 cents for 100,000,000 pounds of Boston and Montana copper to be delivered in the next three years. The Boston and Montana "is managed by the Tamarack people," and about the Tamarack's contract there is no room for doubt. It is for 50,000,000 pounds in the next three years at 13 cents a pound, with the understanding that 5,000,000 more will be taken at the same rate, if produced. Tamarack stock has advanced from 90 to 170. As for the Calumet and Hecla, the price of shares has rapidly risen from 190 to 250 (par 25), in response to buying orders said to come from ex-Congressman Jay Hubbell and other stockholders familiar with the company's business, and the statement is generally accepted that it has sold its product at 13 cents. The syndicate's broker in this city says the mine has come in, and Treasurer Demmon says in the Boston Herald of February 20: "Then (after the bargain with the Anaconda) the Calumet, the big Juggernaut of the copper trade, sold out, guarantying 180,000,000 pounds in three years.

While the Calumet people will not admit it, it is very well assured, and the agents of the syndicate have admitted the purchase."

If it be assumed that the Calumet and Hecla and the Anaconda will continue to produce copper as freely as they did in 1887, and that the other mines will reach the limit of their contracts, and that the agreements mentioned as having been made really exist, it appears that M. Secretan and his party have secured control here of an annual product amounting to 163,500,000 pounds, or only 14,000,000 pounds less than the entire product of this country last year. And as these speculators control the Spanish and Chilian mines and a South African mine, there seems to be fairly satisfactory evidence that they have attained their purpose, and have under their hands for some time to come three-fourths of the world's supply of copper.

The contracts contain important provisions besides those which relate to the sale of a mine's product at a specified price. The London Economist of January 28 said, "The so-called French syndicate are making strenuous endeavors to draw together into one great combination all the important producers of copper in the world, their object, of course, being to restrict production and maintain prices at a high point. Their procedure, we believe, is as follows: The syndicate, on their part, agree to maintain copper at a minimum market price of, say, £60 per ton (Chili bars) for three years, or to take up all copper on that basis if the market price falls below £60, while the copper-producing companies agree to restrict their output to a definite amount, determined by their production in the past few years and their present capacity. In addition, the arrangements provide, we believe, for a division between the syndicate and the companies of the sums realized from sales of copper at prices above the minimum, but the terms differ in individual cases." It is also reported from other sources that the limit is £65. The first-mentioned price is about 13½ cents a pound, and at £65 the rate per pound is about 14½, on the basis of Chilian copper, which is not worth so much as the copper of the Lake Superior mines.

As we have said, Chili bars are now £79, and Lake copper is about 16½ cents. It is urged that the high price will stimulate production, and that the ring's purpose will be defeated by a large increase of the world's supply. But such an increase must come slowly if it is to be caused by the development of new mines, and if the ring's contracts hold fast the production of the old mines will be limited. Moreover, certain small mines not in the ring will hold up the price because the cost of producing their copper is high. The mines which can sell copper profitably at very low prices are all controlled by the syndicate. For example, the cost of production and shipping to this market from the Tamarack mine is only 5.39 cents a pound, and the cost of production in the Calumet and Hecla is in the neighborhood of 6½ cents. If abandoned mines where the cost of production was 10 cents or more are reopened, they will not come into the market to cut down the price. The London Money Market Review recently said, "The condition of the entire copper interest of the world a few months ago, before these French operations commenced, was simply deplorable. The mines everywhere were being worked at starvation prices to all concerned; to all it was a question not of profit, but of how to minimize loss." It is by such assertions as these that the speculators and the mine-owners attempt to appease the people. But look at some of the facts. The Tamarack company admits in its last official report that the total cost of producing and laying down in this city its copper was last year only 5.39 cents a pound, while the average price received was 12.88. The Calumet and Hecla, upon a capital of $2,500,000, has declared in less than twenty years about $30,000,000 in dividends, and its stock is selling at ten times its par value.

This French ring would not have been able to tax the world by monopolizing copper if the mines of the United States had not consented to assist. This should be remembered by the American people, and we are sure it will not be forgotten; for if the ring shall be successful the American people may be compelled to pay even more for copper than the price in any other part of the world. They will be forced to buy their copper of M. Secretan in Paris. He will own the product of the American mines, and will dole it out to them. He will even have it stored in France. As the copper is delivered under the ring contracts, it is shipped across the ocean. It was stated in the Times of January 31 that in the first twenty-three days of the month there had been exported 4,062,049 pounds of fine copper (as against only 272,500 for the same period last year) and 6,777,976 pounds of copper matte and ore (as against only 49,500 last year) and that the exports for the entire month would be equivalent to 10,000,000 pounds of fine copper. The average monthly product last year was less than 15,000,000 pounds. M. Secretan proposes to keep his property where he can see it. We take from the New York Tribune the following remarks of the ring's buying agent in this market:

"At the present rate of exports (February 4) it will not be long before American consumers will have to buy American copper from the hands of the French syndicate. When that time comes the rates which will govern the market will depend on the good nature of the French syndicate, just as the price of tin does now. The prices in the American market will be independent of those in the English and French markets, because in the latter the competition of other producers will be more felt. American consumers may therefore make up their minds to pay the highest price for copper in the world."

And Treasurer Demmon, of the Franklin mine, tells the Boston Herald:

"The manufacturing trade (in the United States) is in a state of mutiny. It says that it won't pay 16 cents to a French syndicate for copper; that it will shut up its mills first. 'Very well,' say the Frenchmen, 'shut up your mills, then.'"

The American mines, which, it is believed, have thus delivered American consumers into the hands of a French ring, and thereby, in all probability, checked the progress of many home industries and enabled these foreigners to collect tribute from the people of the United States, have enjoyed for many years the favors of a protective tariff. They have asked the people for protection, and have in return for it, even in years past, deliberately sold their copper abroad at prices much lower than the prices exacted by them at home from their protectors, because the imposition of a high duty enabled them to do this by placing the home market at their mercy. The ad valorem rate of duty last year on copper ore was 49.63 per cent.; on copper it was 41.50 per cent. It is said that at one time the difference between the protected miners' prices to foreigners and their prices to their own fellow-citizens was so great that Calumet and Hecla copper was bought in London, imported to New York, and sold here in competition with other copper from the same mine which had never crossed the ocean.

The New York Tribune, which urges everybody to support high-tariff rates, because, it asserts, they cause cheapness through competition in the home market, has said that the dividends paid by the Calumet and Hecla mine between 1870 and 1883, upon a capital of only $2,500,000, amounted to $23,500,000. Additions since 1883 have, it is said, raised the total to $30,000,000. And it is estimated in Boston that by supporting the Secretan ring the company has provided for an annual dividend of more than 100 per cent. This is the gratitude of the copper barons who have used the protection granted by the American people as an instrument for extorting money from the same people, and whose riches were heaped up by the aid of legislation which blotted out the copper-smelting industry on the Atlantic coast, and in that way raised a barrier between the United States and Chili, diverting to Europe trade which naturally should come to us.

The people of this country who must submit to the exactions of the French ring have no remedy as against the members of that ring. Nor is it clear that they can prevent the sale of the product of American mines for a term of years to the ring, although such sale may create a burdensome monopoly. But they can cut off the duties on copper, and thus be prepared to take advantage of any weakness or dispute which shall disrupt the syndicate and restore competition. Secretan and his fellow-conspirators have a great task before them. They may fail. If the ring should be broken, the failure of the speculators and their ungrateful allies ought to find the people of the United States free to enjoy the benefits of competition in the copper market, from whatever quarter of the globe they may be offered.

If this corner prolonged by contracts shall have stability, the people will soon feel the effect of its creation. In the last few years copper has been very largely used in articles formerly made of other metals. Brass has taken the place of iron in fenders, signs, railings, and ornamental work. Copper wire has been substituted for iron wire for electrical uses in many instances. Thousands of workmen are employed in the manufacture of hardware, utensils, notions, ornaments, etc., out of brass and copper.

The development of practical electrical science has notably increased the consumption of the metal. M. Secretan himself told the Pall Mall Gazette last month, with a chuckle, that "to light London alone would take a fifth of the present year's supplies to England and France." The people may be required to pay more for electric lights, and the ring's work may check the development of electricity as a motive power for street-railways and other enterprises. The London Economist states, as shown above, that the contracts require the output to be restricted. It does not appear, however, that they require the output to be reduced. At least such a condition is not indicated by the limits assigned in the cases of some of the mines, if those limits have been correctly published. The ring evidently believes that a greater demand in certain directions will make up for a smaller consumption in others. "If the production remains as at present," said M. Secretan a few weeks ago, "there is enough for the consumption of the world." And again, "Consumption is bound to increase by the advance of telegraphy, telephony, and electric lighting."

Mr. BECK. The enormous tariff taxation imposed by our present system, I repeat, makes these trusts possible and keeps up the unjust taxation which gentlemen are so anxious to maintain that they are willing to squander money in any way to keep from its being interfered with, and are so anxious to give the dear people free whisky and free tobacco because the tax on those articles all goes into the Treasury to pay the expenses of the Government, its pensions included, while the tariff taxation only goes into the Treasury to the extent of about one-third of the tax imposed. The trusts and combined plunderers get the lion's share of it. The great enormity of this system of taxation is that it is paid by the great body of the poorest, hardest-working portion of the people, three-fourths of it, because three-fourths of the people live by pursuits connected with agriculture, directly or indirectly. They have to sell all that they obtain and all that they labor from year's end to year's end to produce in foreign markets or at foreign market prices, even when sold at home, in competition with all the so-called paupers whom gentlemen here are pretending to be so anxious to protect American manufacturers against. When cotton falls in Liverpool it falls correspondingly in New Orleans. When wheat falls in London it falls in Chicago. When tobacco falls in Berlin or Paris it falls in Louisville. The surplus is so great that the foreign price regulates the price of the whole commodity, and regulates the price of the goods sold here as well as the price of that which has to go abroad. New labor-saving machinery is being invented every day all over the world. That machinery is driving out of the manufacturing establishments the human labor that used to eat what the farmer produced and wear the manufactures of cotton and of the wool that was raised on the backs of the farmers' sheep.

There is not one man in proportion to product in a manufacturing establishment to-day in America where thirty years ago there were ten. Some years ago I went through a manufacturing establishment in Connecticut. I felt a just pride in the ingenuity of the people of that great State. I saw Bessemer steel that at one time could not be made into anything smaller than rails put red-hot into a machine in blocks and come out wire, two little boys watching it to see that the machine worked regularly; then the wire was put into another machine and came out pins, pointed, headed, and counted, twelve dozen in a paper. One girl stood by the side of the hopper and took them out. Twenty years ago it would have required forty people, at least, to make a like number of pins in the same time, with the machinery of that day. I do not know whether a hundred could have done so. So it is with everything else. Our manufacturers, seeking to supply the American market only, can not begin to consume the surplus products of the American farmer.

By our greatly increased railroad system, 11,000 miles having been added to it last year, and over 40,000 miles in the last eight years, with 500,000 people coming yearly from Germany, from Ireland, and from all the civilized countries of Europe, adding to the great productions of agriculture which are swelling every day and can not be stopped, with the means of transportation so vastly increased, we must go into the markets of the world with our agricultural products which form three-fourths of our exports now. The machinery that is owned by a few men, as I said, is driving human labor out of the manufacturing establishments. There is where the iniquity of the trusts and combinations to keep up prices to double what they ought to be becomes infamous. They refuse to produce, and drive their laborers into enforced idleness, which to them means starvation. With 60,000,000 people in this country from whom they can extort nearly twice what the goods are worth, they willingly surrender the trade of all the outside world, civilized and savage. The trade with 1,500,000,000 of consumers outside of the United States is given up under our policy to England, France, and Germany, or anybody who sees fit to take it. Our manufacturer disdains to compete with paupers. The farmer does not want to compete or sell in competition with paupers any more than the manufacturer; but he has to do it; his wheat meets with that produced by the ryots of India in all European markets, with that produced by the serf of Russia, with the wheat brought from the Baltic and from the Mediterranean and everywhere else. He has to sell as low as any pauper will sell like goods in open market. So our cotton has to be sold, so has our tobacco, so has the live stock, the pork, and everything else.

Yet a system is devised here by which the producer, who is thus compelled to sell, can not take the money he gets for the grain, the tobacco, the cotton, the cattle, the hogs, and everything that he raises, after selling them in open market at the prices that every so-called pauper gets for his, to buy the blankets, the hats, the utensils, the machinery, and other things that he and his wife and children must have without paying 50 per cent. more than they are offered to him for at the place where he had to sell, to a set of combinations and trusts, who are fairly entitled to be called legalized robbers, who through their lobbyists in Washington have made themselves rich by law, by ruining the labor of the country. That is substantially the situation at present.

To show how the system is now working, I have before me the report of our own Bureau of Statistics. It tells the whole story. We exported 153,000,000 bushels of wheat in 1880, at an average of $1.24 a bushel. In 1885 we exported 57,000,000 bushels at 87 cents; the last part of 1886 it was down to 84 cents a bushel. What was happening elsewhere? Our decrease in exports, according to the report of the Chief of the Bureau of Statistics, was a decrease of 61 per cent. in the loss of exports and 70 per cent. in the loss of value. Here is the table:

DECLINE IN OUR EXPORTS OF WHEAT.

According to the statistics furnished by the Chief of Bureau of Statistics, the exports of wheat from the United States for the fiscal years ending with June 30, from 1879-'80 to 1885-'86, are as follows:

Year.	Bushels.	Value.	Average per bushel.
1879-'80	153,252,795	$190,546,305	$1.244
1880-'81	150,565,477	167,698,485	1.114
1881-'82	95,271,802	112,929,718	1.185
1882-'83	106,385,828	119,879,341	1.127
1883-'84	70,349,012	75,026,678	1.066
1884-'85	84,653,714	72,933,097	.862
1885-'86	57,759,209	50,262,715	.870
July to December 6, 1886	43,604,883	36,775,228	.842

Our decrease in exports, according to the report of the Chief of Statistics, see Annual Report 1886, page 3, is given as follows:

Year.	Bushels.	Value.
1881	150,565,477	$167,698,485
1886	57,759,209	50,262,715
Decrease	92,806,368	117,435,770

Equal to 61.7 per cent. loss in exports, and 70.2 per cent. in value.

INCREASE OF EXPORTS OF WHEAT FROM INDIA.

While we have rapidly decreased our exports of wheat to Europe, India has made rapid strides in her exports.

In the report of the Chief of the Bureau of Statistics for June, 1886, we extract from page 37 the following facts:

Exports of wheat from India, from official accounts of British India office, for the fiscal years 1879 '80 to 1885 '86.

While the American exports of wheat have dwindled down from 153,000,000 bushels in 1879 to 57,000,000 bushels in 1886, India's exports of wheat have risen from 4,000,000 bushels in 1879 to 39,000,000 in 1886. Or, in other words, while American exports of wheat have declined over 69 per cent., India's exports of wheat have increased over 900 per cent.

One of the leading causes of this fall in quantity of 60 per cent. and 70 per cent. in value in our wheat, and the reason why India is springing forward with giant strides as one of England's agricultural colonies to break us down in foreign markets, supplementing our tariff system, was our legislation in regard to our silver coinage. Let me tell the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] that we were broken down wherever India can compete, by the act that he, as chairman of the committee of conference in 1873, passed, striking down the silver coinage of this country in order to appreciate the price of gold and thus depreciate the price of all the products of the country, because appreciation of gold and depreciation of products mean the same thing. He may be President of the United States, but he will not be proud of the record that he made when he brought the wheat of this country from $1.24 down to 84 cents a bushel in order to make a few bondholders rich, and built up India at our expense.

India came to the front after 1873. When we were sending abroad 153,000,000 bushels, India was sending to England 4,000,000 bushels eight years ago. In 1886, when we sent 57,000,000 bushels, India was sending 39,000,000 bushels. She had risen from 4,000,000 to 39,000,000 bushels. We had fallen off from 153,000,000 bushels to 57,000,000 bushels in our wheat export. While the American exports of wheat have dwindled, as is stated in the report, from 153,000,000 bushels in 1879 to 57,000,000 bushels in 1886, India's exports of wheat have risen from 4,000,000 bushels in 1879 to 39,000,000 bushels in 1886, or, in other words, while the American exports of wheat have dwindled 60 per cent., India's exports of wheat have increased over 900 per cent.

And that was all said to be done in order to protect the American laborer; he was told that he should accept payment in nothing but gold coin, while the poor, ignorant people of India were willing to take silver. What brought about this condition of things? The Senator from Ohio is more responsible for it than anybody else. The record shows it. When Congress undertook to strike down our silver coinage at the dictation of England, and when Germany and England and the United States combined and struck it down secretly, so secretly that General Grant, who was then President, did not know it, though he signed the bill; Mr. Blaine, the then Speaker of the House, did not know it; Mr. Garfield did not know it; Mr. KELLEY, who had charge of the bill, did not know it—not one of the Argus-eyed reporters found it out. He is responsible for it. Mr. Hooper, of Massachusetts, was chairman of the conference that settled it on the part of the House, and Mr. SHERMAN was chairman on the part of the Senate. They knew it.

What has happened by the ignoring of silver or by that effort to drag it down as a factor in the world's trade? The American farmer sells his wheat, say, for $1,000, in competition with a like quantity of India wheat. He takes $1,000 for his wheat in any shape—gold, silver, or paper—all the same. What does the East India merchant who sold $1,000 of his wheat do? He takes $800 of that $1,000 and buys silver bullion in the London market and takes it to India, where silver coinage is free and gold is prohibited by law, and has it coined into $1,000 worth of silver rupees, the coin of that country, for nothing, and buys another $1,000 of wheat to take back to England with the proceeds of silver bullion that costs him $800 to the $1,000, while the American has to take his $1,000 as $1,000, for it is all the same whether he gets it in New York in silver, gold, or exchange, and he has to pay $1,000 for what the India merchant gets for $800 if he proposes to continue in the trade. So it is with cotton and hemp goods, and with all the articles India produces, until we are being driven from the markets of the world wherever she meets us.

Mr. HAWLEY. Will the Senator allow me to make a little correction of his history?

Mr. BECK. Yes, sir.

Mr. HAWLEY. He gives us to understand that the change in the relative values of gold and silver was brought about by some fraud, or that when it occurred—from present recollection I should say about February, 1873—it was without the knowledge of Congress.

I call the Senator's attention to the fact that it was done by legislation as public as any other, and I state from my personal knowledge that Mr. Hooper, who had that matter in charge, made bitter complaint because he could not get anybody to take any interest whatever in the bill, which he considered for the benefit of the whole civilized world; and I call attention to this other fact, that the same kind of enlightened selfishness—perhaps I should not say "selfishness" except I do not know how to describe it—the same considerations that lead to the extraordinary exertions in favor of silver now were then put forth against it because silver had the misfortune to be at a premium of 2 per cent. Everybody wanted the coined money at a dollar that was worth 2 per cent. more to the man who got it. The silver was 2 or 3 per cent. premium then, and therefore men wanted to stop coining it. Everybody knew it; the whole House of Representatives knew it.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, the record contradicts the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. HAWLEY. I will go to the record. I will abide by the record.

Mr. BECK. So will I, and to-morrow or some other day we will meet and compare the record. I have here, somewhere in my desk, a speech made in 1878 by Hon. WILLIAM D. KELLEY, of Pennsylvania, in which he, as chairman of the committee, avowed that he did not know that the law had passed, and it was shown on the floor of the Senate in debate between Mr. Blaine and the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES], both of them being members of the House at the time, that they did not know it. General Grant, after he signed the bill, wrote to Mr. Cowdrey that he wondered why silver was not coming into circulation. I will show that to the satisfaction of everybody.

Mr. HAWLEY. Does the Senator mean to say that Mr. KELLEY was chairman of the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures at that time?

Mr. BECK. He was chairman of the committee having the bill in charge, so he said in that speech, which I have read in the RECORD. I will make what Mr. KELLEY said part of my remarks, so everybody can again read it; that is all I have to say about it now.

Mr. HAWLEY. The same bill had been two or three years before Congress.

Mr. BECK. Mr. KELLEY'S statement is as follows:

In 1872, when I made the remarks which were cited by those gentlemen, and which have been frequently quoted in both Houses, and always with an air as much as to say that to convict this man of the crime of having been instructed by the logic of events would forever settle this momentous question, we were not using coin, and no gentleman in either House appears to have appreciated the scope and magnitude of the silver question or to have given it special study. Hence the bill—and I wish gentlemen to know what that bill was; it was a bill to reorganize the mints, not to revise the coin money of the country, but to reorganize the mints, and it was passed without allusion in debate to the question of the retention or abandonment of the standard silver dollar. The then Speaker of the House, now a distinguished member of the Senate, and Hon. Mr. VOORHEES, of Indiana, who is also a member of that body, were then members of this House, and during the last Congress this colloquy occurred between them. It was, I think, denied by Mr. VOORHEES that members of the House knew that the bill proposed to demonetize the silver dollar, and to sustain his view he said to the ex-Speaker, "Did you know it, sir?" "No," said Senator Blaine, "did you?" "No," replied Senator VOORHEES.

I was chairman of the committee that reported the original bill, and I aver on my honor that I did not know the fact that it proposed to drop the standard dollar, and did not learn that it had done it for eighteen months after the passage of the substitution offered by Mr. Hooper, when I disputed the fact. The distinguished gentleman from Ohio, Mr. Garfield, who now leads this side of the House was then as now an attentive and already a distinguished member of the House; yet when in joint debate before the people of Ohio in October, 1877, the question arose as to who was responsible for its demonetization, he frankly said he did not know that such a provision was in the bill when it passed the House. I state this the more freely in his absence because I informed him that I intended to do so; and he replied, "It is the case; I did make that statement, and it is true."

Nor did the President who signed the bill know that it abolished legal-tender standard silver dollars, for in his letter to Mr. Cowdrey of October 6, 1873, cited by the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. Warner, he said:

"Silver will gradually take the place of this currency, and, further, will become the standard of values, which will be hoarded in a small way. I estimate that this will consume from $200,000,000 to $300,000,000 in time of this species of our circulating medium. * * * I confess to a desire to see a limited hoarding of money. It insures a firm foundation in time of need. But I want to see the hoarding of something that has a standard value the world over. Silver has this."

Now, Mr. President, jumping from one thing to another, the other Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT], in an effort to maintain the high protective system and these trust and combination systems, made a remarkable speech the other day. I will read his opening language. He said:

Mr. President, is the President of the United States a free-trader? That is the pertinent question; a question which interests not only the nation, but every individual citizen of the nation; a question which touches the future welfare and prosperity not only of our nation, but of all its citizens; and I do not propose to be deterred from asking and, if I can, from answering this question, because the President suggests that "to dwell upon the theories of protection and free trade savors too much of bandying epithets." I am a protectionist, and I consider it no epithet when I am called so. If the President of the United States is a free-trader, he ought to be willing to be called so, and not consider it an epithet if that word is used to define his position.

I got a copy of that speech from the Senator this morning because the tariff bill which the House committee has been considering from time to time was laid on my desk to-day, and I wanted to look over the speech without expecting to refer to it now; but that Senator being in his place, I will take the liberty to say that he has a perfect right to define his position and call himself a protectionist, but when he attempts to define the position of other people, I think he had better be a little careful. After reading the Senator's speech this morning, I turned to the President's message, expecting some day or other, and I hope very soon, to discuss its recommendations. I think I can safely assure the Senator after again reading the message that the President of the United States is not a free-trader. There is not a Democrat in the Senate or in the other House who is in my opinion a free-trader. We have too much sense to assume such a position. When I confidently assert, as I do now, that there is not a Democrat in the other House or in the Senate who proposes free trade, and when I emphasize it, as I do, that none of us contends that the present internal-revenue taxation should extend to any objects outside of whisky, tobacco, and beer, and they produce only $120,000,000 revenue a year, while the Secretary of the Treasury shows that the needs of the Government next year will require $326,000,000, so that over $200,000,000 every year must be raised in some other way than by internal-revenue taxation, and there is no other way to raise it except by tariff taxation or by direct taxes, then it must be obvious to every man that the charge that we are free-traders is absolutely untrue, and everybody who knows anything about it ought to know that.

Let me show why I say this. The Constitution of the United States provides that direct taxes must be apportioned among the several States, according to their population, as ascertained by the last preceding census. The last census, that of 1880, shows, for example, that the State of Alabama had a population then of 1,262,505, and the assessed valuation of the property in the State of Alabama amounted to $122,867,000, being about $97 per capita. It shows that Rhode Island had a population of 276,531, while the assessed value of the property in that State was $252,000,000, or, say, $910 per capita. It will thus be seen that, under our constitutional provisions, if we undertook to raise revenue by direct taxation, Alabama would have to pay nearly $10 for every dollar paid by Rhode Island on the property of the State, which, I agree, would be more unjust and oppressive than even the present oppressive system of protective tariff taxation. No Democrat, as I said before, proposes free trade, which must involve direct taxation, and as over $200,000,000 must be raised annually, outside of the internal revenue, assuming that to remain as it is, it is obviously absurd to call men free-traders who propose to raise that vast sum annually by tariff taxation.

Mr. PLATT. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. BECK. I desire to say in answer, to begin with——

Mr. PLATT. Is the Senator a protectionist in any sense? Is he in favor of a protective tariff upon any of our manufactures?

Mr. BECK. He is not, and I do not think any Democrat is——

Mr. PLATT. I am asking the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BECK. I have never consulted the President as to what he is in favor of; but it is absurd to say that the President of the United States is a free-trader when he proposes to raise by tariff taxation, say, $220,000,000 a year, three times as much as ever was raised before the war under any administration, for $65,000,000 was the maximum raised then for all the expenditures of the Government. Mr. Cleveland in his message proposes—and the Democratic party, as far as I understand it, concur in that—even if the taxes on whisky and tobacco remain where they are, to raise $220,000,000 a year merely to meet the demands of the Treasury for revenue—$220,000,000 a year by tariff taxation.

I merely refer to this in contrast to direct taxation which would make the people of Alabama pay $10 tax on their property for every dollar paid on the property of the people of Rhode Island. As long as the President proposes to raise revenue by taxation in that way, it is absurd to talk about him being a free-trader.

Mr. PLATT. I think the Senator from Kentucky in his zeal is forgetting the figures a little. I understand him to say that, as he understands it, the President, although in favor of retaining the internal-revenue taxation, is still in favor of raising $220,000,000 by customs duties.

Mr. BECK. I do.

Mr. PLATT. We are only raising $217,000,000 now by customs duties annually. If the Senator will turn to the report of the Secretary of the Treasury he will find that the receipts from customs duties last year were $217,000,000. I speak from recollection, but I venture to say that the receipts from customs duties last year were $217,000,000. Now, if there is to be any reduction, it has got to come somewhere. If the President does not propose to take it off internal-revenue taxation, it has got to come off the $217,000,000 of tariff duties of the last year.

But I was not asking the Senator from Kentucky whether the President of the United States was a protectionist or not. I was asking whether he himself was a protectionist. I have been listening, as I supposed, to an attack upon protection. I have heard those benefited by protection all called "robbers," as I understood; anybody who is protected has been so designated, and I have heard the Senator argue by the hour that it was this iniquitous system of protection which enabled all these trusts to be formed. Now, I want to know if he is coming around on my ground, and is really a protectionist after all.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, the Secretary of the Treasury, whose report I have before me, says that we have to raise $326,000,000 for the expenses of the Government. He says over $118,000,000 will be received from internal revenue, assuming that to be undisturbed. That leaves, therefore, over $206,000,000 to be raised otherwise.

Mr. TELLER. What did we raise last year? Here is the report that shows it.

Mr. BECK. I am not making any question about that. We collected some from the public lands, some from one source and some from another; but we are in excess to-day of all that we can pay from the revenues we collect, as the President very well says, with $140,000,000 surplus at the end of the year.

Mr. PLATT. But here are the figures.

Mr. BECK. Never mind. You can not change them, and you can not make black white.

Mr. PLATT. You have changed them.

Mr. BECK. I have not done so.

Mr. PLATT. I wish the Senator from Kentucky——

Mr. BECK. Let me state again what I have said. We have to raise $326,000,000 to carry on this Government. One hundred and twenty million dollars is raised by internal-revenue taxation; the balance is raised by tariff taxation and by the miscellaneous items from which we receive small sums. So that substantially about $200,000,000 in some form or other must be raised by tariff taxation.

Mr. PLATT. Ah! But the Senator said that we must raise $224,000,000 by tariff taxation, and that, although the internal-revenue taxation was to stand, we had got to continue to raise $224,000,000 from tariff taxation.

Mr. BECK. Call it $200,000,000.

Mr. PLATT. I thought the Senator was mistaken. I thought he would want to correct himself.

Mr. BECK. I have done so.

Mr. PLATT. I have given the exact figures.

Mr. BECK. I do not want to be contradicted in this sort of petty way.

Mr. PLATT. I thought the Senator wanted the figures right.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is too much disorder in the Chamber. The Chair suggests to the occupants of the galleries that the rules expressly forbid applause or expressions of disapprobation.

Mr. BECK. I believe I have the floor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hopes he will have no occasion to repeat the remark. Does the Senator from Kentucky consent to be interrupted?

Mr. BECK. I do not now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kentucky declines to yield the floor.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kentucky declines to be interrupted.

Mr. BECK. Does anybody assert that we propose to collect this money by direct taxes? Nobody.

Mr. ALDRICH. Will the Senator from Kentucky allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BECK. I will yield for a question.

Mr. ALDRICH. Does the Senator from Kentucky consider the revenue policy of Great Britain a free-trade policy?

Mr. BECK. There is a tariff bill coming over to us, which I hope will be before us very soon, and then we can discuss that matter and all others, and have ample opportunity to go into the details.

Mr. TELLER. When will it come?

Mr. BECK. It will not come if the Republican managers at this end of the Capitol can go to the other end and persuade their friends not to vote for it, or not even to take it up, as they did before. They will be urged to vote solidly against it, and then they will raise a hue and cry against the Democrats, charging them with the responsibility of not passing it. We tried to do so faithfuly in the last Congress. The Democrats furnished 136 votes, while the Republicans furnished 4 in favor of consideration of the tariff bill. It was defeated, and then every Republican all over the land charged the Democracy with having control of the House and with not bringing forward a bill to reduce taxation, when we had 136 for it and they furnished 4. That is about as fair as their pretense that they want to save the soldiers from going to the poorhouses by absorbing all the surplus revenue, when in fact they are really seeking to save the tariff in order to enrich a few men that are making princely fortunes out of it at the expense of the great mass of the people.

Mr. ALDRICH. I want to say to the Senator from Kentucky that the reason I ask the question is, that I understood him to say that it is necessary for this Government to raise at least $200,000,000 outside of internal-revenue taxation in order to carry on the Government.

Mr. BECK. I am not going to be further catechised now.

Mr. ALDRICH. And that statement——

Mr. BECK. I beg pardon. I object to being further interrupted. I want to make one other suggestion before I close. If you gentlemen are as patriotic as you think you are, and as disinterested as you claim to be, as those who are millionaires contribute very little to support the Federal Government now, their bonds being free from all taxation, State, national, and municipal, and as you propose to add permanently some $100,000,000 or more a year to our tax-list for the soldiers, do not continue to take it out of the clothing, the food, and the necessaries of the very old, infirm, poor soldiers themselves. Impose a tax upon incomes of from 3 to 5 per cent. to raise the money needed for the support of the suffering soldier, and see how many votes it will get on that side of the Chamber. I will vote for it; it will, I think, be well sustained on this side of the Chamber. That proposition is to my mind not only fair but patriotic.

The wealth of this country was protected by the valor of the soldier, and ought to furnish the means to supply his wants now. It does not do so. The bonds of the United States are free from all taxation, State, Federal, and municipal. Your incomes pay nothing, your palatial mansions pay nothing, you pay no more than the veriest pauper who has to support his wife and children, and not as much, because he has generally more children to support than you have. Now, meet the expenditure you are proposing, by a tax upon the incomes of the rich men of the country sufficient to raise the amount, and take off the burden that the poor men have to pay to support trusts and combines, and take it upon your own shoulders; then you will show a patriotic impulse, and you will find many gentlemen on this side of the Chamber who will unite with you. I will pledge myself now to vote for an income tax that would raise the money needed for a pension for every worthy soldier in the land. But, Mr. President, that might lead me off to speak on other things. I rose to ask a question or two about the cost, if the amendment was adopted, expecting to speak about five minutes, and have been dragged into this rambling discussion by all sorts of questions, suggestions, and interruptions. Now I propose to quit.

Mr. HAWLEY. I should like to ask the Senator from Kentucky just one question which demands but a brief answer. I should like to know what tariff in what country is best worthy of our imitation?

Mr. BECK. The best tariff is the tariff that allows the man who earns a dollar to keep it in his own pocket, subject only to the portion of necessary expenses that he ought to bear out of what he works for to support the Government that protects him; and that tariff is the worst that takes his earnings away from him and gives them to any body of men and makes them rich by law instead of by labor at the expense of the man who earns a dollar.

Mr. HAWLEY. I wanted the Senator to declare frankly that which he has intimated a thousand times in debate, that the British tariff is the best in the world. I wanted him to say that the British tariff was the one most nearly modeled upon correct principles. That has been the inference from all the arguments he has always made; and then I would proceed to show, if there were time for doing it, that the British tariff comes as nearly as possible for the ingenuity of man to devise to a poll-tax, because it does not levy its burdens on men according to their burden-bearing capacity, but is very nearly per capita. It puts a very heavy tax upon tea, of which the poor man uses about as much as the rich. It puts a heavy tax upon tobacco, of which the poor man uses about as much as the rich. It is not according to the quality of the tobacco or the tea, but is so much a pound in each case. Then it puts a tax on all liquors, down to the cheaper kind used by the poor man; and the rest of it is comparatively small. Tea, coffee, sugar, and spirits is the body of the tariff, raising not $100,000,000; and the rich man—the millionaire whom the gentleman loves to speak of, and of whom there are more on the other side than on this—pays no more taxes than his coachman. But he says the coachman has the larger family and that cheap liquor is his favorite drink. Such men probably drink as much per capita as rich people, and therefore it is a per capita tax on them.

That is the character of the British tariff, so devised in order to raise the money from the people equally, and not, on the very best principles of decent economists, according to burden-bearing capacity.

One thing more, now that I have the floor——

Mr. BECK. I beg the Senator's pardon. One word. I thought he was asking me a question or I would not have yielded.

Mr. HAWLEY. I will stop if the Senator wants to answer the question.

Mr. BECK. I was not sure what the Senator rose for. I beg his pardon.

Mr. HAWLEY. If the Senator wants to answer my question about the British tariff, I will stop at once.

Mr. BECK. I have only this to say——

Mr. HAWLEY. Is it a good one?

Mr. BECK. It may be very good for them; that is their business, not mine. I am trying to do the best thing I can for our own people; but I know this much, that for many years everything that the British laborer ate and wore was taxed to death. England reversed that policy forty years ago, and to-day, with the exception of tea and coffee, unless a man smokes tobacco or drinks whisky, there is not an article which he or his family needs that they pay $1 to the British Government upon, as they have an income tax that meets all contingencies, such as we ought to have.

Mr. HAWLEY. As a matter of fact the entire people use beer, rich and poor, to say nothing of spirits and wines.

One single other point. I am not going to enter upon a general discussion. The Senator says we have a very high protection in this country because we want to get $200,000,000 from the tariff. I want to know whether a country that raises $100,000,000 is protective or non-protective in any sense. There may be a country that is protectionist which raises only $10,000,000 by tariff, and there may be another that raises $300,000,000 and is a free-trade country substantially.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, the Senator from Kentucky did not wish to yield to me that I might put on record from the report of the Secretary of the Treasury the exact sum received from customs during the past year. He stated that it was $224,000,000 and insisted that although the internal-revenue taxes might stand this Government would still have to collect $224,000,000 from customs duties. I was not mistaken in what I said about that. Now, in my own time I propose to put on record the receipts of the Government for the fiscal year 1887, taken from the annual report of the Secretary of the Treasury. It is this:

The ordinary revenues of the Government from all sources for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1887, were:

From customs..... $217,286,893.13

I said from recollection they were $217,000,000—

From internal revenue..... $118,823,391.22

And then, while I shall put this whole table in the RECORD, I wish to allude, without reading them in detail, to the miscellaneous items. I want to know if the Senator from Kentucky is going to take off anything which the Government derives from these miscellaneous sources?

From sales of public lands—

Does he propose to cut off that item, nine millions and over?

From profits on coinage, bullion deposits, and assays—

Eight million and over. Does he propose to cut off that?

From tax on national banks—

Two millions and over. Shall we see the Senator from Kentucky rise in his place and say that the tax on national banks is to be taken off?

From fees—consular, letters patent, and land—

Three millions. Perhaps he would take that off.

From customs fees, fines, penalties, etc.—

One million dollars and over.

From sales of Indian lands—

A million and a half in round numbers.

From Soldiers' Home, permanent fund	$1,226,000
From sinking fund for Pacific railways	1,364,000
From repayment of interest by Pacific railways	914,000
From sales of old public buildings	624,000
From sales of Government property	262,000
From immigrant fund	258,000
From tax on seal-skins	317,000
From deposits by individuals for surveying public lands	94,000

From revenues of the District of Columbia—

Two millions and over.

From miscellaneous sources—

About a million and a half.

Now, I venture to say that from those miscellaneous sources of which the Senator from Kentucky speaks he does not propose to reduce one dollar. So all the reduction which he proposes, which the President proposes, all the internal-revenue taxes being retained, must come from the customs duties, which are only $217,000,000; and when he speaks about the bill that is to be laid before us to reduce taxation I call the Senate to witness that there is not a suggestion in it that any reduction of taxation is to be made except upon customs duties. There is not an allusion to any other means or source of reduction. I yield now to the Senator from Kansas, first presenting the full table of last year's receipts, as given in the report of the Secretary of the Treasury:

The ordinary revenues of the Government from all sources for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1887, were:

From customs	$217,286,893.13
From internal revenue	118,823,391.22
From sales of public lands	9,254,286.42
From profits on coinage, bullion deposits, and assays	8,929,252.83
From tax on national banks	2,385,851.18
From fees—consular, letters patent, and land	3,201,647.16
From customs fees, fines, penalties, etc	1,053,637.86
From sales of Indian lands	1,479,028.81

Mr. PLUMB. Mr. President, it is a little remarkable that we have had all this discussion as to the impropriety of granting pensions to disabled and dependent Union soldiers after the passage by the Congress, by a substantially unanimous vote, ratified by the signature of the President, of a bill to grant pensions to all the survivors of the Mexican war. The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] has rung the changes upon the terms equivalent to a statement about men being pensioned who had not smelt gunpowder or been in battle used by the President of the United States in his veto message of last year. I call his attention to the fact that in the bill which was passed, being chapter 70 of the laws of 1887, for pensioning Mexican veterans, a class of people who could not by any possibility have been in battle are enumerated as being entitled to pensions, and that bill pensioned many thousands of persons who never could have even crossed the Mexican frontier. It is therefore not any indisposition towards service pensions on the part of the Senator from Kentucky or the Senator from Missouri and gentlemen on that side of the Chamber generally, but it is because those who will get the benefit of this bill, if it becomes a law, are the survivors of the Union Army of the war of the rebellion. It is not our fault that few pensions are paid to Union soldiers in Southern States and to few members of the Democratic party in the Northern States; but the secret of the disposition against the bill is found in that fact. The speedy transition of the Senator from Kentucky from the subject of pensions to that of the tariff was as easy and as natural as going down hill. He is like the doctor who could cure any patient if he could only throw him into fits. All we have to do to get the Senator from Kentucky started is to suggest the tariff to him and off he goes at his best gait; and so we have had on this question, brought in partly no doubt to draw attention from the uncomfortable position certain Democratic speeches made yesterday have left the Senators of that side of the Chamber in, and also possibly because of a recent tariff debate elsewhere. And so we have had a dust kicked up about the tariff in order to excite prejudice against the Union veterans. The Senator from Kentucky appears to have completely boxed the compass. Starting out by denouncing the tariff as naked robbery and the parent of trusts and other illegal combinations, he wound up by announcing that he was not for free trade. Just how much of the tariff is robbery and what portion is responsible for trusts the Senator did not enlighten us upon.

Mr. President, when I consider the action of Senators on the Democratic side of the Chamber when the tariff was last under consideration as contrasted with their talk, I concede that they are only free-traders for revenue—to make favor with the foreign importing and manufacturing interests. But whenever there was any benefit to be derived from the tariff they were ready to avail themselves of it, while keeping up the howl about tariff taxation being robbery.

At the last session of Congress the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON] spoke so feelingly on the subject of tariff burdens that he almost drew tears from his listeners, and he declared that tariff revision and reduction was the pressing need of the times. I then asked him if he would name a single article manufactured in New Jersey on which he thought the tariff ought to be reduced. He replied that he did not, but at once sat down; and that Senator will not vote, nor will his colleague vote to reduce the duties on a single article that is the product of a New Jersey shop or factory, but he——

Mr. MCPHERSON. Mr. President——

Mr. PLUMB. I shall not consent to be interrupted.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I should like to interrupt the Senator.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas declines to be interrupted.

Mr. PLUMB. The Senator is not alone. Every Senator on that side of the Chamber takes specially good care of everything manufactured in his own State while keeping up a loud racket about the iniquities of the tariff. When the last tariff bill was under consideration the Senator from New Jersey voted not only for the high duties prevailing, but for increasing them every time he got a chance. When it came to earthenware, a product of the State of New Jersey, not one single item of the tariff on that article of manufacture was reduced, but I find that the duties on large classes of it were increased from 40 to 60 per cent. partly by the vote of the Senator from New Jersey himself, taking care of his constituents by so doing, I have no doubt, and thereby adding to the burdens of the people of Kansas, who are necessitated to buy earthenware. I find another large class of this same manufacture increased from 40 per cent. to 55 per cent., and still the Senator finds it consistent to join his party in a general denunciation against the tariff, although he was as responsible as any one for whatever extortion it embodies.

So when it comes to my friend from Missouri——

Mr. MCPHERSON. Before the Senator departs from New Jersey will he permit me to make a remark?

Mr. PLUMB. No, I think not. My friend from Missouri [Mr. VEST] I think would be less careful to deny that he was a free-trader than the Senator from Kentucky, but when I come to look at the tariff on a prime product of the State of Missouri—zinc—I find that the Senator voted either to retain the old duties or impose higher ones. The old rate on manufactures of zinc was 35 per cent., the new one fixed by the Senator's vote is 45 per cent.

I find that under the old tariff spelter bore a duty of 2½ cents per pound, while by the tariff of 1883 the duty was increased to 2½ cents per pound, and by the vote of the Senator from Missouri. On every other thing, coal included, in which his State was conspicuously interested, the duty was retained as it was under the old tariff.

That will not restrain my friend from Missouri when he goes upon the stump, and the Butternuts come out to hear him, from declaiming against the robbery of the tariff, putting the responsibility therefor upon New England and the Republican party.

Three or four years ago the Senator from Missouri, after returning from a first visit to Rhode Island, where he had gone as a member of a Senate committee to investigate some question concerning the citizenship of the people of that State, made a speech to his constituents, in which he recited to their wondering ears what he had seen. He told about the great factories, about the thousands of well-dressed and presumably well-paid employés engaged in them, and about the fine residences there, and the large and prosperous cities, and all the evidences of thrift which abound in that little State; and he said to his auditors, "All this I saw in a State without agricultural resources or other natural wealth, for Rhode Island is as a sand-bar compared with Missouri." When he got that far I said to myself that my friend had profited by his observation and experience and was going to give his people some good advice—tell them to go and do likewise. I called to mind instantaneously the great mines of iron, of coal, of zinc, and of lead in that great State; the immense forests of timber; the great navigable streams that thread it from border to border, making communication easy and cheap; the fertile soil and the salubrious climate, making a combination hardly found in any other State of the Union, and I felt that the Senator was about to lead the people there in new paths; was going to tell them to enter upon manufacturing and the development of their great resources, and thereby sell instead of buying, and thus cut off the profits of the thrifty Rhode Islanders; but I was disappointed, for what he did say to the people of Missouri in substance was that all the wealth which he had seen such evidence of was the result of robbery on the part of the people of Rhode Island—robbery of the people of Missouri; and he called on his hearers not to save themselves from further robbery by doing their own manufacturing, for which they have abundant facilities, but to rob the people of Rhode Island in return.

Mr. President, I think if I had been counseling a people who had under their feet, all around them, the elements of wealth such as the Missouri people have, I would have said to them, "Pay no more money to these Rhode Islanders for what you can yourselves manufacture, but make it yourselves." I would have said to them, "Buy no more manufactures of brass, of leather, of wood, of iron, of zinc, of lead, of wool, or of cotton from the people of Rhode Island or anywhere else, but make them yourselves out of the natural elements which Providence has placed in your easy reach." But this advice will not be given by the Senator. He will still preach destruction while winking to the zinc and lead miners of Southwest Missouri.

So going further into the tariff schedules I reach the article of hemp. I knew when I observed that article that the Senator was not a free-trader except as to the product of some people besides those of Kentucky. I find that the tariff on the different products of hemp remained precisely the same under the tariff of 1883, as under the preceding tariff, retained there by the vote of the Senator from Kentucky and his colleague, except where it was found convenient to raise the duty. No reduction, no change except upward, no reduction upon hemp, after whisky, Kentucky's prime product, nearly equally that of Tennessee, and also I think the Senator from Tennessee who sits facing me participated in the robbery which the great duty on hemp produces. The increase on certain manufactures of hemp was from 30 to 35 per cent., and so on, but there was no reduction. So as I go South I find the article of rice——

Mr. HARRIS. Do I understand the Senator as stating that I voted to increase the duties on hemp? Tennessee has no particular interest in that commodity. I am a little surprised if the Senator means to state that as a fact.

Mr. PLUMB. I think the Senator did. Did he not?

Mr. HARRIS. It is not in accordance with my recollection. I have not looked at the RECORD since the day the bill passed.

Mr. PLUMB. There being a principle running through all this, a person may do a thing to-day that he forgets to-morrow; and so the Senator is very properly cautious in asserting what he did do.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask the Senator, however, as he seems to be making statements from the RECORD, if he intends to be understood as stating I did so vote?

Mr. PLUMB. I do.

Mr. HARRIS. Very well. I will look to the RECORD and see.

Mr. PLUMB. Either the Senator voted for it affirmatively or it passed nem. con. without his vote being recorded against it.

Mr. HARRIS. That may be true; I do not remember how the facts are; but when the Senator states that I voted for it, I shall look to the RECORD. I do not believe I did.

Mr. PLUMB. The lynx-eyed Senator from Tennessee never lets anything go through the Senate that does not meet his approval without expressing his dissent. Silence gives consent, and matters of this kind, grave matters that divide parties, involving what is on the Senator's side called robbery, are not of the kind that can be allowed to go by without responsibility being incurred.

Mr. HARRIS. I do not want to interrupt the Senator from Kansas in the line of his remarks, but certainly a point such as the last one he suggested falls a little below the dignity of debate which a Senator ought to indulge in. He knows very well, as every Senator knows, that there is not a day that amendments and questions do not pass here nem. con. without the attention of Senators being particularly called to them, and that according to the rule he lays down he would find himself committed a thousand times in a session to things that he does not approve.

Mr. PLUMB. Yes, Mr. President; but this involves what has been termed, and will be termed over and over again in this debate, robbery, plunder, the unlawful appropriation of the property of many for the benefit of a few. That is not one of those things about which a person can escape responsibility who happens to be conveniently absent when the vote is taken.

So when we come to rice, there is 100 per cent. duty on that article. I venture to say that when that subject comes up again in a new tariff bill, which we are to have to-morrow or next day, according to the statement of the Senator from Kentucky, neither of the Senators from North Carolina nor either of the Senators from South Carolina will vote to reduce the duty on rice. It has been maintained at its present high rate by their votes heretofore.

The Senator from Iowa asks me why not? They believe with General Hancock that the tariff is a local question; that is, when they can get the fruits of its robbery for themselves. But getting this fruit will not prevent a Pharisaical howl about tariff robbery.

So when we come to glass, we increased, as I remember, the duty on foreign glass with the direct connivance and at the suggestion of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES]. Articles of glass, cut, engraved, painted, colored, etc., 40 per cent. before, were increased to 45 per cent., the Senator from New Jersey, too, participating in that robbery as well, because glass is a product of the factories of New Jersey. And so all the way around from hemp to rice and rice to earthenware and earthenware to glassware and glassware to zinc. And then when we come to the article of matches in which there was, if not a trust, certainly what the Senator from Kentucky would call "a combine," located in a State just big enough for a first-class combine, the State of Delaware, the duty on matches was not taken off. Why? The Diamond Match Company, which had brought under its protecting wing all the match manufactories of the United States, subjected them all to its control in a trust which had more than doubled the price of that necessary article, going, as it does, into every man's house, whether it be a palace or a cabin, did not want the tax taken off, and so the then senior Senator from Delaware, now translated elsewhere, was most strenuous against that bit of relief to the toiling millions.

Mr. SAULSBURY. To what Senator from Delaware does the Senator from Kansas refer?

Mr. PLUMB. I refer to one who is absent, but whose absence does not make him less responsible for Democratic policy, and who is and who has assumed to be a leader of the Democratic hosts.

Then came sugar, and there is a sugar trust, and according to the Senator from Kentucky it is based upon the tariff on sugar. For whose benefit was the tariff put on sugar, and by whose votes was it put there and by whose votes has it been retained? There is a tariff and a combine and a trust in sugar. The production in Louisiana is so small that it does not amount to the dignity of competition.

Mr. BECK. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. PLUMB. I think I will treat all alike on that side.

Mr. BECK. I should like to say, if the Senator would allow me——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas declines to yield.

Mr. BECK. The conference committee was composed of——

Mr. ALDRICH. I want to say that the duties on sugar were not changed in the conference committee.

Mr. PLUMB. The duty on sugar is specially a pet of the Democracy. It has had the support of all in both Houses of Congress. But, Mr. President, here is authority which outweighs all of the Democratic Senators on the other side, a power to which they yield, a presence to which they bow. The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE] shakes his head. I know he does some private swearing; but I am talking about his acts in public. [Laughter.] Here is the report of the Secretary of the Treasury. Does any Senator on that side vote against the Secretary of the Treasury or against the President? The President indorses this. He is the oracle of the party. When I say "oracle" I use the fitting term. There is but one oracle of the Democratic party. The Senator from Missouri had a little fun because he found more than one oracle on this side, and he thought he would play them off against each other. He has no such fun on his own side. There is only one house open there. The Democratic party has come to the beggary of having but one candidate, not a candidate that it wants, but a candidate who is booted and spurred and who is bound to ride.

Several SENATORS. And win.

Mr. PLUMB. Our friends on the other side have that consolation, and that is all. They think he is going to win. They do not want him to win; that is to say, they would rather somebody else would win, but they do not dare say so.

Here is the last report of Mr. Daniel Manning, Secretary of the Treasury, and on page 41 of that report he says:

> Like the casting away of the revenue from coffee and tea in 1872, the removal of the tax on sugar, which gives us our easiest and next to largest single item of revenue ($51,778,948), at an annual cost of less than 90 cents per head, is now pressed forward, to avert the repeal of other taxes which are desired to operate an incidental and private benefit by enhanced prices to the domestic consumers of a large domestic product.

What domestic product is more largely consumed than sugar? The amount of sugar the American people use is not proportioned to means, but proportioned to appetite. The appetite of the poor man for sugar is just as great as the appetite of the rich man. There is no tax which, upon the theory of our friends upon the other side that the duty imposed adds to the price of the article, so absolutely reaches every man, woman, and child in the United States as the tax on sugar. The consumption per capita is of greater value than the consumption of bread. Mr. Manning's argument was against taking off that duty, and the Democratic party is not going to favor taking that off.

Then the Senator from Kentucky unloaded the responsibility for a great variety of things upon the Republicans. He says we are responsible for the small duty on madeira and sherry wine. I ask the Senator if he voted or proposed even to vote or submitted any amendment to raise the tariff on those articles? There has been no voice on all this class of questions so potential as that of the Senator from Kentucky, and it has been frequent. He is not restrained from expressing his wishes, from advancing his views. If I remember anything at all, it was that his colleague at least voted to reduce the duty upon champagne. Perhaps that is more clearly out of the line of competition with Kentucky whisky than sherry wine.

The Finance Committee, of which the Senator from Kentucky was, as he is now, a member, did not propose any change in the duties on wines other than were expressed in the bill as passed. The Senator himself did not propose any, and it was not proposed from that side of the Chamber. No, Mr. President, the Senator from Kentucky is artful as well as able. When he feels perfectly sure that the whisky tax is not going to be reduced, and when he has got his hemp in a safe eddy he does not care very much for the rest. He probably yielded as others did to the belief that higher duties would produce smuggling and a reduction of revenue.

Mr. President, that Senator is laboring to-day strongly as he always has against the reduction of the tax on whisky. The greatest combination in any form on this continent of which I know anything is the whisky combination, whereby the production was limited and the price increased. There was a combination also to get legislation taking off the tax on whisky exported, and in order to make this combination the more effective it has been instrumental in shipping large quantities of this product abroad in order to take it out of the possibility of being put upon the home market in such a way as to break the price. It is not benevolence for the people. The Senator does not care for the coachman who drives his wagon when he comes to the tax on whisky, although he parades him freely.

Mr. BECK. Will the Senator allow me to say a word?

Mr. PLUMB. I will.

Mr. BECK. When my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] and the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] in 1875 increased the tax on whisky under pretense that the sinking fund required it, I resisted it with all the power that I had. I was unable to successfully resist their great powers, but I then believed, and believe now, that this Government would get more revenue from whisky at 50 cents a gallon than it does at 90 cents, and I have advocated that always.

Allow me to say one other thing. When the great whisky ring was talked about, the truth was developed; it was shown that the then Senator from Minnesota, Mr. Windom, sought to find a mare's nest somewhere in Peoria, and the great whisky producers in Illinois were broken down because spirits from Germany entered France under a treaty at $5 a barrel less than ours, ffom alcohol made from potatoes on the Rhine, and they broke up our market in Marseilles; it was shown that the increase had gone from $1,000,000 up to $13,000,000; and what was called the whisky ring raised $700,000 to enable our people to sell abroad at a loss rather than bring back their product and sell it in this market. When the facts were shown Mr. Windom had to apologize for the attack he made. I believe in a low tax on whisky.

Mr. PLUMB. The Senator from Kentucky believes in just that tax on whisky which most helps the manufacturer. That is what he believes in. He believes in that tax which enables the whisky combination to maintain its position and to prevent the institution of small stills. Whether it be 20 cents or 60 cents, it is not a question of the consumer, but it is a question of the manufacturer.

Mr. BECK rose.

Mr. PLUMB. I can not yield for a speech.

Mr. BECK. I do not ask the Senator from Kansas to yield, but I want to assure him now that the time will come when all can be heard in the Senate, and I will disprove all the allegations he has made against me.

Mr. PLUMB. There is one way he can disprove it, and that is by voting to take the tax off whisky. That he will not do.

Mr. BECK. I will not put money into the pockets of a few men at the expense of the rest of the country to get clear of revenue properly collected, all of which goes into the Treasury.

Mr. PLUMB. So if I go all around that side of the Chamber, the evidences are that those who talk so loudly about the impositions of the tariff, who prate of the robbery that it produces, and all that sort of thing, are those who have contributed to maintain and increase duties whenever they could be benefited thereby.

"My son," said the pious father, "do not fish on Sunday; it is wicked. But if you will do it, be sure to bring home the fish."

Mr. President, the Senator from Kentucky talked about the reaper and the mower; and the feeling of regret with which he spoke indicated his wish that there had been such machinery when he was a boy. I echo that most fully, but I inferred from the Senator's remarks that there was one other regret he had, and that was that the reapers and mowers which he saw on the plains of Dakota were not made in British workshops.

The Senator is concerned about trusts. He evidently overlooks the fact that if his policy prevailed it would break down the American manufacturer, and then we should be at the mercy of such trusts as the English manufacturers might create. No doubt trusts are wicked and ought to be suppressed; but the copper trust which has been mentioned is wholly of foreign creation, and embraces all the copper production of the world, as well as that of the American mines, and it has no more relation to the tariff than it has to the last change of the moon. Is it any less wicked because of foreign creation? Is it only against home trusts the Senator inveighs? We have heard so much about the robberies by manufacturers at home that one would think the manufacturers on the other side of the water, in Great Britain, Germany, and France, are saints. The Senator from Kentucky wants to break down the manufacturing system of the United States. Willingly or unwillingly, knowingly or unknowingly, the Senator from Kentucky is one of the most efficient allies the foreign manufacturers have. Do you suppose, Mr. President, does anybody suppose, that if they accomplish this work and get possession of the American market they will not immediately put up the price of everything which the American people will then be compelled to buy of them? Therefore we shall be at the mercy of trusts, trusts entirely beyond the reach of our law, trusts among people foreign to us and entirely outside of the range of any of our powers and authority. Let us surely put down home trusts, but take equal care that we do not create foreign ones to take their places.

Trusts in this country had their origin in Kentucky; and Ohio, its near neighbor, set up a pretty good imitation when it organized the Standard Oil trust, and from that, beginning in Kentucky with whisky, they have proceeded until now they embrace a number of other things as well.

Mr. President, all this tariff discussion is unloaded upon the back of those who are supposed to be the beneficiaries of the pending pension bill. Those who have brought about this debate, who denounce the bill to pension disabled and dependent Union soldiers, illy conceal their regret that it is the Union soldier and not the Confederate soldier that is now the subject of pensions. Well, Mr. President, I shall hope that the regret some of the Senators on the other side express, notably the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST], will in time wear away, and if he is not consoled by a contemplation of the progress, the wealth, and the power of the State that he so ably represents as a member of the Federal Union, some day, under the influence of the very system which he decries and of the Union into which he was unwillingly brought from his Confederate wanderings as the result of the gallantry of the men against whom he declaims, Missouri will take her rightful place as first and not tenth in rank among all the States of the Union in material growth. That will be when the people of that State, with their faces turned all one way, agree that what they should do is not to break down, but to build up; not to hug the delusions of the past, but strike out for the prosperity and the glories of the future; not to cavil at pensions to Union soldiers, but remembering justice and not forgetting that the destruction of the Confederacy was a blessing and not a misfortune. When the voice of Missouri is thus uttered she will have no complaint to make about the oppression of Rhode Island or New England, and she will be profiting by their example.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Mr. President, I am not in the habit of taking much of the time of the Senate in defending my own record or in assailing the record of other Senators. If it were a defense only of myself, I would not rise now to attempt at this late hour to answer the Senator from Kansas, but he has also assailed my State. This is the second time that I have heard an assailant rise on the floor of the Senate within the past month and attack the State of New Jersey. In the first case the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] made charges, and, as he said, he proved from the census that the State of New Jersey, while first in education, was the very lowest of any State in the Union in point of morals.

I undertook to explain to the Senate at that time the situation of my State with respect to neighboring States. I stated—and it was a statement which large experience bears witness to—that excursionists from other States visited our State on every holiday and also on Sundays. I stated a further fact that the facilities opened up for their enjoyment went to help make up that record, immoral record, of which the Senator spoke. I called attention to the fact that when the people of Missouri came to my State thirsty we gave them drink; strangers, we took them in—in the station-house. I have in my mind now a case in point where the parties arrested were released by a very generous justice of the peace. And now the Senator from Missouri rises, census in hand, and proves them to have been Jerseymen. In pure self-defense New Jersey must abolish the census or apply the Chinese restriction law to missionaries.

Now, the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] rises to-day and refers to a certain fact that happened the other day in the Senate when I called attention to the fact that every Republican Senator on that side of the Chamber, save one, had voted to give a corporation in the District of Columbia the power to build a cable railroad through the streets of this city without exacting taxes from them. To-day he called attention to the fact that it was a very significant circumstance that such opposition should come from the Senator from New Jersey, the representative of a corporation-ridden State. So much the more reason, let me say to the Senator, why the Senator from New Jersey should oppose the bill. But is New Jersey all he characterized it?

Let me say to the Senator from Kansas that you may travel over this broad Union and search the statute-books of every State in it and you will not find on the statute-books of any State laws so liberal to the people and against the power of corporations as are found in the statute-books of New Jersey. We have a free railroad law in that State that allows any association of persons, when they reach the Delaware River with a corporation, if you please, coming from the State of Kansas, or a line of railroad reaching from that State to the State of New Jersey, to form a corporation and cross our territory without asking the privilege of anybody in that State except simply to file in the state department their articles of association. Let me also advise that Senator that when they build a railroad to-day in the State of New Jersey every corporation is required to pay taxes upon all the property which they have in the State.

Familiar as a Jerseyman with the practice and demand of our people, I come here and demand for the people of the District of Columbia exactly the same rights and privileges that are accorded to the people of my State. There was a time in New Jersey when the State granted monopolies to corporations, and taxed foreigners for the privilege of crossing it. Whether that was good policy or bad policy, I shall not attempt now to discuss; but there is no State to-day that has advanced in corporation laws more than the State of New Jersey. If the Senator from Kansas should ever visit that State and undertake, as I hope he may some time, to make speeches in behalf of that great political party to which he belongs, I caution him, if he expects to make any converts in that State, that he will not urge the same policy that he voted for in the Senate the other day in regard to the cable railroad bill in this District.

New Jersey occupies a very peculiar position upon the map of the country. Lying between the great commercial and financial city of the Union and one of the greatest manufacturing cities, upon whose territory of necessity must be laid those great arteries of communication which extend far and wide over the continent, conveying the material resources of the country and bringing the products of every State to our own doors, she to-day has made the iron horse, that great apostle of liberty and enterprise, as free as the sunlight or the air, and she compels all corporation property to pay taxes. This is her record.

The Senator has spoken with respect to my votes, I think in 1883, when the last tariff bill was under discussion before the Senate. He says that I then voted to increase the tax on pottery and that I voted to increase the tax on glassware. He also said in the same breath that I had voted against protection to New Jersey industries.

I rose for the purpose of asking the Senator if he would place his finger upon any particular vote of mine or upon any remark of mine in the Senate that qualified him to make any such statement. I did vote for an increase of the duty on pottery and glassware, and let me tell the Senator why I did so. I am that kind of a Democrat who believes in protection to American labor. God forbid that any political party in this country should ever reduce the wages of labor down to a point equal to that of the pauper labor of any country. In pottery and in glass 95 per cent. of the entire cost of the product is labor, and 5 per cent. of it is raw material.

I submit this proposition, that when you undertake to fix a duty of 50 per cent. on woolen goods which are manufactured very largely by machinery, in short almost entirely, and fix the same duty on pottery and glass, in which 95 per cent. is labor and all manual labor, because of the fact that pottery is still made by the old potter's wheel as in the days of the Egyptians and there is little machinery for the manufacture of these products, and when it is made to appear to me that the labor employed in such an industry is needful of more protection, I will grant to that industry more protection.

Mr. STEWART. Will the Senator name one article?

Mr. McPHERSON. I will listen to any Senator who has a suggestion to make, after I get through.

Now, Mr. President, I believe in so adjusting the tariff as to do two things. First, it should raise as near as possible the revenue needed to run this Government, and no more; and then, I favor such an adjustment of the tariff between the industries of the country as will best protect the wages of American labor. I believe in the Democratic platform of 1884, which, if it means anything at all, means protection to American labor. That is the policy I have always pursued with respect to this matter, and it is the policy I always intend to pursue.

Now, Mr. President, it seems to me a very strange proceeding that when the Senate has under consideration a bill known as a pension bill it should degenerate into a discussion of the tariff when there is no such subject before the Senate.

While I am on my feet I should like to make a single observation with respect to the pension bill. I did not intend to say anything about it, but I intended to vote on the question in accordance with my best judgment. I wish to show in a very few words the insincerity of the gentlemen on the other side of the Chamber in their action during the last few days with respect to this bill.

It is stated that the so-called Grand Army of the Republic prepared and sent to the Senate a bill representing their views. I have no complaint to make against this action of the Grand Army. I rather approve of it. I have no criticism to make with respect to that action on the part of the Grand Army nor should I in regard to any association of gentlemen in this country seeking to petition Congress either by a formal petition or by a bill. This organization is made up of representatives of both political parties. They led the private soldier during the war, and by common consent the soldier looks to this organization now that the war has ended for counsel and advice. I do not find anything to criticise and complain of in the methods of this great organization.

The Grand Army of the Republic, as I understand, prepared a bill moderate in its demands, which provided that when total disability of the soldier was found to have taken place, then that man should be entitled to a pension. From the time that bill was reported by the Committee on Pensions, which committee, I understand, practically reported back the bill as it came from the Grand Army, there has been an attempt on that side of the Chamber to amend it in all kinds of forms until to-day it has been increased in its demands to the extent of millions upon millions of dollars. In short, I do not believe that its most earnest advocates on that side of the Chamber can tell to-day within tens of millions of dollars the amount of money that will be required to put it into execution; and moreover the bill, if it becomes a law, can not be fairly executed.

If this Government to-day was troubled as other governments are, with a deficiency instead of a redundancy of revenue, I am at a loss to know what the inventive genius of that side of the Chamber would invent for the purpose of more effectually cheating the soldier than what has been done by way of amendment to this bill.

You have spent your time in this Chamber for the purpose of showing the soldier element of this country that but for the opposition of the Democratic party you would be able to get through just such legislation as would best conserve the interests of the soldier. A stranger in these galleries during the past few days, hearing the discussions that have taken place on that side of the Chamber, would have believed that the war had not yet ended. He would have believed that the war was again being renewed between the blue and the gray. Only eyes filled with passion can see a uniform of either blue or gray. Only hearts filled with fiendish hate can seek to revive again the horrid details of the late civil war.

My Democratic friends on this side of the Chamber have voted uniformly for pension bills the most extravagant that have been proposed. They have voted $880,000,000 since the close of the war to pension the invalid soldiers, and I believe to-day that if it can be shown that any soldier of the Union Army is unable to earn a livelihood, if he is totally incapacitated and dependent upon friends for support or on the cold charities of the world, they would vote again to extend the provisions of the pension law to him.

We hear more in this Capitol in the way of inciting strife than can be heard in any part of this broad country from Maine to California. I say it in truth and yet in shame. If to anybody is given the charge to quiet for all time the effects of our long-continued strife, which we know has brought sorrow and suffering to both sides, it certainly should begin here. For our Southern friends let me say that they have made the best proffer of reconciliation which a beaten people have ever made.

They have buried their flag and their losses, their natural resentments, and even their just expectations for the sake of peace and the common good. They have renewed their allegiance to the Constitution and laws of the United States, and have pledged anew their devotion to the unity of these States. Do you propose to accept it, or do you not? Do you propose, for the sake of personal or party domination, to keep this strife up while this Republic lasts, or do you expect and intend to accept their submission in the same spirit in which it is given? If you do, then let us hear no more of these strifes about the war which ended nearly twenty-five years ago—and God knows twenty-five years is about long enough to free grown men from the fear of its ghost.

Senators, I only echo the spirit and feeling which pervades the whole community, Republicans and Democrats alike, all over the Northern States. They sympathize with no ambition which aspires for any purpose to resurrect and revive again past animosities. What this country wants is peace and prosperity, and if you wish it, and if you will join in bringing it about, you will have accomplished a great good for the country. I am ready to vote for any increase of pension that may be needed to any worthy and disabled soldier. I have ever been the soldier's friend, and I shall ever continue to be his friend, notwithstanding this Government has paid out $880,000,000 in pensions, notwithstanding every Northern State has established homes for invalid soldiers and for their orphans, notwithstanding the Government has preferred the soldier in all places of Government employment. I think I speak the truth when I say that there is no community in a single Northern State that would permit a soldier to suffer for food or clothing or shelter if they had the knowledge that he needed either.

But as I commenced by saying, why did you not take the bill which was the greatest demand made upon you by the Grand Army of the Republic? The soldiers of the Republic have been in the habit of accepting leadership from the gentlemen associated in that Grand Army organization and who control its councils and determine its wishes. Why not accept exactly what they propose? Instead of that, in order that the soldiers might be again deceived by some, as I think, overzealous friends, they amend the bill until to-day its proportions are so extravagant and its promises so great that you know the bill never can become a law. What then is meant? Nothing in the world except the credit of having attempted to do the impossible for the soldier. If the soldiers do not see through this thin veneering, then truly they are arrant fools, and I am sure they are not.

Mr. SAWYER. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. PALMER. Will the Senator withdraw his motion for a moment? I desire to submit a resolution.

Mr. SAWYER. I withdraw the motion.

Mr. PALMER. I submit the resolution which I send to the desk.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BLOUNT. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads may be allowed to place in the Post-Office appropriation bill for consideration by the House a proposition authorizing allowances for rent, light, and fuel in third-class offices.

There being no objection, leave was granted.

SONE AND FLEMING MANUFACTURING COMPANY.

Mr. DAVENPORT. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration at the present time of the bill which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 3859) for the relief of the Sone and Fleming Manufacturing Company, limited, of the city of New York.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to the Sone and Fleming Manufacturing Company, limited, of the city of New York, the sum of $5,265.73, being the amount of drawback of duties due to them on certain tin cans exported by them, but which were not entered for drawback within the time fixed by law; said payment to be paid out of any money in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill; which was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. DAVENPORT moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

A. CUSIMANO & CO.

Mr. WILKINSON. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Private Calendar and put on its passage the bill (H. R. 4880) for the relief of A. Cusimano & Co.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to A. Cusimano & Co., of New Orleans, La., out of any funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,860.70, to reimburse them for a like sum by them paid and turned into the Treasury as duties on goods entitled to free entry.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill; which was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WILKINSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JOSEPH CASSON.

Mr. PAYSON. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Private Calendar for present consideration the bill which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 3613) for the relief of Joseph Casson.

Be it enacted, etc., That the entry of Joseph Casson, under date of September 27, 1881, per certificate numbered 75, of the southeast quarter of the northwest quarter of section 34, township 12, range 14, in Shawnee County, State of Kansas, be, and the same is hereby, ratified, confirmed, and declared valid; and the President is hereby authorized and directed to issue in due form a patent for said land to the said Joseph Casson.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill; which was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PAYSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PORTER ACADEMY, CHARLESTON, S. C.

Mr. DARGAN. I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee on Military Affairs from the further consideration of the bill (S. 158) authorizing the Secretary of War to transfer to the trustees of the Porter Academy certain property in the city of Charleston, S. C. A House bill identical with this has been reported favorably from the Committee on Military Affairs, and is now on the Private Calendar.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to convey, by deed duly and properly executed, to the trustees of the Porter Academy, of Charleston, S. C., and to their successors, the property situated in said city, belonging to the Government of the United States, formerly used as an arsenal, now and for the seven years last past used for educational purposes, bounded on the north by Bee street, on the east by Ashley street, on the south by Doughty street, and on the west by President street, said conveyance to embrace a condition that said property shall be inviolably dedicated to educational purposes, and no other.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of War shall require the said trustees to file an acceptance in the War Department of said property, stipulating that the same shall be dedicated and used for all time for educational purposes, and for no other.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. REED. Before the bill is acted on I would like to hear some explanation of it.

Mr. DARGAN. I will ask the Clerk to read the report of the Committee on Military Affairs upon the House bill.

The report (by Mr. LAIRD) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred bill (H. R. 5025) authorizing the Secretary of War to transfer to the trustees of the Porter Academy certain property in the city of Charleston, S. C., have considered the same and recommend that the bill do pass.

This bill in substance was favorably reported by this committee in the Forty-eighth Congress, second session; was also favorably reported by the Senate Military Committee. Certain facts of interest are stated in the Senate report, which is herewith given, namely:

"That this property was leased in 1879, by act of Congress, to Rev. A. Tomer Porter, at a mere nominal rent, and since that time Mr. Porter has spent in the erection of buildings, and for other purposes, about $80,000. He has been enabled to do this by the generous contributions of wealthy and charitable persons, chiefly in the North, and he desires now to enlarge the scope of the academy by adding an industrial and mechanical feature to it. This can not be done without further aid from the patrons of the school, and they are unwilling to give this while the title of the property remains in the Government.

"As the matter now stands the objects contemplated in the establishment of this noble charity would be defeated, and all improvements erected on the property would be lost should the Government at any time reclaim the property. The bill under consideration proposes to vest the title in the trustees of the academy and their successors, on the condition that the institution 'shall be inviolably dedicated to educational purposes, and no other.' The committee have amended the bill by adding a proviso that the property shall revert to the Government if at any time it should be used for any other purpose. The bill meets the approval of the Secretary of War and other authorities to whom it has been submitted, and the committee recommend its passage as amended."

The bill was submitted to the Secretary of War, and elicited from him the following report:

"WAR DEPARTMENT, Washington City, February 1, 1887.

"SIR: In reply to your reference without date of Senate bill No. 3230, which authorizes the Secretary of War to transfer to the trustees of the Porter Academy certain property in Charleston, S. C., I have the honor to inform you that there is no objection on the part of the Department to the passage of this measure, as the Government has no use for the property in question.

"Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

"WILLIAM C. ENDICOTT,
"Secretary of War.

"JAMES LAIRD, M. C."

Your committee respectfully recommend that the bill do pass.

Mr. REED. What is the value of this property?

Mr. DARGAN. I do not know the value of the property, but it is of no value to the Government. I understand the gentleman from Maine withdraws his objection, and I will not consume the time of the House.

Mr. REED. I have made no objection.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill; which was ordered to a third reading, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. DARGAN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

House bill No. 5025, identical with the Senate bill just passed, was, by unanimous consent, laid on the table.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole House from the further consideration of Senate bill No. 752, to grant a pension to Mrs. Elvira L. Johnson, widow of Commodore Philip E. Johnson, and put it upon its passage.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill will be read subject to objection.

The bill was read at length.

Mr. BELMONT. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. MATSON. I object.

R. S. STANLEY.

Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 6291) for the relief of R. S. Stanley, postmaster at Booneville, Miss., and put it upon its passage.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In the absence of the demand for the regular order, which the Chair understands to be withdrawn, the bill will be read subject to objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $88 be paid to R. S. Stanley, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, on account of money sent from the post-office at Booneville, Miss., in a registered-package envelope, to the postmaster at St. Louis, Mo., and which was burned en route from Booneville, Miss., to St. Louis, Mo.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BLAND. I think we had better have the regular order now.

OHIO CONNECTING RAILWAY BRIDGE.

Mr. DALZELL. I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole House from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 3215) to authorize the construction of the Ohio Connecting Railway Company bridge, and put it upon its passage.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill will be read, subject to objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Ohio Connecting Railway Company be, and the same is hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge over the Ohio River from the south shore to the north shore thereof, at a point about one-half mile south of the mouth of Cork's Run, in Allegheny County, Pennsylvania. Said bridge is hereby declared to be a lawful structure, and the same may be used for railroad and highway purposes. Said bridge to be constructed as follows: The main-channel span of said bridge shall be a continuous through span of 500 feet clear of masonry. The back-channel span shall be one through span of 400 feet clear of masonry, said space in each case to be measured on the low-water line. The remaining spans of said bridge shall be deck-spans. Said main-channel span and said back-channel shall be at a height of 80 feet above zero-water mark at Market street in Pittsburgh, and 82½ feet above zero at the bridge site, measured to the bottom chord of the bridge.

SEC. 2. The location of the piers of said bridge with reference to the current of the river shall be according to plans and specifications that have been filed with and approved by the War Department.

SEC. 3. That all acts and parts of acts inconsistent herewith be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

The committee recommend the adoption of the following amendments:

In line 11, after the word "hundred," insert "and seven."

In line 17, after the word "of," insert the words "not less than." In the same line strike out "zero" and insert "low."

In line 18, after the words "Pittsburgh and," insert the words "not less than."

In line 19 strike out "zero" and insert "local low-water mark."

In section 2, line 2, insert after the words "according to" the word "such."

After the word "specifications," in line 3, strike out the words "that have been filed with and" and insert "as may be."

Add to section 2 the following proviso: "Provided, That no advertisement as required by the general law be again made, unless thought advisable and necessary by the Secretary of War, advertisement having already been made."

Strike out section 3 and insert a new section 3, as follows:

"SEC. 3. That equal privileges in the use of said bridge shall be granted to all telegraph and telephone companies."

Also insert new sections 4, 5, and 6, as follows:

"SEC. 4. That all railroad companies desiring the use of said bridge shall have and be entitled to equal rights and privileges relative to the passage of railway trains or cars over the same, and over the approaches thereto, upon payment of a reasonable compensation for such use, and in case the owner or owners of said bridge and the several railroad companies, or any one of them, desiring such use shall fail to agree upon the sum or sums to be paid and upon rules and upon conditions to which each shall conform in using said bridge, all matters at issue between them shall be decided by the Secretary of War, upon a hearing of the allegations and proofs of the parties.

"SEC. 5. That said bridge shall be constructed to provide for the passage of railway trains, and, at the option of the corporation by which it may be built, may be used for the passage of wagons and vehicles of all kinds, for the transit of animals, and for foot-passengers, for such reasonable rates of toll as may be approved from time to time by the Secretary of War.

"SEC. 6. That the said bridge shall be built under the provisions of the act of December 17, 1872, and authorizing the construction of bridges across the Ohio River, and the amendatory act of February 14, 1873, except in so far as the provisions of said acts may be modified or changed by the provisions of this act: Provided, That if the construction of said bridge shall not be commenced within one year and completed within four years after the passage of this act, all privileges conferred hereby and this act shall become null and void."

Mr. HOLMAN. I think there should be some explanation as to the reason for not building this bridge under the provisions of the act of 1872.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, this bridge differs from the bridges built under the provisions of that act in only one particular. This is to be 82½ feet instead of 90 feet high. This bridge has been approved by the Board of Engineers of the War Department, and the plan is on file before the Department, and has been approved by it. It has also been approved by the board of coal-men who have charge of the interests of navigation at Pittsburgh, on the Ohio River. According to the Chief of Engineers the oscillation of the water at this point does not render it necessary to build the bridge any higher than the number of feet specified. In addition to that, within a half mile further up the Ohio River, there is now a bridge which is only 78 feet high. So that the requirements of navigation are not interfered with at all by this bridge, but on the contrary all of the necessary conditions have been complied with in drawing up this bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the third section, which is proposed to be stricken out, will again be read.

Section 3 was again reported.

There being no objection the bill was considered, the amendments concurred in, and the bill as amended ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. DALZELL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LIFE-SAVING STATION, KEWAUNEE, WIS.

Mr. HUDD. I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 1923) providing for the establishment of a life-saving station at the harbor of Kewaunee, Wis., and put it upon its passage.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. Mr. Speaker, I shall make a conditional objection to the consideration of that bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will reserve the right of the gentleman to object after the bill has been read.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. I wish to make it now, and can just as well do so as after the reading of the bill. I am interested to some extent in legislation, occasionally, on this floor; and hereafter I propose to object to every bill that is subject to objection that is not presented from the body of the House—substantially from the seat of the member proposing it. I wish to know what is going on about the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio makes a very proper point of order. Members will be seated and the area in front of the desk will be kept clear.

The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to establish a life-saving station at the harbor of Kewaunee, State of Wisconsin.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HUDD moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MILLS rose.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole House from the further consideration of House bill 4900, for the relief of Washington L. Parvin and Henry A. Greene.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas rose. For what purpose?

Mr. MILLS. I want to ask unanimous consent to have 3,000 copies of the tariff bill, reported to the Ways and Means Committee this morning, printed for the use of the House. We have had a number of requests for copies, and I make that request now.

Mr. REED. I would like to have that put in proper form.

Mr. MILLS. I withdraw it if there is any objection. It was done at the request of the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. MCKINLEY. I hope the gentleman from Maine will not object.

Mr. REED. There is no objection. I only want it properly stated.

Mr. BELMONT. I demand the regular order.

Mr. SPOONER. I hope the gentleman from New York will withdraw that demand.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will complete the reading of the bill.

The bill was read at length.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Let us have the report read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will first ask if there is objection to the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. BELMONT. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is tantamount to an objection.

Mr. SPOONER. This was passed in the last House and was passed once before in the Senate.

Mr. BELMONT. I regret very much to interfere with the bill, but it is necessary to proceed with the special order to-day.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is the call of committees for reports.

MUTILATED SILVER COINS.

Mr. BLAND, from the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, reported, as a substitute for the bill H. R. 6631, a bill (H. R. 7933) providing for the exchange of worn, defaced, clipped, punched, or otherwise mutilated silver coins of the United States of smaller denominations than one dollar for new or unworn silver coins at designated places and under certain circumstances; which was read a first and second time, referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

The bill H. R. 6631 was laid on the table.

THREE-DOLLAR GOLD PIECES.

Mr. BLAND also, from the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 7214) to prohibit the coinage of three-dollar gold pieces; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, informed the House that the Senate had disagreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 154) for the erection of a public building at Milwaukee, Wis., asked a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. SPOONER, Mr. QUAY, and Mr. VEST as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message further announced that the Senate had disagreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 182) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Omaha, Nebr., asked a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. SPOONER, Mr. QUAY, and Mr. VEST as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. 4756) to amend an act to restrict the ownership of real estate in the Territories to American citizens, etc., approved March 3, 1887.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. 1095) to provide for the compulsory education of Indian children; and

A bill (S. 1514) to establish a national art commission.

ANCHORAGE OF VESSELS AT NEW YORK.

Mr. BRYCE (by Mr. CLARDY), from the Committee on Commerce, reported back with amendments the bill (H. R. 5657) relating to the anchorage of vessels in the port of New York; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the amendments and accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

DR. H. B. MATTEOSIAN.

Mr. RUSSELL, of Massachusetts, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, reported a bill (H. R. 7934) for the relief of Dr. H. B. Matteosian; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

GENERAL G. CLUSERET.

HANNAH J. JONES.

Mr. HOOKER, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 4257) for the relief of Hannah J. Jones, executrix; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

VOLUNTEER SOLDIERS.

Mr. STEELE, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back, as a substitute for sundry bills, the bill (H. R. 6106) for the relief of certain volunteer soldiers of the late war; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

The original bills were laid upon the table.

LOTTERY CIRCULARS.

Mr. BLOUNT, from the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, reported back with adverse recommendations the bill (H. R. 3320) to amend section 3894 of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to the transmission through the mails of lottery, giften-terprise, and other circulars, and for excluding from the mails newspapers and periodicals containing advertisements of the same; and the bill (H. R. 3324) to prohibit the mailing of newspapers and other publications containing lottery advertisements, and prescribing the penalty for the violation of the same; which were referred to the House Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

CERTIFICATION OF LANDS TO KANSAS.

Mr. TURNER, of Kansas, from the Committee on the Public Lands, reported back with amendments the joint resolution (H. Res. 14) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to certify lands to the State of Kansas for the benefit of agriculture and the mechanic arts; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the amendments and accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

CHIPPEWA INDIANS IN MINNESOTA.

Mr. NELSON, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported as a substitute for the bill H. R. 1581 a bill (H. R. 7935) for the relief and civilization of the Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

The bill H. R. 1581 was laid upon the table.

RIGHT OF WAY THROUGH CROW INDIAN RESERVATION.

Mr. COBB, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 4786) granting to the Billings, Grand Fork and Cooke City Railroad the right of way through the Crow Indian reservation; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. NELSON presented the views of the minority on the above bill; which were ordered to be printed with the report of the committee.

UINTAH INDIAN RESERVATION.

Mr. COBB also, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported a bill (H. R. 7936) to restore to the public domain a part of the Uintah Indian reservation, in the Territory of Utah, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

SETTLERS IN WIND RIVER VALLEY, WYOMING TERRITORY.

Mr. COBB also, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported back with amendments the bill (H. R. 4248) for the relief of certain settlers in Wind River Valley, Wyoming Territory; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the amendments and accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ARTESIAN WELLS IN NEW MEXICO.

Mr. JOSEPH, from the Committee on the Territories, reported, as a substitute for the bills H. R. 1980 and H. R. 6166, a bill (H. R. 7937) to provide for the boring of artesian wells in the Territory of New Mexico; which was read a first and second time, referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

The bills H. R. 1980 and H. R. 6166 were laid on the table.

PUBLIC BUILDING, ATLANTA, GA.

Mr. DIBBLE, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, reported, as a substitute for the bill H. R. 3314, a bill (H. R. 7938) to enlarge and make repairs upon the United States court-house and post-office building in Atlanta, Ga., and to appropriate money therefor; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

The original bill, H. R. 3314, was laid on the table.

ABBIE M. HAY.

Mr. SPOONER, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (S. 172) granting a pension to Abbie M. Hay; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MARY MARTIN.

Mr. SPOONER also, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (S. 174) granting a pension to Mary Martin; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

L. D. SUGG.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 559) for the relief of L. D. Sugg; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

WILLIAM ANDERSON.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky, also, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 3140) for the relief of William Anderson; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MRS. ELIZA E. HEBERT.

Mr. STONE of Kentucky, also, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 4526) for the relief of Mrs. Eliza E. Hebert, widow of Jules J. Hebert, deceased; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

W. W. WEEDON.

Mr. TAULBEE, from the Committee on Claims, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 3686) for the relief of the administrators de bonis non, sureties of W. W. Weedon, deceased; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

JOHN J. FRAZIER.

Mr. BROWER, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back with amendments the bill (H. R. 6551) for the relief of John J. Frazier; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

THOMAS I. TAYLOR.

Mr. O'NEALL, of Indiana, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back with an amendment the bill (H. R. 2161) for the relief of Thomas I. Taylor; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

D. M. SPRAGUE AND WILLIAM TILTON.

Mr. CROUSE, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 4856) for the relief of D. M. Sprague and William Tilton; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. CROUSE also, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 6922) for the relief of George W. Graham; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ANSON RUDD.

Mr. McCREARY, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 6879) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to convey to Anson Rudd, of the State of Colorado, certain real estate in the county of Fremont, in said State; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

EXPENDITURES IN PENSION BUREAU.

Mr. HUDD, from the Committee on Expenditures in the Interior Department, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 7434) to provide for the proper application of money in the Pension Bureau of the Interior Department; which was referred to the House Calendar, and ordered to be printed.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Mr. CLEMENTS, from the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service, reported back bills of the following titles; which were severally laid on the table, and the accompanying reports ordered to be printed:

A bill (H. R. 1571) fixing the tenure of public officials and to reform the civil service; and

A bill (H. R. 4301) to prescribe terms of office for persons employed in the civil service.

MILITIA OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. McADOO, from the Committee on the Militia, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 4961) to amend the act entitled "An act to more effectually provide for the organization of the militia of the District of Columbia," passed March 3, 1803; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The call of committees is completed. Gentlemen who desire to present reports from committees will now be recognized.

CHINESE IMMIGRATION.

Mr. MORROW, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, submitted the following report:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, February 27, 1888.

"Resolved, That the President be, and he is hereby, requested to communicate to the House, if, in his opinion, not incompatible with the public interests, what if any steps have been taken, in the direction of treaty stipulations or otherwise, to prevent the continued immigration of Chinese laborers into the United States, notwithstanding the provisions of the treaty of November 17, 1880, between the United States and the Empire of China and the laws of the United States passed in pursuance thereof, suspending such immigration."

The Committee on Foreign Affairs, having had under consideration the resolution asking the President for information in relation to treaty stipulations on the subject of Chinese immigration, report the same back with the recommendation that the resolution do pass.

Mr. MORROW. I demand the previous question on the adoption of this resolution.

The previous question was ordered; and under the operation thereof the resolution was adopted.

Mr. MORROW moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

EXPENDITURES FOR ARREST OF ILLICIT DISTILLERS.

Mr. CLEMENTS, from the Committee on Appropriations, submitted a report; which was read, as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, February 17, 1888.

Mr. HENDERSON, of North Carolina, submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations:

"Whereas the Attorney-General in his last annual report states, for the information of Congress, that 'a fund which was annually appropriated for years for the use of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue in the investigation of frauds has been reduced largely, and the service of the bureau has to a limited extent been thrown upon the judiciary appropriation in the matter of making arrests of illicit distillers. * * * The expenses are payable from fees and expenses of marshals, as employés of the revenue agents are temporarily commissioned as deputy marshals:' Therefore,

"Resolved by the House of Representatives, That the Attorney-General be called upon to inform the House in what districts, to what persons, and in what amount and for what purposes such expenses have been paid or incurred, and by what authority of law any portion of the judiciary appropriation has been used in paying the employés of revenue agents."

The Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the accompanying resolution calling upon the Attorney-General for information touching the use of the appropriation made for judicial expenses in making arrests of illicit distillers, having considered the same, report it back herewith and recommend its adoption.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. CLEMENTS moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CATTLE-GRAZIERS ON PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. STOCKDALE, from the Committee on the Public Lands, submitted the following report:

IN HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, January 4, 1888.

Mr. O'FERRALL submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on the Public Lands:

"Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to communicate to this House any information in his possession in reference to the illegal use of the public lands by cattle-graziers, giving the names of such malfeasors and the quantity of land so used, and also what steps the Interior Department and its agents have taken to prevent and prohibit such illegal use of the public lands, including any proceedings taken, judicially or otherwise, in the premises."

Your committee, to whom was referred the resolution offered by Hon. CHARLES T. O'FERRALL on January 4, 1888, relating to the occupation of public lands by cattle-graziers, submit the following substitute for the original resolution, and recommend its adoption:

"Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to communicate to this House any information in his possession in reference to the use of the public lands by cattle-graziers, giving the names of such graziers, as far as known to his Department, and the quantity of lands occupied by such graziers."

The question being taken on agreeing to the resolution reported by the Committee on the Public Lands as a substitute, it was adopted; and the original resolution was laid on the table.

Mr. STOCKDALE moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution reported by the committee as a substitute was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

STATE HOMES FOR DISABLED SOLDIERS, ETC.

Mr. LAIRD, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 7939) to provide aid to State homes for the support of disabled soldiers and sailors of the United States, their widows and orphans; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

INTERCOURSE WITH INDIAN TRIBES.

Mr. LAIRD also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 7940) to repeal part of section 17 of the act approved June 30, 1834, entitled "An act to regulate trade and intercourse with the Indian tribes, and to preserve the peace on the frontiers;" which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

TAXATION ON CIGARS, ETC.

Mr. NELSON. I ask unanimous consent that a brief petition from the Cigar-Makers' Union of Duluth, Minn., protesting against the repeal of internal-revenue taxation on manufactured tobacco, be printed in the RECORD without the names, and referred to the Committee on Ways and Means.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection, that order will be made. The Chair hears none.

The body of the petition is as follows:

To the honorable the House of Representatives at Washington, D. C.:

HONORED SIRS: The undersigned citizens respectfully and most emphatically protest against the repeal of the internal-revenue laws in reference to cigars and cheroots, believing that such action would be detrimental to the best interests of the workingmen employed in that industry.

HEIRS OF JOHN F. SHORTER.

Mr. MAISH, by unanimous consent, reported back favorably from the Committee on Military Affairs the bill (H. R. 2465) for the relief of the heirs of John F. Shorter; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ALFRED HEDBERG.

Mr. MAISH also, by unanimous consent, reported back with amendment, from the Committee on Military Affairs, the bill (H. R. 3435) for the relief of Alfred Hedberg; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is the call of committees for one hour for the consideration of bills. The hour begins at ten minutes past 1 o'clock.

Mr. DIBBLE (when the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds was called) said: I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering bills reported by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. MCCREARY in the chair.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT BRIDGEPORT, CONN.

Mr. DIBBLE. I call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 7264) for the erection of a public building at Bridgeport, Conn.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to purchase or otherwise provide a site, and cause to be erected thereon a substantial and commodious building, with fire-proof vaults, for the use and accommodation of the post-office and for other Government uses at Bridgeport, Conn. The site and building thereon, when completed upon plans and specifications to be previously made and approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, shall not exceed in cost the sum of $150,000; nor shall any site be purchased until estimates for the erection of a building which will furnish sufficient accommodations for the transaction of the public business, and which shall not exceed in cost the balance of the sum herein limited after the site shall have been purchased and paid for, shall have been approved by the Secretary of the Treasury; and no purchase of site nor plan for said building shall be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury involving an expenditure exceeding the said sum of $150,000 for site and building; and the site purchased shall leave the building unexposed to danger from fire by an open space of at least 40 feet, including streets and alleys: Provided, That no part of said sum shall be expended until a valid title to the said site shall be vested in the United States, nor until the State of Connecticut shall cede to the United States exclusive jurisdiction over the same, during the time the United States shall be or remain the owner thereof, for all purposes except the administration of the criminal laws of said State and the service of civil process therein.

Mr. DIBBLE. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman who introduced this bill, Mr. GRANGER, I regret to say, is detained at home on account of sickness.

It is for a post-office and custom-house for the third city in the State of Connecticut. This post-office ranks thirty-seventh in the United States, and there are ninety-seven post-offices having a Government post-office building. This has also a custom-house, and has been made a port of entry, and the custom-house receipts are important. I move it be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. BLAND. I ask for the reading of the report.

The report (by Mr. SOWDEN) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7264) to authorize the purchase of a site and the erection thereon of a suitable building for the post-office, custom-house, internal-revenue office, and other Government buildings at the city of Bridgeport, Conn., submit the following report:

The city of Bridgeport, situate on Long Island Sound, in the county of Fairfield, Connecticut, is third, if not the second, largest city in the State. It is rapidly increasing in population and commercial importance and is destined in the near future to be one of the largest cities in Connecticut. It is 56 miles eastward of New York, on the line of the Consolidated Railroad, and one of its principal points of freight and passenger traffic. It is also the terminus of two important and prosperous railroads, namely, the Housatonic and the Naugatuck. The population is now estimated at 47,686. It has 98 daily passenger trains, and the amount of freight received in 1887 was 259,952 tons, and the amount forwarded, 341,236 tons. Total number of car-loads of freight in 1887 was 60,119; average daily, 194. A very large amount of freight is also received and forwarded by steam-boats and other craft. The total number of vessels arriving at Bridgeport in 1887, 13,823. It is also the seat of large manufacturing interests; 7 principal manufacturers employ 4,485 hands, and paid in wages in 1887, $2,764,760, and the market value of their finished products was $13,366,767.

CUSTOM-HOUSE STATISTICS—PORT OF BRIDGEPORT.

Duties collected from July 1, 1887, to December 31, 1887	$7,384.39
NOTE.—The receipts of the custom-house have increased largely since Bridgeport has been made a port of original entry, and it is estimated that the receipts for the year ending June 30, 1888, will exceed $20,000.
Number of vessels entered from foreign countries in 1887	11
Number of vessels cleared for foreign countries	9
Estimated number of coastwise steamers arrived	4,700
Estimated number of other vessels arrived	3,650
Estimated number of steamers and other vessels departed	8,350
Estimated tonnage	1,250,000
Estimated value of cargoes received	$40,500,000
Estimated value of cargoes shipped	41,000,000
Estimated number of vessels entering Bridgeport Harbor as a port of refuge	1,200
Estimated duties to be collected for fiscal year ending June 30, 1888	$20,000

The post-office of Bridgeport, in addition to distributing the local mail, is also a distributing office for Easton, Plattsville, Huntington, Nichols, Black Rock, and West Stratford post-offices, and a terminal office for the Housatonic Railroad and the Naugatuck Railroad.

The office is a first-class post-office, and employs 13 clerks, headquarters for 8 postal clerks, and has 18 letter-carriers, and 1 special-delivery messenger.

The net income of the post-office at Bridgeport for 1882 was $17,000 more than the gross income of 1876. The post-office receipts for the year ending June 30, 1885, were $48,468, and the receipts from January 1, 1887, to January 1, 1888, were $56,556.06, and it is estimated that the receipts for the year ending June 30, 1888, will be over $60,000.

The rent paid for post-office accommodations in 1865 was $300.

The rent paid for post-office accommodations in 1887 was $3,087.50. The amount of rent will be largely increased in the immediate future, owing to the rapid increase in population and business, and the consequent necessity for additional accommodations.

The business transacted by the Department during the past year is as follows:

First, third, and fourth class matter	pieces	7,406,671
Second-class—weight	pounds	85,911
Second-class	pieces	1,116,843
Registered letters	number	46,586
Money-order and postal-note transactions	do	24,959

Rank of Bridgeport post-office in proportion to the other post-offices of the United States is thirty-seventh; ninety-seven have Government post-office buildings.

The facilities of the present office are entirely inadequate for the post-office business. There is no public building in Bridgeport, and the absolute wants of the post-office and custom-house business as well as the needs of the public require that a suitable building should be erected by the Government for the purpose of meeting such wants.

Your committee, in consideration of the foregoing facts, report the accompanying substitute for bill H. R. 1266, and recommend its passage.

Mr. BLAND. What is the time allowed for this debate?

The CHAIRMAN. This is consideration hour, and the whole hour has been assigned to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. BLAND. Under the special order?

The CHAIRMAN. This does not come under the special order.

Mr. DIBBLE. No; it does not.

Mr. BLAND. I have not yielded the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri has been recognized.

Mr. DIBBLE. I do not know when I left the floor.

Mr. BLAND. The gentleman from South Carolina moved that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] asked for the reading of the report.

Mr. DIBBLE. Yes; I made the motion that the bill be laid aside favorably, and then withdrew it for the reading of the report on the request of the gentleman from Missouri; but therefore I did not intend to yield the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood the gentleman from South Carolina to yield the floor.

Mr. BLAND. The gentleman can not move to lay the bill aside while an amendment is pending, and I desire to move an amendment to the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will send his amendment up.

Mr. BLAND. The bill appropriates $150,000, and I move that sum wherever it occurs shall be reduced to $100,000.

Now, Mr. Chairman, while I do not believe it is good policy to erect public buildings at places as small as this, I think $100,000 is sufficient if the bill is to pass. I therefore have moved to strike out "$150,000" and insert "$100,000."

In the beginning of the consideration of these bills I think I stated that although there might be some places where the courts of the United States were required to be held, that did not even in that case demand the erection of a public building for the accommodation of the courts; but still as a matter of policy, as a matter of principle to settle a definite policy somewhere, I stated that had been the rule adopted heretofore so far as I could remember, and there has been little opposition to bills which provided for United States court-houses; that where a public building was necessary in order to transact the regular business of the courts at any point and for the preservation of the official records there has not been very much opposition to places of that character or to bills possessing that merit, although the Government did not require such a building.

Now, Bridgeport, Conn., does not require a public building, I believe, for any other purpose than for the accommodation of the post-office and the office of the collector of internal revenue, and it seems that a rental of $3,000 is sufficient to provide such accommodations.

But I wish again to call the attention of the committee and the House to the fact of the business of the Government in these various towns and cities for many years from which comes up this demand for public buildings. There has been operating a suspicion here, and it has been announced as a fact, that because we have an overflowing Treasury, because there is nothing else to which to appropriate this money, we have gone largely into the policy of erecting these public buildings; that that is the groundwork for these unnecessary appropriations for public buildings. It seems to me we ought to go a little slower in the passage of these bills, and to exercise a little more careful supervision as to just what bills are passed.

We began by passing bills where there was no special demand for them. Here and there we have passed some having some merit. It is difficult indeed, it would seem, to pass meritorious bills without at the same time opening up the sluice-gates for all manner and sorts of public-building bills. For instance, take the bill passed for a public building at Bar Harbor, appropriating $25,000, a city having a population of 4,000 during the winter season, and for a few months in the summer season perhaps a few thousand visitors in addition. The bill was reported for $50,000, but on my motion it was reduced to $25,000. They were given this sum of $25,000. That is to be a precedent, I suppose, and if it is considered a precedent it will lay the foundation for appropriations for public buildings in every town in the country having four or five thousand inhabitants. In that event we need pass no bills for reducing taxation or other bills to take from the Treasury its surplus. We have public-building bills now introduced and pending sufficient to take every dollar of the surplus.

Mr. DIBBLE. I wish to say to my friend from Missouri that this bill was introduced, or rather the bill for which this is a substitute, originally for $200,000. The committee after considering all the circumstances of the case reduced that amount to $150,000, which they submit to this committee is a reasonable sum, from the following considerations: The present rental for the post-office accommodations alone, without taking into account the customs, is $3,087.50. The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds was reliably informed that there will be a rise in that rental in the coming year, and that before this building can be constructed the Government will be paying a rent in the city of Bridgeport of about $5,000 a year for the accommodation of its business.

That sum, at the rate of 3½ per cent., at which the Government can borrow money, is the interest on about $150,000. When this building is constructed the Government is secured from further increase of rental, which is likely to occur. Therefore, in the interest of economy, this amount should be allowed; and I feel satisfied that a less amount would only require the people of Bridgeport to come back here and ask for further accommodations for business in their midst. It is a city of forty-odd thousand inhabitants, an original port of entry and customs, with a large postal business.

I ask for a vote upon the pending amendment.

The question was taken, and the Chairman decided that the "noes" appeared to prevail.

Mr. BLAND. I demand a division.

Mr. DIBBLE. I will ask the committee to adopt the amendment, as the gentleman insists upon it.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 60, noes 0.

So (no further count being demanded) the amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

PUBLIC BUILDING, HOBOKEN, N. J.

Mr. DIBBLE. I now call up the bill (H. R. 7265) for the erection of a public building at Hoboken, N. J.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to purchase, acquire by condemnation, or otherwise provide a site, and cause to be erected thereon a substantial and commodious building, with fire-proof vaults, for the use and accommodation of the post-office and for other Government uses at Hoboken, N. J. The site and building thereon, when completed upon plans and specifications to be previously made and approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, shall not exceed in cost the sum of $60,000; nor shall any site be purchased until estimates for the erection of a building which will furnish sufficient accommodations for the transaction of the public business, and which shall not exceed in cost the balance of the sum herein limited after the site shall have been purchased and paid for, shall have been approved by the Secretary of the Treasury; and no purchase of site nor plan for said building shall be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury involving an expenditure exceeding the said sum of $60,000 for site and building; and the site purchased shall leave the building unexposed to danger from fire by an open space of at least 40 feet, including streets and alleys: Provided, That no part of said sum shall be expended until a valid title to the said site shall be vested in the United States, nor until the State of New Jersey shall cede to the United States exclusive jurisdiction over the same during the time the United States shall be or remain the owner thereof, for all purposes except the administration of the criminal laws of said State and the service of civil process therein.

Mr. DIBBLE. I ask for the reading of the report.

The report (by Mr. SOWDEN) was read, as follows:

Hoboken, Hudson County, New Jersey, is situated on the west bank of the Hudson River, directly opposite the center of the city of New York. It has been an incorporated city for many years. In area it is about 2 miles long by about 1½ miles wide.

It has a population of 43,000, 25 per cent. of which has been added within ten years. Four lines of trans-Atlantic steamers have their American termini at Hoboken. They are well-known European lines. It is a great coaling depot and the home place of one of the leading express companies. It has numerous great manufacturing industries, such as paper, silk, machines, iron, steel, lead-pencils, scientific instruments, and very many others.

There is located here the well-known Stevens Institute of Technology, whose pupils come from all American countries. It has a large mercantile and miscellaneous business, and is, in a word, a live, thriving, busy, and progressive city. The real property of the city is assessed at $15,000,000. Two great railroad systems terminate in Hoboken. It has three ferries running constantly to New York, and is well policed and paved, and has many horse railways. It has banks and hotels.

The number of letters collected last year from letter-boxes, 829,512; number of letters, papers, postal-cards, etc., distributed, 1,689,332; number of registered money-letters sent out, 5,608; gross receipts, $18,414.33; total expenses, $11,525.98; net income to United States, $6,887.35. It has no post-office or other Federal building. The present post-office is located on the one floor of a building for which rent, fuel, and light cost the Government $944.90 per year.

It is dingy, overcrowded, inconvenient, and totally inadequate to the wants of the place, the rights of the public, and a proper postal service.

Eighteen mails are received and seventeen are sent out every day. The mails for West Hoboken, Union Hill, Guttenberg, West New York, Station A, North Bergen, and Weehawken are received, sorted, and sent out from the Hoboken office.

The United States have customs, internal-revenue, and court officers in Hoboken, but no Federal building.

We feel sure that the large postal business, increasing, as it is, rapidly, and the necessity for offices for Federal purposes in this large city demand an adequate public building, and we therefore favor the grant of the moderate sum asked in this bill.

Your committee, in consideration of the foregoing facts, recommend the passage of the accompanying substitute for H. R. 4990.

Mr. NEAL. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. MCADOO].

Mr. MCADOO. Mr. Chairman, unless it is requested by some members of the committee that a further explanation of this bill be given, I do not desire to occupy the time of the House. This is simply a proposition to appropriate the sum named in the bill for the construction of a public building in this city, containing some 43,000 inhabitants, which sum I take it is about as small a sum as could be named for the purpose, and I may be permitted to add that in all my experience here no more worthy location has been suggested for a public building than this.

This city, as I have stated, has a population of 43,000 people, and within the next decade in all probability it will have increased to 75,000, or over, within its limits. We only ask the sum of $60,000 for the purchase of a site and the erection of the building, although this city is right across the river from the great metropolis of New York; and in view of these facts I am quite willing to submit the question to the decision of the House without further argument.

Mr. NEAL. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND], if he desires it.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, it does look like folly to make an amendment to that bill; for, as the gentleman from New Jersey has intimated, if the appropriation is needed at all it certainly needs that much. But I want to call the attention of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds—I do not see the chairman of the committee present at this moment—to the fact that I had supposed they would have submitted some proposition before now establishing some system in relation to these public buildings. The amendment that I offered to a bill the other day was no doubt properly ruled out, because it was a general law and not germane to a special bill. But I introduced that proposition in the shape of a bill last Monday, and had it referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds; and it seems to me that we ought to be considering that or some other bill or some proposition that would establish a general principle or some precedent by which this matter could be regulated.

It is very difficult for the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds to lay down any rule to accommodate the one hundred and fifty-odd members who have introduced public-building bills at this session. The bill that I introduced proposed that wherever any department of the Government desired a public building, or found it necessary at a particular place for the transaction of the business of that department, that they should so certify to Congress, making recommendations as to the dimensions of the building, for what purpose intended, the necessary cost, and all other facts needed for the consideration of the proposition; but in no case should a public building be erected where the rental was $5,000 or less, with the exception of a case where it was impossible for a department to procure a suitable building at any rental at all.

Mr. Chairman, I suppose if the various bills that have passed here are to become laws, and are meritorious, this one is also meritorious. As I said before, I can not see how it could be put at a less sum than that named in the bill, if you expect to erect a public building to answer any purpose whatever in a town of that size.

Mr. DIBBLE. I ask unanimous consent that general debate on this bill be now considered closed.

Mr. BLAND. I object.

Mr. DIBBLE. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose, and the Speaker pro tempore having resumed the chair, Mr. MCCREARY reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 7264) for the erection of a public building at Bridgeport, Conn., had directed him to report back the same with amendments.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT BRIDGEPORT, CONN.

The House proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 7264) for the erection of a public building at Bridgeport, Conn., reported from the Committee of the Whole with amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill as amended.

Mr. BLAND. I call for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 151, noes 3.

So (further count not being called for) the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. BLAND. Let us have a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 159, noes 6.

So the bill was passed.

Mr. DIBBLE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

Mr. BLAND. Upon the latter motion I call for a division.

Mr. DIBBLE. I withdraw the motion to reconsider.

Mr. BLAND. I renew the motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

Mr. DIBBLE. I move to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The House divided; and the Speaker pro tempore stated that the "ayes" seemed to have it.

Mr. BLAND. I call for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 161, noes 5.

So the motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT HOBOKEN, N. J.

Mr. DIBBLE. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering bills reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds; and pending that motion I move that general debate on the bill pending in the committee be limited to one minute.

The motion was agreed to.

The motion that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. MCCREARY in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering bills called up by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

The Clerk will report the title of the unfinished bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 7265) for the erection of a public building at Hoboken, N. J.

Mr. DIBBLE. I yield one minute to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND].

Mr. BLAND. I have said all I wish to say.

Mr. DIBBLE. I move that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT SEDALIA, MO.

Mr. DIBBLE. I call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 1599) to provide for the erection of a public building in the city of Sedalia, in the State of Missouri.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to purchase or otherwise provide a site, and cause to be erected thereon a substantial and commodious building, with fire-proof vaults, for the use and accommodation of the post-office and other Government offices located thereon, or which may be located hereafter at said city of Sedalia. The site and building thereon, when completed upon plans and specifications to be previously made and approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, shall not exceed in cost the sum of $75,000, nor shall any site be purchased until estimates for the erection of a building which will furnish sufficient accommodations for the transaction of the public business, and which shall not exceed in cost the balance of the sum herein limited after the site shall have been purchased and paid for, shall have been approved by the Secretary of the Treasury; and no purchase of site, nor plan for said building, shall be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury involving an expenditure exceeding the said sum of $75,000 for site and building; and the site purchased shall leave the building unexposed to danger from fire by an open space of at least 40 feet, including streets and alleys: Provided, That no part of said sum shall be expended until a valid title to the said site shall be vested in the United States, nor until the State of Missouri shall cede to the United States exclusive jurisdiction over the same during the time the United States shall be or remain the owner thereof, for all purposes except the administration of the criminal laws of said State and the service of civil process therein.

The bill was reported with the following amendments:

In line 12 strike out "$75,000" and insert "$50,000."
In line 21 strike out "$75,000" and insert "$50,000."

Mr. DIBBLE. I move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. BLAND. I desire to offer an amendment to the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina had the floor, and moves that the committee do now rise.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry. What would be the condition of this bill if the committee should now rise?

The CHAIRMAN. The bill will be the unfinished business for the next consideration hour.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker pro tempore having resumed the chair, Mr. MCCREARY reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the bill H. R. 7265, had directed him to report the same with a favorable recommendation; and that, having had under consideration the bill H. R. 1599, had come to no resolution thereon.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT HOBOKEN, N. J.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the title of the bill reported with a favorable recommendation from the Committee of the Whole.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 7265) for the erection of a public building at Hoboken, N. J.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. BLAND. I call for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 169, noes 4.

So the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is, Shall this bill pass?

Mr. BLAND. I call for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 163, noes 3.

So the bill was passed.

Mr. BLAND. I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

Mr. DIBBLE. I move to lay upon the table the motion to reconsider.

Mr. BLAND. Let us have a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 161, noes 3.

So the motion to reconsider was laid upon the table.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. DIBBLE. I call up the bill (S. 182) the House amendments to which the Senate has disagreed to.

Mr. BLAND. I move that the House take a recess for one hour.

Mr. DIBBLE. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. BLAND. I insist upon my motion for a recess.

The motion was taken, and the Speaker pro tempore stated that the "noes" seemed to have it.

Mr. BLAND. I call for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 3, noes 156.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The hour for the consideration of bills called up by committees has expired.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering general appropriation bills.

Mr. BELMONT. I raise the question of consideration against that motion. This day has been set apart by special assignment for the consideration of bills reported by the Committee on Foreign Affairs. Already twice that committee has lost the assignment made to it, and I leave it to members to decide whether the committee should again be deprived of the privilege of bringing before the House several important measures. I therefore raise the question of consideration against the Committee on Appropriations.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The only way to raise the question of consideration in this instance is to vote down the motion of the gentleman from Louisiana, that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole.

Mr. DINGLEY. I desire to suggest to the gentleman from Louisiana that the appropriation bill can be called up on any day, and this day has been set apart for the Committee on Foreign Affairs. I think, in justice to that committee, they should have it.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I understand that, sir, and I do not desire to do injustice to that committee, but the Committee on Military Affairs reported the bill making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy more than two weeks ago, and up to this time, notwithstanding the fact that I have been urged by the Committee on Military Affairs to bring up that bill, I have given way to every other question that came before the House. This is a bill to which I am sure there can be no opposition. If we are permitted to proceed, we can consider and dispose of it in less than half an hour.

Mr. BELMONT. The Committee on Foreign Affairs prepared its appropriation bill even before the one which the gentleman now asks the House to consider. Although we have been ready for two or three weeks with the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill, we have not interfered with any of the regular or more urgent business of the House, and we do not desire to bring that bill before the House until an opportunity, which will probably occur next week, at a time for which no special orders have been assigned. The special order for to-day, however, is one to which the Committee on Foreign Affairs hold with great insistence. The matter is one in which our relations with other governments are concerned, and it does seem to me reasonable to ask that members on both sides of the House will sustain the committee in insisting upon its rights. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ROBERTSON], to let the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to consider an appropriation bill.

Mr. MCCREARY. Mr. Speaker, I would like to say for the benefit of the Committee on Foreign Affairs that we lost one day which was assigned to us a week ago, and that this general appropriation bill, which my friend now asks the House to consider, is one which can be called up at any time. If we lose this day we must necessarily lose action upon some very important bills which the Committee on Foreign Affairs have now upon the Calendar. This day was assigned to that committee, and as the bills are pressing and important, I hope that my friend will let us have the day, especially as he can call up his bill at any time.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, I wish to say to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MCCREARY] that for two weeks I have given way upon this floor to other measures. The special order of to-day does not in any matter take precedence of this bill, and while I have the kindest feelings in the world for all the gentlemen on the Committee on Foreign Affairs, I think that this appropriation bill should be taken up, and I believe that if gentlemen will just permit us to proceed we can get through with it in less time than would be occupied in this discussion.

Mr. JACKSON. Mr. Speaker, is this question debatable?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is not. The debate is proceeding by unanimous consent.

Mr. BELMONT. I call for a vote.

The question was taken on the motion of Mr. ROBERTSON that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of appropriation bills.

Before the announcement of the vote,

Mr. ROBERTSON said: Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the motion; but I give notice now that I will call up this bill on Saturday next, if the House is in session on that day.

PARIS EXPOSITION OF 1889.

Mr. BELMONT. I now move to proceed with the special order. I call up the joint resolution H. Res. 83, and as it carries with it an appropriation, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering the joint resolution.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. HATCH in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole for the consideration of bills reported by the Committee on Foreign Affairs under the special order of the House. The Clerk will report the first bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (H. Res. 83) accepting the invitation of the French Republic to take part in an international exposition, to be held in Paris in 1889.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Whereas the United States have been invited by the Republic of France to take part in an exposition of works of art and the products of manufactures and agriculture of all nations, to be held in Paris, commencing the 5th day of May and closing the 31st day of October, 1889: Therefore,

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That said invitation is accepted, and that the governors of the several States and Territories be, and are hereby, requested to invite the people of their respective States and Territories to assist in the proper representation of the productions of our industry and of the natural resources of the country, and to take such further measures as may be necessary in order to secure to their respective States and Territories the advantages to be derived from this beneficent undertaking.

SEC. 2. That the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall appoint a commissioner-general to represent the United States in the proposed exposition, and, under the general direction of the Secretary of State, to make all needful rules and regulations in reference to the contributions from this country, and to control the expenditures incident to the proper installation and exhibition thereof, and to the preparation of the reports on the exposition; and that the President may also appoint twenty additional commissioners, no two of whom shall be appointed from any one State, of whom three shall be practical artisan experts; three shall be skilled representatives of commerce and manufactures, and four shall be practical agriculturists, nine shall be scientific experts, corresponding to and specifically assigned to report upon the nine groups into which the exposition will, under the official regulations, be divided, and one shall be assistant commissioner-general, and shall perform the duties of commissioner-general in case of his death or disability, and shall report upon the exhibition at large and the general results thereof; that the allowance to said commissioner-general for salary and personal expenses shall not exceed $5,000 for his whole term of office; and the allowance of the nine subcommissioners for salary and personal expenses shall not exceed $1,200 each, not including such clerical service as may be allowed by the commissioner-genaral, which shall not exceed $15,000; and the governors of the several States may nominate and the President appoint one honorary commissioner from each of the several States, and the President may appoint twenty-four additional honorary commissioners, among whom there shall be at least one resident of each of the Territories of the United States, which said honorary commissioners may report upon such special subjects as the commissioner-general may direct, and shall serve without pay or other expense to the United States: And provided further, That in case the authorities of any State or Territory shall appoint a commissioner or commissioners to represent the interests of such State or Territory at said exhibition, said commissioner or commissioners so appointed shall have the same status in the commission as the honorary commissioners provided for herein, but shall not be entitled to either pay or compensation out of the money hereby appropriated: Provided, always, That no person appointed by virtue of this resolution shall have any pecuniary interest, directly or indirectly, in any article exhibited for competition, or act as the agent for any exhibitor. And not more than one of the commissioners entitled to compensation nor more than five of the honorary commissioners shall be appointed from any one State or Territory.

SEC. 3. That the President be authorized, in his discretion, to assign one or more of the public vessels to transport to and from France, free of cost, under regulations to be prescribed by the commissioner-general, such articles as may be offered for exhibition by the citizens of the United States.

SEC. 4. That in order to defray the necessary expenses above authorized, and for the proper installation of the exhibition, and the expenditures of the commissioner-general made under the direction of the Secretary of State, and with his approval, and not otherwise, there be, and hereby is, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $200,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary for the purposes herein specified, which sum shall be expended under the direction of the Secretary of State; and out of such amount the Commissioner of Agriculture is hereby authorized to collect and prepare, as far as practicable and with as little delay as possible, suitable specimens of the agricultural productions of the several States and Territories of the Union for exhibition at the Paris exposition.

SEC. 5. That it shall be the duty of the Secretary of State to transmit to Congress a detailed statement of the expenditures which may have been incurred under the provisions of this resolution, together with all reports called for under section 2 of this resolution, which reports shall be prepared and arranged with a view to concise statement and convenient reference.

The Committee on Foreign Affairs recommended the following amendments:

Section 2, line 7, strike out the words "and to," and add after the word "thereof" the following: "the pay of jurors and."

Line 9, after the word "exposition," insert the following: "and the general results thereof, and an assistant commissioner-general, who shall perform the duties of commissioner-general in case of his death or disability."

Line 12, strike out "twenty additional" and insert in lieu thereof "nine sub."

Line 13, strike out all after the word "commissioners" in line 13 down to and including the word "nine" in line 16. After the word "nine," in line 16, insert "and said subcommissioners."

Line 18, strike out the words "report upon."

Strike out the whole of lines 20, 21, and 22, and 23 down to and including the word "thereof."

Line 26, after the word "office," insert "that the allowance of said assistant commissioner-general for salary and personal expenses shall not exceed $2,500 for his term of office."

Line 29, strike out the words "twenty additional" and insert "nine sub."

Line 34 strike out "two" and insert "one."

Line 35 strike out "and."

Strike out the whole of lines 36 and 37 and line 38 down to and including the word "States," and insert "and the President may appoint one honorary commissioner from each of the several Territories."

Strike out the proviso beginning in line 43, down to and including the word "appropriate" in line 51.

Lines 54, 55, 56, and 57, strike out the following: "and not more than one of the commissioners entitled to compensation nor more than five of the honorary commissioners shall be appointed from one State or Territory."

Mr. BELMONT. I now ask the Clerk to read the portion of the report which I have marked.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Foreign Affairs, to whom were referred a message from the President of the United States (Executive Document No. 69), transmitting a report from the Secretary of State relating to an invitation from the Government of France to participate in the international exhibition to be held in Paris in 1889, and also a joint resolution (H. Res. 83), respectfully report thereon as follows:

On the 6th of April last, shortly after the close of the Forty-ninth Congress, the Government of the French Republic, through its legation in Washington, formally asked the co-operation of this Government in the celebration of a world's exhibition, to be opened in Paris on the 5th of May, 1889. The general purposes of this exhibition are such as should enlist the earnest sympathy of the United States. Its primary object is to receive the works of art and the productions of the industry and agriculture of all nations. The exhibition is to be divided into nine groups:

1. Works of art.
2. Education, and processes used therein.
3. Plain and decorative house furniture.
4. Textile fabrics.
5. The raw and manufactured products of mining, forestry, chemistry, etc.
6. Apparatus and methods of mechanical industries.
7. Food products.
8. Agriculture, vine-culture, and fish-culture.
9. Horticulture.

In nearly all these branches of industry it is believed that the United States has made great progress since its participation in the world's exposition held in Paris in 1878. If no other considerations presented themselves it would therefore be desirable, for the advancement of the commercial interests of the United States, that the invitation thus extended by the French Republic should be accepted. But there are other reasons which can properly be regarded by the Congress of the United States. This nation can not forget its obligations to France for the assistance rendered in its early struggles for freedom. On many occasions since, notably in the presentation by the French people of the statue of Liberty which now adorns New York Harbor, the sympathy and good-will of the French nation towards the United States and its Government have been manifested.

The people of the United States have watched with gratification the firmness of purpose and self-control with which the French nation has maintained and increased its hold upon republican institutions in recent times of menace and peril. The year 1889 will be the centennial of events in France which gave impetus to the establishment of republican institutions throughout the world. It is clearly the duty of the Congress of the United States to promptly take action upon the invitation extended, and thus to proclaim in the most emphatic manner its approval of this important project. Your committee therefore recommend that the invitation of the Government of France to participate in the international exhibition to be held in Paris in 1889, transmitted to Congress by the President of the United States in his message of the 12th instant, hereto annexed, be accepted, and in order that such acceptance may be carried out in a becoming manner they further recommend the passage of the accompanying joint resolution as amended.

Mr. BELMONT. Mr. Chairman, it is not necessary to remind Americans of our lasting debt of gratitude to Frenchmen growing out of the struggles of the Revolution and the war of independence, and it is always a pleasing duty for Congress to recall such memories. But it is especially to the France of to-day the United States wishes to do honor. We who can enjoy undisturbed all the blessings of our form of government should best appreciate the immense difficulties standing in the way of French statesmen who hold republican opinions. Stronger than the Holy Alliance of the beginning of the century, stronger than the Triple Alliance of to-day, is the league of monarchs and of royalty in Europe against successful republicanism in France, and yet the French Republic has triumphed and will continue to triumph over hostile intrigues from within and insidious attacks from without. We in the United States have watched recent events in France with a respect and admiration which this invitation of the French Government now gives us an opportunity to express.

The hundredth anniversary of the year 1789 has been well chosen for the holding of a world's fair in Paris, a year as significant to the people of the United States as to the people of France. If there is what might be termed a reactionary league in Europe, may there not also be a progressive league of the republics of the world? If this invitation of the French Government has been officially neglected by some governments, the exposition itself will include exhibits from the people of every country in Europe, and the invitation has been officially accepted with the greatest cordiality by Switzerland and all the republics of Central and South America, and is now placed before the Congress of the United States for official action as promptly as the rules of the House would permit.

The report of the Committee on Foreign Affairs is a unanimous report, and I feel sure that a generous response to the French Government will meet the hearty approval of every member on this floor, for here resides that spirit of true Americanism which can always be moved in sympathy with republics and republicans throughout the world.

As to the details of the bill, the committee has endeavored to profit by the experience at the last exhibition in Paris. The report of the commissioner discloses the fact that an appropriation of $200,000 is none too much. Congress in 1878 appropriated $150,000, although the recommendation of the Department at that time was for $225,000. Shortly after the arrival of our commissioner in Paris it became necessary for him to send a report to the Department urging that Congress, in order to carry out the purposes of its first resolution, appropriate an additional $40,000. The appropriation made, therefore, for the exhibition in 1878 was $190,000. In this instance we ask that it be made $200,000. We do not wish that there should be a repetition of the unfortunate deficit which occurred on the former occasion. In order to satisfy the House as to the necessity of the amount now asked. I will call attention to the items of expenditures as reported by the commissioner in 1878:

Salary of commissioner-general	$5,000.00
Expenses of commissioner-general's offices in Washington, New York, and Paris	17,417.52
Compensation of additional commissioners	15,600.00
Clerks to additional commissioners and incidental expenses	6,931.33
Art gallery	11,514.74
Agricultural division	6,418.69
Educational division	5,972.17
Machinery division	7,061.53
Industrial division	8,574.81
Construction of buildings	33,602.49
Loading and unloading Government ships	6,034.20
Transportation by mail steamers and by railway in France	18,842.75
Stationery and printing	4,379.24
Advertising	1,548.45
Miscellaneous expenses in Washington, New York, and Paris	14,102.08
Expended by State Department for agricultural exhibits and additional commissioners	19,400.00
Total	179,400.00

Leaving less than $11,000 available for printing of reports, etc.

In this resolution the proposed appropriation is made the larger because it is intended that the jurors at the exhibition shall receive salaries. In the exhibition of 1878 the jurors on the part of the United States served without compensation, a course which was attended with certain objections set forth in the report of the commissioner, and which I think it important for the House to consider:

PAYMENT OF JURORS.

It is a serious mistake in my judgment to ask jurors to serve without compensation. Occasionally wealthy men of leisure are willing to undertake the responsibilities in a spirit of patriotism, or from special interest, but the average citizen can not afford to give the necessary time and attention without compensation at least sufficient to meet his expenses, which, in any great city during an exposition season, form no inconsiderable item. At the Centennial Exposition home jurors were paid $600 each, and foreign jurors $1,000 each. It was money well invested, inasmuch as its payment warranted the jurors in giving proper consideration to the work to which they were invited.

Another serious objection to the non-payment of jurors is that they are often led to seek recognition in a way which must, to a greater or less degree, influence their judgment, however conscientious they may be. For instance, giving as an excuse that they performed valuable and even delicate and tedious labor, at much personal inconvenience and at their own expense, more than half of the American jurors became active applicants and in several instances earnest supplicants for the decoration of the Legion of Honor.

It is my opinion that the best men to make reports upon an exposition are the jurors. Avenues of information are freely opened to them which it is difficult and often impossible for commissioners to enter. Exhibitors, in the hope of recognition, expect to furnish details to jurors, and are ready and willing to answer all inquiries put by them.

After the exhibition of such facts as these it seems to me the House will not hesitate in the matter of appropriation; and with this presentation I will reserve the remainder of my time, and yield the floor to my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MCCREARY].

Mr. MCCREARY. Mr. Chairman, I am heartily in favor of accepting the invitation extended by the French Republic to the Republic of the United States to participate in the international exposition to be held in Paris in the year 1889. The international expositions that have been held in various parts of the world during the last half century stand out as promontories, marking the progress of civilization and the advancement and improvement of the times.

The first international exposition held in the last half century was at London, England. Another was held in 1873 at Vienna, Austria. Another international exposition held in France was at Paris in 1878. But perhaps the grandest and most successful international exposition ever held in this world was held in our own country at Philadelphia in 1876, to commemorate the centennial anniversary of the Declaration of Independence. At all of these international expositions our country was represented, and from each of them derived great benefit.

We are now invited to participate in an international exposition to be held in a sister republic; and to-day the Republic of the United States and the Republic of France stand at the head of the list of the republics of the world. The Committee on Foreign Affairs, after carefully considering the invitation of the French Government, have unanimously recommended that the invitation be accepted. The President of the United States approves it; the Secretary of State has recommended it and requested that we adopt such legislation as will insure a proper representation of the arts, products, minerals, and manufactures of the United States.

In considering this invitation we should not forget the attitude of France toward our Republic for more than one hundred years. We should remember that when our forefathers were struggling for freedom France was our faithful and devoted ally. The brave and brilliant Lafayette, and many others, rendered conspicuous and splendid service in behalf of the freedom and independence of the thirteen colonies.

On many occasions since that time the people of France have shown their friendship and good-will toward our people and our Government. When our Centennial Exposition was held at Philadelphia in 1876, and the nations of the world came and took an inventory of our resources and inventions, and viewed our vast and varied and wonderful progress, France participated on as large a scale as any other nation in the world, and only last year presented to our country a statue of "Liberty Enlightening the World," which now grandly and beautifully adorns the harbor at New York.

We should reciprocate the good wishes of the people of France, and we should endeavor every way in our power to draw closer the ties which have heretofore bound together the two greatest sister republics of the world.

Mr. Chairman, there is another reason why I am in favor of accepting the invitation. The international exposition at Paris will present a grand forum for the display of specimens of the arts, products, minerals, and manufactures of our country, where our business men may engage in laudable, friendly rivalry with the business men of other countries.

The exhibition is to be divided into nine groups: 1. Works of art. 2. Education, and processes used therein. 3. Plain and decorative house furniture. 4. Textile fabrics. 5. The raw and manufactured products of mining, forestry, chemistry, etc. 6. Apparatus and methods of mechanical industries. 7. Food products. 8. Agriculture, vine-culture, and fish-culture. 9. Horticulture.

In all these branches of industry our country stands at the top of the list.

Mr. Chairman, there is another great consideration in favor of the United States being represented at the Paris exposition. I can not suppress the belief that God in His wisdom established this Republic in order that it might stand out before the world as a model by which other lovers of liberty might fashion their governments—as an illustration of what freemen may accomplish in "a government of the people, by the people, and for the people."

Bancroft has eloquently said:

> We are in this country setting up the temple of freedom, the separate stones and pillars of which each nation and each age was commissioned to hew and carve.

Our people have built according to their genius and instincts, and they have not wrought in vain. When we remember our country is but a little more than one hundred years old, yet has about as much territory as the whole of Europe; has 130,000 miles of railroad and as many miles of telegraph; stands among the nations of the world as first in agriculture, first in manufactures, and first in inventions; has to-day twelve millions of pupils enrolled in the public schools, officered by an army of two hundred and sixty thousand teachers; sends its cotton, corn, wheat, and other cereals to almost every part of the world; has more miles of coal and iron and more gold and silver under its soil than any other country in the world, and is blessed with free speech, free suffrage, free religion, a free press, and free schools, we have the right to assume that this is a favored nation, and is entitled to be regarded as the model Republic of the world.

On that account, also, I desire our great Republic to be represented there. All the great nations will be represented at the Paris exposition. France, of whom it has been said, "She marches at the head of the nations of Europe with the banner of intellectual supremacy in one hand and the torch of liberty in the other," will act as host.

Many of the republics of Central and South America will be represented at that exposition. Business men of Great Britain, of Germany, of Russia, of Switzerland, of Austria, of Italy, and of Spain will be there with their inventions, their products, and their manufactures. After the success of American exhibitors at all the international expositions which have been held in the last half century, after the great benefits our people have derived from these expositions, it must not be said that our Republic is unknown, unhonored, and unrepresented at the Paris international exposition of 1889.

In 1873, just before the international exhibition was held in Vienna, Austria, in the simple article of leather our foreign sales amounted to only half a million dollars per annum. Immediately after the exhibition at Vienna the sales sprung to three millions per annum, and after the international exhibition held in Paris, France, the sales went to twelve millions.

We can benefit our country, we can benefit our business, by having American machinery there, by having American manufactures there, by having a display of American products of every description.

I hope, sir, that the joint resolution reported by the Committee on Foreign Affairs will be adopted, and that our country, which is first in our hearts, will on that grand occasion prove itself entitled to rank first among the nations of the world. [Applause.]

Mr. RAYNER. Mr. Chairman, I trust that this resolution will receive the unanimous approval of this House. This Republic owes France a debt of gratitude that all the money in her Treasury could not repay. When I recall the name of Lafayette and all the patriotic deeds that cluster around his immortal memory; when I recollect the chivalric heroism of France's dauntless patriots, who, animated with a burning zeal to advance the cause of human freedom, crossed the sea, and, at the sacrifice of their fortunes and their lives, locked hands with the revolutionists of America in defense of the inalienable rights of man and in antagonism to the decrees of despotism; when I remember the fervent zeal and the intrepid courage that animated them upon the field of battle, and how magnanimously upon a stranger's shore they shed their blood under the inspiration of liberty; and when I know and feel that all these things were done and suffered so that my countrymen, breaking from the galling yoke of tyranny, could create between the waters a republic born for the undying ages, every impulse of my being turns in sympathy towards the nation that proposes, in conjunction with the republics of the earth, to commemorate the death of political slavery upon the soil of France. [Applause.]

It has often been a question with me whether the benefits that resulted from the French revolution ever atoned for the crimes that were inflicted under it; but I can for a moment forget the reign of terror and the iniquitous deeds of Danton and Marat, of Robespierre and Barère, and I can conceal from my view the fact that a million human beings, one-twentieth of her population, met with an untimely death in the carnival of crime that swept down upon her like an overwhelming deluge, when I realize that on the 5th day of May, 1889, when the shout of the Marseillaise will announce the opening of the French exhibition, just about one hundred years will have elapsed from the time when the walls of the Bastille were razed, its dreadful secrets were unbosomed, and the genius and patriotism of France stepped forth from the caverns of a living death once more to gaze upon the sunlight of heaven. I could not let this opportunity go by without referring to those historic remembrances, and I now add that while the imperial governments of Europe are hesitating whether or not to unite in the celebration of these festivities, because they fear perhaps that at some day within what is now their own dominion similar celebrations might take place in honor of the extirpation of royalty, let us, the youngest republic on this earth, extend a generous hand across the ocean and proclaim to our sister republic with no uncertain sound, "Citizens of France, we send you greeting; as you once cemented the charter of our liberties with the blood of your best and noblest sons, so now may the folds of our flag, commingling with the Tricolor of France upon the streets of Paris, teach the world the lesson that the humblest citizen who is entitled to its protection is, according to the philosophy of our institutions, the equal of the greatest monarch that rules upon the mightiest throne." [Applause.]

Mr. HITT. Mr. Chairman, the general aspect of this question of taking part in the Paris exhibition of 1889, its historic character and whatever there is that appeals to sentiment, have all been so fully discussed that I will only mention one or two practical points that I think may affect the votes of some gentlemen present, as indicated by what they have said to me: First, ought we to accept the invitation from France in view of the recent action of the French Government towards our trade; and, second, ought we to pay so much money as this $200,000 of expenses in taking part in that exposition? I do not see how we can, with any self-respect, or any expectation of retaining the respect of the world, refuse this invitation, as the monarchical governments have done. We accepted the invitation from France in 1867, when it came from an Emperor, and we took part—an honorable part as it proved. This invitation is not from a corrupted, oppressive, extravagant empire, but from a republic, a government that is really of the people, to take part in a republican anniversary that is national; more than national, it is the centennial of republican liberty in Europe. This great industrial festival and exhibition is to celebrate the morning of European freedom—the generous birthday of liberal institutions there—now firmly seated in the great French Republic.

Mr. Webster nobly said as Secretary of State and as an American forty years ago in the Hülsemann letter, that the people of the United States, having extended from a strip on the border of the sea inhabited by a population feeble and poor until they covered much of the fairest and richest portion of the earth's surface, and having risen in wealth and power to rank among the first nations of the world, entertained an ardent affection for the popular institutions and forms of political organization which had enabled them to advance so rapidly to prosperity and happiness.

They would now be doubly false to their history if they did not testify that sentiment of respect and affection for republican institutions all round the world. This public sentiment was the basis of the action of Mr. Webster, as Secretary of State, in sending an envoy to the Hungarians—to a part of the subjects of the despotic ruler of Austria who were trying to found in Europe a government like our own, based on democracy. And when the Austrian minister talked of treating our envoy as a spy, Webster said to him in words Americans will never forget, the spirit of the people of this country would have demanded immediate hostilities to be waged by the utmost exertion of the power of the republic, military and naval.

Shall we now forget that we are republicans, and appear ashamed of what is our highest glory?

Shall we ape the monarchies around France that have refused this invitation because it recalls 1789? It is said they have not treated American pork fairly. That is true. The question has been discussed in the Northwest, and some gentlemen representing that part of the country where the pork product is in largest abundance will probably mention it further on in this debate. But is there a better way to do business with a sensible man than to take a sensible method that becomes a man? In dealing with a great nation shall we begin by fretfully answering that we will not accept a courteous invitation? American pork has been untruly stigmatized as impure, and unjustly prohibited from entering France. How shall we set this right and have these decrees repealed?

The American hog has his rights. They should be vindicated; and my friend from the Chicago district of Illinois [Mr. ADAMS] will probably offer an amendment providing for an increase of appropriation that the pork product may be made a special exhibit at Paris, in order that the people of Europe may see the Illinois pig in all his perfection and cheapness—"the short and simple animal of the poor," as my friend calls him. Negotiation and proper representation and an appeal to self-interest by retaliatory duties on French goods and wines can easily in time arrange all that.

The Democratic Committee on Ways and Means of this House in framing the tariff bill that is laid before us this morning might have remembered an easy method of bringing to reason a nation that did not deal fairly with us. There is a peaceful, calm way of leading other people to see the justice of our terms. It so happens that nearly all of the products of France that are imported into this country are luxuries, or so near akin to luxuries that they fall under the recommendation of your Democratic President that we impose the full measure of taxes upon them.

Where was your committee wandering when this bill was framed, that it forgot the wrongs of Chicago pork? Where was the Committee on Ways and Means occupied when it passed over French silks, wines, spirits, cordials and liquors, kid gloves, jewelry, watches, fancy goods, and similar articles to the amount of $40,000,000, which are imported right from the seat of this unjust prohibition of American pork? Why did they not put a double duty on those articles at once? There is the short road to the peaceful solution of the whole question, without the unworthy, undignified course of meeting an invitation with a rebuff and wounding the feelings of a great nation by an attempt to irritate and anger. Increasing those duties would cut down the profit of their American market, which would rapidly fall off; and we would not be much the worse for less wines and other luxuries.

Is there too much money to be expended by this bill for our representation there? The amount is $200,000. We appropriated $150,000 in 1878. It was too little. Governor McCormick was our commissioner in charge of our part of that exhibition—an able man. He had to soon send for more, and this House hurriedly voted $40,000 additional. That was still scant provision. Why, the English spent a million there, and with what magnificent results! I was present and saw the embarrassment he was under in his pressing, urgent duties at every stage in every day's work; how much he had to omit doing for want of money; how he had to use the most stringent economy; how the American building or façade erected for American products was the poorest among all—a cheap $10,000 structure in a noble avenue of marvelous architecture which attracted the attention of the world. There we were in something between a summer hotel and a temporary railroad station on a new road.

This was to contain the priceless exhibits of American industry and art. There were the marvels of invention, of machinery, the illustrations of our educational system, our matchless agricultural implements, the products of the mine and the forest, that commanded the study and imitation of thoughtful men from every country on the globe. No one could look upon them without admiration for the restless genius of the individual American conquering the problems of nature, utilizing all forces in new combinations of utility and beauty.

That building was utterly insufficient, and to it he had to build an annex costing $20,000 more. Congress gave him Government ships to carry the exhibits across; it saved some freight bills; five ships were loaded, and still he had to pay $6,000 for freight to a single company. A great many Americans in Paris worked gratuitously at the exhibition of 1878 for the honor of their country. The languid action of Congress was supplemented by the energy of individual American citizens. So it always will be, perhaps. But we ought not to rely upon that. Let us now appropriate all that is necessary and have our representatives and exhibits properly and decently provided for in exhibiting the greatly increased and increasing industries. The amount here allowed is far less than has been estimated for by all those who have had most experience in similar exhibitions.

I now yield such time as he desires to my friend on my left [Mr. ADAMS], that he may present his amendment.

Mr. ADAMS. I feel in regard to this national invitation to attend an international exposition at Paris something as I should feel in regard to a similar invitation of hospitality from a man who in general had treated me as a friend, but who in one conspicuous instance had injured me. I should not feel exactly like breaking off friendship altogether, but I should desire that his injurious and unjust act toward me should be recalled to his mind as it would be called to my mind by the very interchange of civilities between us.

This Republic is invited to attend an exposition in France of works of art and products of manufacture and agriculture. Every gentleman in this Chamber knows that for the past seven years one of the leading products of American agriculture has been entirely excluded from the territories of the French Republic by discriminating legislation. The subject has been recently brought to the attention of the House in a memorial and resolution introduced by my colleague [Mr. DUNHAM] and printed at large in the RECORD of January 27. I will ask the Clerk to read from page 768 of the RECORD.

The Clerk read as follows:

CONSULATE OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
Havre, France, December 28, 1887.

To the President of the Chicago Board of Trade, Chicago, Ill.:

DEAR SIR: It being most likely that Congress during its present sitting will take up the revision of the revenue tariff, it may not be amiss to call the attention of your honorable body to the prohibition of the importation of American salted pork, etc., still existing in France.

In the course of the many changes which have taken place in French ministries since 1881, we find that quite lately Mr. Tirard, the originator of the prohibitory edict, has turned up as prime minister, and as it was he who, under the vain plea of its unwholesomeness, by a stroke of his pen struck at a most important article of American export, it is but proper that he should be called upon to repeal this most odious edict of unjust and unfriendly discrimination.

Among the most zealous advocates of repeal have been the population of the city of Havre. The Journal du Havre of the 14th instant published an article on this subject, of which I beg to inclose a translation. A concise sketch of another paper is addressed to you under a separate cover.

I am of opinion that a majority of the laboring classes, who have been deprived of a wholesome and cheap article of nourishment, would hail with delight a thorough discussion of this matter in Congress, threatening, if advisable, with retaliation, if the prohibition is not repealed.

If there is one article which may be mentioned as unwholesome amongst French exports to America, it is wine, the greater part of which is doctored and adulterated. France, from having been an exporting country of wine, has turned to be an importing country. Enormous quantities of low-priced Spanish and Italian wines are being imported, manipulated, doctored, decorated with high-sounding labels, and drank in the United States and elsewhere as selected vintages.

Nothing but retaliation will bring French legislators, now strongly imbued with protectionism, to their senses; the plea that American hog produce is unwholesome has been abandoned long ago.

I have the honor to be, sir, yours, most respectfully,
F. F. DUFAIS, United States Consul.

BOARD OF TRADE OF THE CITY OF CHICAGO.
Chicago, January 10, 1888.

Upon the receipt of a communication from F. F. Dufais, United States consul, resident at Havre, a copy of which is herewith submitted, the board of directors of the Board of Trade of the city of Chicago adopted the following resolutions:

"Resolved, That the prohibition of the importation of American salted pork by the French and German Governments, upon the pretext of its unhealthfulness, is an act of great injustice to the Government and people of the United States as well as to the inhabitants of France and Germany, who are to a great extent deprived of a wholesome article of food at moderate cost.

"Resolved, That the United States Government should no longer tolerate such an insulting discrimination against American commerce without an indignant protest and the enactment of vigorous retaliatory measures.

"Resolved, That there ought to be such legislation regarding our commercial relations with those countries as will comport with the dignity of the nation and unqualifiedly denounce the unfounded charges against one of the great and beneficent industries of our country.

"Resolved, That a copy of the foregoing resolutions be forwarded to Representatives and Senators of the United States Congress."

GEO. F. STONE, Secretary.

Mr. ADAMS. It will thus be seen that some of our people, so far from desiring to accept a courteous invitation to this exposition, ask Congress to at once adopt retaliatory measures against France for the injurious legislation which France has practiced against us. Now, sir, I believe in retaliation as a general principle. I do not believe that any nation ought to suffer to pass without notice any act of a friendly or of an unfriendly character on the part of any other nation.

I believe that we ought to meet courtesy with courtesy, discourtesy with discourtesy, and hostility with hostility. But I believe that retaliatory measures ought to be such that they will in fact retaliate. I believe that they ought to be directed against the most offending nation, which in this case is Germany rather than France, and I believe that they ought to be put in operation at a time when they will produce the greatest possible effect. If the action of the French Republic in excluding American pork products had been like the action of the German Empire, I should not vote to accept this invitation; but I believe that there are peculiar circumstances connected with their action appearing in the long course of diplomatic correspondence which has taken place between the French Republic and our own, which show that for a part of the time the French Republic was not wholly to blame, and that for a large part of the time retaliatory legislation on our part would have been uncalled for and inopportune.

The history of the hostile legislation on the part of France I shall not go into at length, but I will ask leave to insert in my remarks a letter from Mr. McLane to Mr. De Freycinet which gives a résumé of the whole course of French legislation on this subject. I believe, also, it will be found that although our Secretaries of State and our ministers to France have been, up to 1885, urgent in season and out of season, in pressing upon the French Government the propriety of recalling its injurious decree, yet the present Secretary of State, or the present minister to France—I do not know which and I have no means of knowing—has probably been negligent in that regard during the last two or three years. I have found that after the year 1885 there is absolutely no information accessible to members of Congress as to what has passed between the two republics on this subject. The last official word that we have is contained in President Cleveland's annual message of 1885, in which he expresses the hope that this injurious legislation will be promptly withdrawn.

From that time on, I believe, we have no public information on the subject. The President's annual message at the last session of Congress contained no reference whatever to it, and the message delivered at the beginning of the present session relates, as we all know, only to the tariff. I understand that a resolution has been introduced in a place to which I am not permitted under the rules of the House more particularly to refer, which may result in bringing before us some practical information on this subject. But taking the information which we have, and the state of the diplomatic correspondence as it appears in the volume published by the Government, it appears to me that the proper time for retaliation was perhaps suffered to pass by two years ago, or else that the proper occasion has not yet arrived. I believe that we ought to accept this invitation, but I believe that we ought to accept it in such a way as to bring the subject of this injurious legislation against American pork to a final determination; and with that view I submit an amendment to the bill, which I will ask to have read from the Clerk's desk, and to which I believe no reasonable objection can be made.

It will be found that in the last part of the bill the Commissioner of Agriculture is authorized to prepare an exhibit of the products of American agriculture, and the amendment which I submit comes in at the end of the clause prescribing his duties in that regard.

The amendment was read, as follows:

After line 15, page 5, insert:

"And the Commissioner of Agriculture is also authorized to prepare for gratuitous distribution at said Paris exposition a concise statement descriptive of swine-raising in the United States and the methods used in this country in preparing pork for export, together with such information as he may possess as to the relative wholesomeness of pork raised in the United States and in other countries; and the said Commissioner of Agriculture, under the direction of the Secretary of State, is further authorized and directed to secure, if possible, as a part of said Paris exposition, a competitive inspection of pork raised in the United States and in different countries of Europe, with the view of determining the relative wholesomeness of the pork products in the United States and of Europe; and for the purposes indicated in this paragraph, an additional sum of $25,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated."

Mr. ADAMS. It is generally known, I think, that the motive assigned by the French officials for the exclusion of American pork is based on sanitary reasons. But that is said to have been abandoned long ago. It is supposed that now they exclude our pork in order to protect their own. If they are willing to take that ground, and to apply the rule equally to pork raised in all other countries outside of France, we shall have no reason to complain. But we ought to insist that they withdraw the discrimination practiced against this country and against no other.

We have heard it said to-day that many of the imperial and monarchical governments of Europe have declined to accept this invitation. One thing is certain, there will be a large number of persons there, whether under the sanction of their governments or not. We could not have a more admirable opportunity for appealing to the public sense of the people of Europe. If we can only force upon their attention the fact that our pork products are as wholesome as similar products of other countries, or more wholesome, we shall compel the Republic of France either to withdraw that prohibitory decree altogether or else to stand upon the ground of protection, on which we admit they have a right to stand. If the result of this exhibit shall not be the withdrawal of that decree, then I believe the public sentiment of this country will sustain the severest retaliatory legislation that we can adopt consistently with treaty obligations, just as I believe the public sentiment of our country would have sustained similar legislation against the German Empire at any time within the last three or four years.

MR. M'LANE TO MR. DE FREYCINET.

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES,
Paris, September 23, 1885.

SIR: On the 18th of February, 1881, the French Government, acting upon the alleged discovery of trichinæ in America, prohibited all pork imported from the United States. This step on the part of France was followed by several other states of Europe, which based their action on the same motive.

A great American industry, giving a prosperous export trade, was thus denounced to the world as a source of danger to public health. Considering that in the United States, in Great Britain, and in Belgium there were millions consuming American pork without any danger to life or to health, my Government, through General Noyes, who was then United States minister at Paris, protested against the prohibition and urged a reconsideration of the subject. (General Noyes to M. Barthélemy St. Hilaire, February 22, 1881.)

In the mean time my Government, although satisfied that the action of France was unwise and injurious, proceeded to investigate the matter. It did so thoroughly, and the result appeared perfectly satisfactory. Not only were the alleged ravages of trichinæ disproved, but it was shown that unusual precautions had been taken to insure that none but the healthiest animals should be slaughtered for packing; and that although trichinæ had been detected in sundry cases, it was far from being as widespread as in other countries, and that the American process of packing and curing secured to the consumers of American pork a much greater immunity from trichinosis than that enjoyed by consumers of European pork.

The facts thus elicited constrained my Government to represent to your's that the decree prohibiting the importation of pork from the United States was unwarranted, and that the United States deemed itself rightfully entitled to a prompt and effectual modification of the prohibitory action of France. (General Noyes to M. B. St. Hilaire, June 22, 1881.)

In March, 1882, the Chamber of Deputies passed a bill repealing the prohibitory decree and providing for a liberal system of inspection.

At this time it was well established in France that trichinæ, which may be found in American pork, is absolutely inoffensive, the salt killing the animalcula, or reducing it to such a state that the slightest cooking destroyed it. French scientists of the highest grade and reputation admitted the fact, the minister of commerce, Mr. Tirard, was reconciled to the repeal of the decree of prohibition, and the Academy of Medicine, as well as the board of health, so advised the government.

The Senate, nevertheless, rejected the bill, but its action was well understood to be based not upon any doubt as to the innocuousness of American pork, but simply upon the ground that the government could reverse the decree of prohibition by an executive decree without any legislation to that effect.

In March, 1883, Mr. Morton reopened the subject with Mr. Challemel La Cour, who was then minister of foreign affairs. He reminded him that the decree prohibiting American salted meats had now been in force for more than two years, while similar products from other countries were freely admitted; that there could be no valid reason why this exceptional measure should be applicable to the United States. He expressed the hope that the French Government, after considering all the evidence before it, would place the United States upon the same footing as all other friendly nations by revoking the obnoxious decree.

This earnest request not being noticed by Mr. Challemel La Cour, on the 20th of October, 1883, it was renewed in emphatic terms. On November 15, 1883, Mr. Morton received from Mr. Jules Ferry the positive assurance that the French Government was animated with a strong desire to give this question a most liberal solution, and at the earliest possible moment.

Two weeks after, November 27, 1883, a decree was issued revoking the prohibitory one of February, 1881, no condition being attached to the revocation. The minister of commerce, in a circular to the prefects, simply stated that the committee of public hygiene had ascertained, both scientifically and experimentally, that pork loses all danger of infection by trichinosis if it is salted with care, and that the only thing that the authorities had to do was to be sure that the imported pork put on the market was fully cured.

This matured action was not well received in the Chamber of Deputies, and on the 22d of December, 1883, after a long debate, it passed a resolution expressing the wish that the admission of American pork be delayed until the adoption of a bill providing for a system of inspection of all foreign meats.

In consequence of this resolution a new decree, December 28, suspended the application of the one canceling the original measure of prohibition.

In June, 1884, the law referred to was introduced in the Chamber, but many months having passed without its being called up, Mr. Morton again pressed the matter, and both your excellency and Mr. Legrand gave him the assurance that it would shortly be discussed, and that a solution would soon be arrived at.

Under date of May 12 your excellency confirmed in writing these assurances to Mr. Morton, all of which he duly communicated to his Government. The Chamber, however, adjourned without any change having taken place in the measures so unwarrantably adopted four years ago.

I respectfully but earnestly submit that this discrimination against an important branch of the trade of a friendly nation is, under the circumstances, absolutely unjustifiable, and that it can not be maintained without alienating in some degree the good understanding which has so long existed between France and the United States.

I do not in the least contest the right of the French Government to close its doors to an unwholesome product or to shut its markets to all foreign products of a certain kind; nor do I deny its legitimate right to levy upon such products any duty it may think proper; but the case here is quite different. It is no longer contended that American pork is unhealthy, yet the existing prohibition applies only to it.

I take the liberty, therefore, of urging the propriety of settling this long-pending difficulty by the same mode which created it—a decree of the Executive rescinding the one establishing the prohibition.

I can understand well that your government hesitated to take such a step in presence of a resolution of the Chamber requesting delay until the passage of a proposed bill applicable to the case, but the Chamber which made this request failed to pass this bill, and, as its powers have expired, it can never do so.

I avail, etc.,

ROBERT M. McLANE.

Mr. BELMONT. Mr. Chairman, I trust the Committee of the Whole will see fit to accept the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ADAMS]. But I feel it incumbent upon me to call the attention of that gentleman and of the House to the fact that our minister to France has been active in making representations to that government in behalf of the interest of which the gentleman speaks.

Mr. ADAMS. Since when?

Mr. BELMONT. During his term of service.

Mr. ADAMS. What is his last public statement that is accessible?

Mr. BELMONT. The gentleman will be able to obtain the information in the Department of State; and he will also find that during a series of years the French Government has had cause to complain of our legislation——

Mr. ADAMS. What cause?

Mr. BELMONT. And I trust the House, when it considers the question of the tariff, will remove the subject of complaint to which I refer. I mean to say that there is upon our statute-book a most barbarous and foolish provision in regard to works of art, a provision of which not only the Government of France but the Government of Italy has cause to complain. Representations from these foreign governments to our own have been made for a series of years. But I think this a good opportunity to state in behalf of the House that this legislation was the result of the conference between the House and the Senate in 1883.

Mr. ADAMS. What legislation does the gentleman mean?

Mr. BELMONT. The increase of the duty on works of art from 10 per cent. to 30 per cent. was in reality the work of the Senate committee of conference; and the Senate must be held responsible for what is universally conceded to be a most barbarous and unfortunate provision in our tariff laws.

All this, I admit, is not germane to the present discussion; but I refer to it only in answer to what the gentleman from Illinois has said in regard to another product, and while I trust the gentleman's amendment will be adopted, I hope the House, when the tariff discussion comes up, will not forget the subject to which I have referred. I am gratified to know that in the tariff bill which to-day has been made public by the Committee on Ways and Means works of art are placed upon the free-list.

I now ask that the general debate terminate, and that this resolution be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. ADAMS. I desire a vote on my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is first on the amendments reported by the committee.

Mr. HOOKER. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say a word in reference to the amendment which has been offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ADAMS]. While I should have no particular objection at the proper time to resorting to such retaliatory legislation as self-respect and a due regard for the interests of our citizens would demand, yet on an occasion of this sort, when we are responding to an invitation which has been courteously extended by the Government of France that our country participate in an exposition which France proposes to hold in the year 1889, the centennial of the establishment of our own republican Constitution, I can not but think the adoption of the proposed amendment would be thrusting into this question a matter not germane to the subject of the resolution presented by the Committee on Foreign Affairs. As I have remarked, at an appropriate time and in a proper way I should gladly unite with the gentleman from Illinois in resorting to such retaliatory legislation as might be proper on the part of this Government in answer to the hostile legislation of France in reference to the reception of any product of our own country, whatever it might be.

Mr. ADAMS. If the gentleman listened to the reading of my amendment he is aware that there is not a word in it about retaliation.

Mr. HOOKER. I understand that.

Mr. ADAMS. I only referred in my remarks to that question because it had been brought into the House; and I was explaining why we should pursue a more excellent way.

Mr. HOOKER. I understand the gentleman does not use the word "retaliatory" in the amendment which he proposes. But in his speech he did allude to the propriety of retaliatory legislation——

Mr. ADAMS. As a general principle.

Mr. HOOKER. And on that I agree with the gentleman. I have, however, read his amendment since its presentation to the House, and it strikes me that while there may be an appropriate occasion for the adoption of some measure embodying the principle of his amendment, this is not the time or the occasion. We are about to accept in appropriate terms—for I hope this Committee of the Whole will decide to accept—the courteous invitation of a sister republic abroad to participate in an exposition of the world's products of art, manufacture, and whatever else may denote the civilization of the world. I do not think this an appropriate time to express an opinion upon the subject referred to in the gentleman's amendment.

I will not say anything in regard to the amendment; but, Mr. Chairman, recurring to the subject-matter of the resolution itself, it proposes we shall take part in the international exposition to occur at Paris in the centennial year of our Constitution, 1889. And the invitation comes from a republic like our own, one holding similar doctrines with our own, and we ought to accept it, not in any spirit of hesitation, but if we accept it at all we should accept it freely and respond to the invitation in the same friendly spirit in which it comes to us.

This Republic of France, situated in Europe in the midst of the governments of the Old World, represents some of the principles which are embodied in our own. Not only have they accepted our example, not only has France taken our form of government, but in addition the example which America has set to the nations of the world has been followed by fifteen of the republics of Central and South America. They have adopted almost in our own language the Constitution of the United States. If they have not adopted it in our own language, they have at least adopted it in the spirit of that great principle which lies at the foundation of our American institutions and our free Government—the great principle of community independence. [Applause.]

The soul, the essence of the free Government of the United States is embodied in our Constitution and in a form so strong that upon one proposition, the proposition to destroy the equality of the States in the Senate, the State of Delaware with but 177,000 population has the power to put her veto upon all the other States of the Union. And I am gratified to know that the Central and South American republics have indicated their desire to participate with the great mother republic of this continent in the centennial year of the adoption of the Constitution of the United States, which is to occur in the same year this Paris international exhibition is to take place. I have no doubt this French Republic, in the very midst of the nations of the Old World, will give her sanction and support, when that exhibition occurs in 1889, to the great principles embodied in the Constitution of the United States, and which have been adopted, as I have already stated, in so many republics of Central and South America.

I am also gratified to know, Mr. Chairman, that it is not alone in the republics of South America, not alone in the Republic of France, but other nations holding other forms of government, holding different doctrines from those in the Constitution. I am gratified, I say, to find that those great principles of free government embodied in our Constitution of the United States, and after which so many South American and other republics have patterned, have met the approbation of the greatest men who belonged to the statesmen of the Old World. The most memorable instance of that in our history was at the hands of that grand old octogenarian statesman and orator of England, Mr. William E. Gladstone [applause], who, when speaking for the independence of Ireland, in favor of home rule for Ireland, in the Parliament of Great Britain, paid to the Constitution of the United States and the governments established under it the greatest tribute I ever remember to have heard. It is simple in its language, grand in its oratory, and more perfect in its conception than any that I remember. It was when Mr. Gladstone made his speech at London April 27, 1887, from which I quote the following:

> The institutions and progress of the United States have always been subjects of great interest to me. Ever since, very many years ago, I studied the life of Washington, I became aware, first, of the magnitude of the destiny reserved for Americans, and, second, of the fact that the period of the birth of the American state was of more interest than any other it was possible to study.
> Whenever a youth desirous of studying political life consults me respecting a course of study in the field of history, I always refer him to the early history of America.

[Applause.]

In his memorable tribute to America, published in the North American Review September, 1878, Mr. Gladstone further said:

> The American Constitution is, so far as I can see, the most wonderful work ever struck off at a given time by the brain and purpose of man.

[Applause.]

And, Mr. Chairman, it is a subject of gratulation to all Americans that our institutions and the spirit of our civilization, stretching as we do now from where the morning sun slakes its thirst in the dews of the New England hills, and following him in his diurnal course until his last ray glasses itself on the Golden Gate of California, over thirty-eight great States and six or seven Territories, and over all the country in the spirit and great principle of humanity and independence—that this great empire composes, as has been well said by that high tribunal of last resort when the subject came before it, an indissoluble Union of indestructible States. [Applause.]

And I say that this invitation of our sister republic of the Old World should be received and accepted by this Government and this Congress, and that our commissioners should be sent there freely and generously, with no restrictions and no limitations. The interest and feeling that we have for France dates back, not to a day or a month or a year, but it goes back to the olden century, the early days of the Revolution, when her soldiers touched elbows with our soldiers and her great general came to dedicate his life, if need be, and his property to the service of human liberty. [Applause.]

We should do, then, what we do ungrudgingly, without stint and without condition; but, like the gratuity of the great Master of the Universe, it should go as freely as the water from the mountain side, giving a gentle kiss to every sedge it overtaketh in its pilgrimage, and so by many winding nooks straying with willing sport to the wild ocean. [Applause.] Ay, Mr. Chairman, it should be as free and generous as generosity itself. [Applause.]

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I see from the bill and preamble, and also have the knowledge, as everybody else has outside of the bill, that there is to be an exposition in France in 1889. A very courteous invitation has come to our Government, inviting us, as well as other nations, to come and participate in it, as we invited France to participate in 1876. The gentleman says we may invite them again, a little later, to another exposition.

Now, there are several ways, Mr. Chairman, of testifying our respect for France in the premises. One would be to send them a copy of the Constitution. [Laughter.] Another, a copy of the most eloquent speech of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER] tied up in ribbon, and all that sort of thing. [Renewed laughter.] Let the Secretary of State appoint somebody to bear it over there with assurances of our most profound respect, etc.

After all, this exposition that France has concluded to hold has a practical side; and when you come down to the facts they have a great many things to sell over there, and they are a very ingenious and progressive people, and they want to advertise. They give us a chance to advertise, and we have a couple of hundred thousand dollars which we take out of the Treasury, and there is a President to appoint a commissioner and an assistant commissioner and various other people who are to be paid out of this money, and we are to invite the governors of the States to appoint commissioners to make exhibits.

You have here the machinery for a first-class exhibit, for a first-class "blow-out," if you will allow the use of a common expression but a very proper one in this connection.

But, for my part, I am for sending over an exhibit to show really what we do in this country and what we can do. Therefore I am perfectly willing to give the $200,000 proposed by the resolution. I do not want to stint the commission or the Secretary of State, but am willing to give him all the money he needs to properly represent the Republic of the United States at this exposition. My colleague [Mr. ADAMS] comes and says that we have here some of our principal products which we can exhibit, the pork product, for instance.

It so happens that they have been discriminated against by France.

We think we know that it is the best product of the kind that is made in the world. We see nothing improper, nothing out of the way of making this a part of our exhibit. My colleague proposes to give $25,000 more money so as to make an exhibit of that product. It is the very thing we ought to do, to show not only the people of France, but all other people who may be there, what our product is. This is a republican show, and more than that, it is a free show if we pay for it.

Now, if it has not this practical side, there is no necessity for spending the $200,000; let us discard the whole thing altogether, and, as I said before, send them the assurance of our high regard with a few nice sounding words.

I hope the amendment of my colleague will prevail.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendments proposed by the committee. Is a separate vote demanded on any of the amendments?

No separate vote was demanded.

The amendments recommended by the committee were again read and were agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is now on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ADAMS].

Mr. SPRINGER. Let it be again read.

The amendment offered by Mr. ADAMS was again read.

Mr. ADAMS. I ask unanimous consent to insert after the words "concise statement" the words "printed in English, French, and German."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can modify his amendment.

Mr. ADAMS. Then I ask the Clerk to add those words to the amendment.

I want to say I shall deeply regret if the gentleman from Mississippi or anybody else supposes me capable in offering this amendment of making or intending to make any discourteous answer to the courteous invitation of the French Republic. Nothing is further from my intention. I think on reflection the gentleman will see that so far from this being inopportune it is the only occasion we have of securing an important practical advantage for ourselves as well as for the people of Europe by distributing information which is not likely to reach the people of Europe in any other way.

From the time when this difficulty arose we have encountered obstacles, raised sometimes by European governments and sometimes by interested individuals, prejudicing the minds of the common people of Europe against our pork product. Gentlemen will remember that when the subject came up in the Imperial Reichstag of Germany, Prince Bismarck sarcastically alluded to the friends of the admission of our pork product as the friends to the poor man's trichinæ. And from that time to this there have been always some in France and Germany, and I think in England, eager to prejudice the common people of Europe against our pork product and to prevent the repeal of this prohibitory decree.

Here we are to have an exposition which will be resorted to by vast numbers of people from all over Europe. The people will go there although their governments may not take part. The people of Germany, for example, will go there whether the Imperial Government accepts the invitation of the French Republic or not. It is an admirable opportunity; and the only object I had in offering this amendment was to improve that opportunity. There was not the slightest discourtesy intended, and I do not think the slightest discourtesy will be found in it by any official of the French Republic.

The amendment of Mr. ADAMS was adopted.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

RELATIONS WITH OTHER AMERICAN STATES.

Mr. BELMONT. The next bill to be called up is the bill (H. R. 1473) in regard to which I ask unanimous consent to make a statement.

The CHAIRMAN. The title of the bill will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 1473) authorizing the President of the United States to arrange a conference for the purpose of promoting arbitration and encouraging reciprocal commercial relations between the United States of America and the Republics of Mexico, Central and South America, and the Empire of Brazil.

Mr. BELMONT. This bill is in charge of my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MCCREARY]. I desire to say to the House that when the measure was under consideration in the Forty-ninth Congress I opposed it in the House. I hope, however, that the bill will now pass, because I think the time is opportune for this Government to show its friendly disposition to our neighbors to the south of us. There are good political reasons for which the United States should at present adopt such a policy, and, moreover, it is opportune, it seems to me, for us to pass this bill now, because there is during the present Congress a better prospect of a general tariff revision, that being the first necessary step for the establishment and extension of foreign markets, which is also the main purpose of this bill. I now yield to my colleague on the committee who has charge of the bill.

Mr. MCCREARY. I call up for consideration the bill H. R. 1473, the title of which has been read.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, requested and authorized to invite the several governments of the Republics of Mexico, Central and South America, and the Empire of Brazil to join the United States in a conference to be held at Washington, in the United States, for the purpose of discussing and recommending for adoption to their respective governments some place of arbitration for the settlement of disagreements and disputes that may hereafter arise between them, and for considering questions relating to the improvement of business intercourse between said countries, and to encourage such reciprocal commercial relations as will be beneficial to all and secure more extensive markets for the products of each of said countries. The President of the United States shall appoint six commissioners, who shall attend said conference on behalf of the United States, and shall report the proceedings thereof to the President, who shall transmit the same to Congress; and the sum of $40,000, or so much thereof as shall be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay the reasonable expenses of the conference, to be approved by the Secretary of State.

The committee recommend the following amendments:

In line 7 insert the words "at such time as he may deem proper in the year 1889."

In line 10 strike out the word "place" and insert the word "plan."

In line 21 strike out "$40,000" and insert "$20,000."

Mr. MCCREARY. The bill under consideration refers to commerce and arbitration, two of the grandest problems of this age. It authorizes the President of the United States to arrange a conference for the purpose of promoting arbitration and encouraging reciprocal commercial relations between the United States of America and the Republics of Mexico, Central and South America, and the Empire of Brazil.

There are south of our Republic fifteen republics and the Empire of Brazil, and they cover an area ten times the size of France, Spain, Prussia, and Italy. They are as large as the United States and the whole of Europe combined. The population of those countries amounts to about 50,000,000 of people. They are connected to us by land; and most of them are nearer to New York than is the State of California, and yet to many of the people of the United States the Republics of Central and South America are almost unknown.

All of these countries except Brazil have, by stupendous efforts and many sacrifices, fashioned their governments after ours, and to-day all the countries of South America and of Central America are anxious to cultivate social and commercial relations with us. Our neglect of them is equaled only by our ignorance of their products, of their resources, and of their civilization. Very few of our people understand much about the progress they have made in self-government, in political reform, and in internal improvements. The disparity of trade between our country and those countries in Central and South America and Mexico is one of the marvels of this century.

In 1887 our exports were valued at $752,180,902.

Of this amount we exported but $64,719,000 to Mexico and South and Central America.

Our annual mechanical and agricultural products are valued at about eleven thousand millions of dollars, while we seldom have sold more than $75,000,000 worth of these products to our nearest neighbors, who buy in Europe at least three times as much as they get here.

The total commerce of the countries named in 1885 was as follows:

Imports	$331,100,599
Exports	391,294,781

Of the $331,100,599 of merchandise sold to those countries, the share of the United States was only $42,598,469; yet we are their closest neighbor.

The report of the commissioners sent by our Government to Central and South America shows that the development of the southern half of South America is nearly as rapid as that of the United States. Immigration is flooding in, internal improvements are opening new and fertile fields, and wealth is increasing in a ratio not exceeded by any other section of the globe.

Chili, Uruguay, and the Argentine Republic, almost a terra incognita to many, are booming like our Western States and Territories. In 1876 the imports of the Argentine Republic were valued at $36,000,000; in 1884 they had reached $80,000,000. In 1876 the merchandise brought to that country from England, France, and Germany was valued at only $18,000,000, while in 1884 it was more than $53,000,000. The entire imports from the United States for twenty years were $6,000,000 less than those from the three commercial nations of Europe just named for the year 1884.

In the last two years the Government of the Argentine Republic has made contracts for $59,000,000 worth of railway improvements, including a line of road northward into Bolivia, and two lines in the direction of Chili and Peru, so as to bring the commerce of the Pacific slope into the harbor of Buenos Ayres, instead of taking it around the Straits of Magellan.

In 1874 the foreign commerce of Chili amounted to $42,000,000. In 1884 it reached $132,000,000. From $50,000,000 to $60,000,000 in merchandise is imported into Chili every year, of which England furnishes over $25,000,000, France over $12,000,000, Germany over $8,000,000, and the United States $3,000,000.

Adding the imports of Brazil to those of Uruguay, Chili, and the Argentine Republic, it will be found that the aggregate value of manufactured products introduced into those four countries annually reaches the enormous sum of $250,000,000, of which England furnishes about one-half, France about $50,000,000, Germany about $35,000,000, and the United States about $17,000,000.

We have no adequate conception of the present magnitude of these markets nor of their prospective value. The manufacturers of the United States can supply almost every article represented in that $250,000,000. From the report of the commissioners to South America I have gathered some remarkable facts.

We have more trade with either Belgium, Italy, the Netherlands, Spain, Switzerland, Russia, China, Japan, or Australia than we have with all the Central American states combined. We have nearly as much trade with Greece as we have with Chili. We sell more sewing-machines in Switzerland than we sell in Chili, and Switzerland sells Chili more sewing-machines than she buys of us.

Bolivia has a foreign trade of over $16,000,000 a year, yet the name of that country does not appear in the tables of our Bureau of Statistics. The chief imports of Bolivia are cotton and woolen goods, agricultural implements, mining machinery, hardware, cutlery, clocks, watches, canned goods, and provisions, a list which could be filled in any commercial city of the United States as cheaply as in Europe, and yet the annual reports of the Treasury Department of the United States do not show a dollar's worth of commerce between the United States and that country.

The most absurd spectacle in the commercial world is our trade with Brazil. We buy nearly all her raw products, while she spends the money we pay for them in England and France. In 1884, of the exports of Brazil, $50,266,000 went to the United States, $29,000,000 to England, and $24,000,000 to France. Of the imports of Brazil in the same year $35,000,000 came from England, $15,000,000 from France, and only $8,000,000 from the United States.

Mr. Chairman, the climate in those countries is warm, and the people use for clothing large quantities of cotton goods. Yet, although we produced last year in this country between five and six millions of bales of cotton, it is a remarkable fact that of the $65,000,000 expended by Central and South America for cotton goods last year, over $50,000,000 went to the merchants and manufacturers of England.

The countries of Central and South America need the products of our furnaces, of our factories, and of our farms. They need nearly everything we produce and we need nearly everything they produce. They need American watches, American machinery, American mowers and reapers, American sewing-machines, telephones, scythes, saws, shovels, hoes, axes, indeed nearly everything of which we have a surplus in this country. The map of the world does not show a region that has greater resources or greater possibilities than have North America, Central America, and South America.

The geographical position of the three Americas, their common interests, and their common love of freedom are such that they ought to be more intimate in their social and commercial relations. Sixty-six years ago that gallant and gifted, that tried and true statesman and patriot, Henry Clay, advocated in the halls of Congress more intimate commercial relations between the United States and the countries of Central and South America, and President John Quincy Adams appointed delegates to the peace congress at Panama.

Since that time population has expanded, until to-day the three Americas have over one hundred millions of people and the demand for commercial intercourse is greater now than it ever has been in the past, so that the time is auspicious for this conference. There are those, Mr. Chairman, who say that they do not know what such a conference will consider. I will, therefore, refer briefly to the subjects which will problably come before the conference when it is held, and in this connection let me say that nearly all the great movements that have taken place in this world have been preceded by conferences. There was a conference of representative men of the colonies before they determined upon the Declaration of Independence. There was a conference before Christopher Columbus started out to seek the New World. In short, sir, as I said before, nearly every great and important movement in the world's history has been preceded by a conference. In this conference of the three Americas it is proposed to consider—

1. Measures that shall tend to preserve the peace and promote the prosperity of the several American countries.

2. A definite plan of arbitration for recommendation to their respective Governments of all questions, disputes, and differences that may now or hereafter exist between them, to the end that all difficulties and disputes between such nations may be peaceably settled and wars prevented.

3. Measures toward the formation of an American customs union, under which the trade of the American nations with each other shall, so far as is possible and profitable, be promoted.

4. The establishment of regular and frequent communication between the ports of the several American states and the ports of each other.

5. The establishment of a uniform system of customs regulations in each of the independent American states to govern the mode of importation and exportation of merchandise and port dues and charges, a uniform method of determining the classification and valuation of such merchandise in the ports of each country, and a uniform system of invoices, and the subject of the sanitation of ships and quarantine.

6. The adoption of a uniform system of weights and measures, and laws to protect the patent-rights, copyrights, and trade-marks of citizens of either country in the others, and for the extradition of criminals.

7. The adoption of common silver coin by each government, the same to be legal tender in all commercial transactions between the citizens of all of the American countries.

8. Such other subjects relating to the peace and welfare of the countries represented as may be presented by the members of the conference.

Mr. Chairman, there has not been and there never will be a more appropriate time for arranging for this conference than the present. Our Republic is at peace with the whole world. The republics of Central and South America are at peace with each other. Progress and prosperity are "booming" both there and in our own country. It may be startling to some for me to say that I believe that in less than twenty years there will be railroad communication between the city of New York and the capital of the Argentine Republic, Buenos Ayres. A few years ago, before the Central and Union Pacific Railroads were constructed, by which New York and San Francisco were connected by rail, the obstacles in the way of that work were greater than those which now exist in the way of connecting New York by rail with the capital of the Argentine Republic. Already the grand movement has commenced. To-day there is railroad connection between New York and the capital of Mexico, and arrangements have been made between the Mexican Republic and the Republic of Guatemala for the construction of a railroad from the city of Mexico to the capital of Guatemala.

That has been done on this end of the line. If you go to the other end you find that the Argentine Republic is now engaged in building a railroad from Buenos Ayres, its capital, to its northern boundary line; and when the railroad gets to that northern line there will come into operation a contract already made by Bolivia, giving $40,000 per mile and 11 square leagues of land to an English company that has agreed to build the railroad from the line between the Argentine Republic and Bolivia to the capital of Bolivia. What is left? But little over 3,000 miles between the capital of Bolivia and the capital of Guatemala; and I assert that the probability of the construction of that railroad is stronger to-day than was the probability of the construction of the Central Pacific and Union Pacific ten years before they were built.

I believe, therefore, the time for the conference is properly expressed in the bill. But a few days ago, in the other end of this Capitol, there was passed a bill to organize a company to construct the Nicaragua ship-canal. Now, when the question of building the railroad which is to connect Central and South America with North America is being presented; when in the other end of this Capitol a bill has just passed to encourage the construction of a canal which will connect the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans, and which will shorten so much the distance between our country and those countries—I say it is the proper time to have the conference between delegates to be appointed by the President of the United States and delegates to be sent by the various Governments of Central and South America and the Republic of Mexico.

Mr. Chairman, the first century of our national existence was mainly devoted to material development, to the construction of railroad and telegraph lines, the advancement of science, literature, and art, the formation of that Constitution which the great Gladstone termed "the most wonderful work ever prepared by the brain and purpose of man;" to the restoration of friendship and fraternity between the people of the United States, and to the perfection of that Government which Abraham Lincoln said was a government "of the people, by the people, and for the people." There are many good and wise men now in our country who say that the second century of our national existence will in all probability be devoted to the improvement of commercial relations between the Americas; to an international era wherein there will be greater friendship between the three Americas and more feeling in favor of arbitrating international disputes and differences.

Mr. Chairman, it seems that now all nationalities in the western hemisphere—all classes of people and all political parties—are in favor of reciprocal commercial relations between the three Americas. In 1884 a National Democratic convention declared:

> We favor an American continental policy based upon more intimate commercial and political relations with the fifteen sister republics of Central and South America, but entangling alliances with none.

The Republican convention in 1884 adopted a resolution which, while not speaking so fully and so pointedly, meant the same thing. And we find that the republics of Central and South America have most of them in some form or other declared in favor of more intimate commercial relations. I have before me a message of the President of Guatemala. He says:

> From the very beginning we have embraced with the greatest ardor the plan of the American Congress to send a commission to the Spanish-American republics for the purpose of securing more intimate and friendly relations between them all.
> Such a noble and elevated purpose can not but have the sincerest sympathy and co-operation from all those who desire the progress of the several nations of the New World. The grand Republic of the United States is the natural market of the different products we export, and they should find in you rich and populous consumers who are able to send us in return the variety of their agricultural and mechanical products with benefit to the producers and consumers of both countries.

I present also an extract from the message of the President of Venezuela; and I wish to say in this connection that there is to-day in the capital of Venezuela a statue (finished but a few years ago) of that American who was "first in war, first in peace, and first in the hearts of his countrymen." The President of Venezuela said:

Venezuela and the United States have the same institutions, the same history. The United States produced the immortal George Washington, "the first in the hearts of his countrymen," and Venezuela produced the immortal Bolivar, the father of five republics, freed by the impulse of stupendous efforts. Both of them honored by the recognition of the two confederacies, they are to-day the faithful representatives of the association of our interests and aspirations—equality before the law and the truth of democracy.

With these lofty motives the people of the New World aspire by union to seek the development of their industrial and commercial prosperity and to cement the alliance of views and intents in the reign of equity and the empire of justice.

I have here, also, extracts from messages of the President of Mexico and the President of Chili. The President of Mexico, when asked about the practicability of a congress of American nations, said:

That the suggestion had many times been considered by the Mexican Government, which he believed had always favored it. He said he had always hoped such an international congress would be some time held, as he believed great good could be accomplished if all the American republics would consent to send delegates to meet upon an equal footing and agree upon measures for the common welfare.

The chief object to be discussed at such a gathering would naturally be a method of arbitration by which international differences could be peacefully adjusted, and another, equally important, was to confine American trade, so far as possible, to American nations.

The President of Chili said:

The extraordinary progress of the United States, independent of the advantage gained by the extension of its area, of its geographical position, and the elements which constitute its social organization, is due to the liberal institutions under which the people are governed and by which it has been proven that the free people are those that really prosper, and are the only ones that have peace as the essential condition of material, intellectual, and moral progress.

The South American republics when they made themselves free had in the northern zone an authority they could consult and an example they could follow. If, owing to reasons which are well understood, they could not copy the edifice you have framed, they have always endeavored at least to inspire in their own people the ideas which have enabled you to advance so resolutely on the road of human liberty and progress. If on this road so happily trodden the American constellation has added to its stars, it is also true that the southern star, following with no less certainty in the same heavens, and pursuing the same purpose, shines to-day with greater splendor and shows that we have not been amiss in seeking the path to glory, liberty, and prosperity.

I say, therefore, Mr. Chairman, that now is the opportune time for this conference. It has been neglected too long; but the hour has now arrived, and I hope the House will appreciate it and embrace it.

Mr. Chairman, the bill which has been reported unanimously by the Committee on Foreign Affairs refers to another subject. It is proposed that in addition to considering questions relating to the improvement of our commercial relations, we shall consider also at this conference the subject of arbitration.

Arbitration is one of the most powerful and popular words in the English language. It rings throughout the civilized world as the harbinger of better days, when war shall be no more, and when peace on earth, good-will toward men, shall be the grand benediction of the age. [Applause.]

That noble and gifted patriot, Thomas A. Hendricks, late Vice-President of the United States, in one of the last speeches made by him, used this language in regard to arbitration:

Will nations never desire a more rational umpire of differences than force? * * * Must blood and treasure always flow before international controversies can be settled? * * * The civilization of this age demands that they be referred to the disinterested states for settlement by friendly arbitration. * * * It will be a beautiful spectacle if this Republic, so strong and so secure, shall lead the nations in a movement for permanent peace, and for the relief of the people everywhere from the maintenance of standing armies and ships of war.

Hon. John J. Crittenden, of Kentucky, used language of the same kind:

What a glorious homage would this Republic render to its best principles by accepting the arbitration of a tribunal composed of men distinguished for their talents, knowledge, science, and moral worth. This would tend greatly to the elevation of the age.

Although the time is late, I can not refrain from reading the words of General and ex-President Grant:

My views on peaceful arbitration in the settlement of international differences instead of the sword have not changed. I look with confidence for an established court, recognized by all nations, having authority to settle differences without resort to arms, thus rendering unnecessary the maintenance of standing armies.

These words, Mr. Chairman, came well from the grand soldier and patriot who, almost with his last breath at Mount McGregor, plead for harmony and good feeling between the North and the South. [Applause.]

I have other extracts from the utterances of other distinguished statesmen on the subject of arbitration.

I also present a list of fifty-six cases where national disputes have been settled by arbitration, beginning with the arbitration between Great Britain and the United States in 1816 and concluding with the arbitration of 1887 of the dispute between Costa Rica and Nicaragua as to boundary line, and which was settled by our present able President.

1. Arbitration between the United States and Great Britain in 1816, about St. Croix River and the lakes.
2. The United States and Great Britain in 1818, about obligation to restore slaves; referred to the Emperor of Russia.
3. The United States and Spain in 1819, respecting Florida claims.
4. The United States and Great Britain in 1827, about boundaries; referred to the King of the Netherlands.
5. The United States and Denmark in 1830.
6. Belgium and Holland in 1834.
7. France and England in 1835.
8. The United States and Mexico in 1839.
9. The United States and Portugal in 1851; referred to the Emperor of the French.
10. The United States and England in 1853.
11. The United States and New Granada in 1857.
12. The United States and Chili in 1858.
13. The United States and Paraguay in 1859.
14. The United States and Costa Rica in 1860.
15. The United States and Ecuador in 1862.
16. Great Britain and Brazil in 1863.
17. The United States and Peru in 1863.
18. The United States and Great Britain in 1863, about Hudson's Bay Company.
19. The United States and Ecuador in 1864.
20. The United States and Venezuela in 1866.
21. France and Prussia in 1867.
22. Turkey and Greece in 1867.
23. England and Spain in 1867.
24. The United States and Mexico in 1868.
25. The United States and Peru in 1868.
26. The United States and Peru in 1869; referred to the King of the Belgians.
27. The United States and Brazil in 1870.
28. Great Britain and Portugal in 1870.
29. The United States and Spain in 1871.
30. The United States and Great Britain; on the Alabama, in 1871.
31. The United States and Great Britain in 1871; about sundry claims.
32. The United States and Great Britain (the San Juan dispute) in 1871.
33. The United States and Great Britain (about Nova Scotia fisheries) in 1871.
34. Great Britain and Brazil in 1873; referred to United States and Italian ministers at Rio.
35. Italy and Switzerland in 1874; referred to United States minister in Italy.
36. Great Britain and Portugal (about Delagoa Bay) in 1875; referred to the President of the French Republic.
37. China and Japan in 1876.
38. Persia and Afghanistan (Seistan arbitration) in 1877.
39. Great Britain and Liberia in 1879.
40. The United States and Spain (about Cuba) in 1879.
41. Great Britain and Nicaragua in 1879.
42. The United States and France in 1880.
43. The United States and Costa Rica in 1881.
44. France and Nicaragua in 1881.
45. Chili and Colombia 1881.
46. Great Britain and Nicaragua (about Mosquito Indians) in 1881.
47. Chili and Argentine Republic (about Straits of Magellan, etc.) in 1881; referred to the President of the United States.
48. Holland and Hayti in 1882.
49. The United States and Hayti in 1884.
50. The United States and Spain in 1885.
51. England and Germany (about the Fiji Islands).
52. The United States and Denmark in 1887.
53. Germany and Spain (about the Caroline Islands); referred to the Pope.
54. England, France, and Italy with Chili (about losses in the war between Chili and Peru).
55. Peru and Japan (about the seizure of a Peruvian bark).
56. Nicaragua and Costa Rica (about boundary); referred to President Cleveland in July, 1887.

I shall occupy the time of the House at this late hour but a little longer. It is so clear this conference is necessary, it is so clear good results will arrive, and the sum asked is so paltry it does not need any further argument. I believe if the conference is held it will be an event in the history of the world that will live forever, and it will be crowned with the wreath which is always woven for that which ennobles humanity, enlarges liberty, and promotes republics. [Great applause.]

I now yield for ten minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PHELPS].

Mr. PHELPS. Mr. Chairman, I shall be brief. I shall only second the proposition which has been so ably and eloquently advocated by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MCCREARY]. The merits of the proposition are so clear they need no demonstration. His eloquence and ability were needed only to emphasize the fact that the Democratic party had at last recognized them and adopted the scheme. [Applause.] No need of any statement, either simple or emphatic, to show what is the relation of the Republican party to this great project. History noted and recorded it years ago.

It was first introduced in another place and by the leader of another party. Seven years ago a great Republican announced it to the country and began to execute it. Death stayed his arm. Three years passed and the opportunity to complete this scheme and to complete a score of patriotic schemes similar to this one, which the Democratic party will one after another reluctantly adopt, seemed to come to him. That opportunity passed—lost when the Republican party under his Presidential candidacy was defeated, miraculously, as when the Hebrew God permitted Samson to smite the Philistines, hip and thigh, with the jawbone of an ass. [Laughter and applause.]

When this proposition was introduced seven years ago it was a South American "congress." When it is introduced to-day it is a South American "conference." Now, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MCCREARY] did not tell us why he had changed the name. Needless to do so. It has been the custom in this country, and in all others, for people to change the names of the children whom they adopt. [Laughter.] Seven years ago this South American congress, as a scheme which was to benefit all American peoples, was first introduced; but the gentleman from Kentucky has failed to tell us why the Democratic party waited so long to adopt it. Needless here for him to explain. Physiologists have told us that it takes seven years to change every atom in a body, so that at the end of that period it shall stand a new man; and he properly assumed that the intelligence of this committee was such that it could take cognizance that, under a direct and simple analogy, the Democratic party would have to wait seven years to eliminate everything that was Republican from this Republican measure. [Laughter.]

But this proposition was a good proposition when it was Republican; it is a good proposition now it is Democratic. It was a good project seven years ago; it is a good project now. It was a good thing when it was Blaine's "congress;" it is a good thing when it is McCREARY'S "conference."

Mr. McCREARY. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. PHELPS. It proposes what? It proposes something for the welfare of all the peoples who live upon this continent. It caters for the moral and for the material welfare of all of these. It says that the "alarums of war" shall cease forever. Humane provisions of arbitration. It says that we and our neighbors, who are happy enough to live on the continent, after this congress or conference is established, shall devote ourselves to the industries of peace and to the cultivation of reciprocal, social, and commercial relations.

Mr. McCREARY. Will the gentleman now permit me to interrupt him for a question?

Mr. PHELPS. This being a scheme so grand and far-reaching it can exhaust the energies of us all. There is in it room for us all to work; so I say God-speed to this congress, God-speed to this conference. Let Republicans and Democrats rally in so good a cause. Let the name of my inquisitive friend, whose question shall yet be answered [laughter], be framed with that of Blaine in the desire to accomplish this great good for the American people. Let all of us who are Americans stand, all Republicans and Democrats, by both of them and their noble plan, conscious of the fact that we shall all be needed, and that, though Blaine may plant and McCREARY may water, only the co-operation of the whole American people can give the increase. [Applause.]

Mr. McCREARY. Will the gentleman now yield for a question?

Mr. PHELPS. I would be glad to do so.

Mr. McCREARY. I am, like the gentleman himself, very much gratified by the position taken by Mr. Blaine; but I wanted to ask, if I could find an opportunity to do so, if Mr. Blaine ever introduced a bill in Congress covering this subject while he was a member?

Mr. PHELPS. The gentleman has gone back seven years already to find its origin. Does he want to go back fourteen?

Mr. McCREARY. But did Mr. Blaine introduce a bill?

Mr. PHELPS. Mr. Blaine seven years ago, when he had charge of the foreign affairs of this country, recognized the advantage of this scheme which the gentleman now proposes—gave it to the continent and the world.

Mr. McCREARY. But he did not introduce a bill.

Mr. PHELPS. And then used all the resources of his position to carry it into operation.

Mr. McCREARY. I am ready to go forward with any gentlemen to carry it on to success.

Mr. SPRINGER. Did my friend from New Jersey imply that my friend from Kentucky was to retire from the Presidential contest since Mr. Blaine has retired from it, as the gentleman has coupled the names together?

Mr. PHELPS. I did not know that the name of the gentleman from Kentucky had been mentioned in that connection; but in view of the wisdom exhibited by him in adopting even at this late date measures which had been proposed by the Republican party, I should think that if his name were presented to the St. Louis convention early in June the value of such a nomination would be recognized as a forlorn hope by that convention and they would select him as their leader. If they did, it would be the first time in their history the Democratic party was found wise enough when it saw an opportunity to seize and embrace it. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. McCREARY. I want to be as kind to the gentleman from New Jersey as he has been to me. I hope that when at Chicago a Republican convention meet, and they desire somebody to lead the forlorn hope to defeat, they will nominate Mr. PHELPS.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment submitted by the committee. Is a separate vote demanded on the amendments?

Mr. McADOO. I move to strike out the last word.

I have no wish to discuss the question here mooted as to who is entitled to the honor of this idea. If my eloquent and distinguished colleague [Mr. PHELPS] is right, this very brilliant conception had for a long time been running around this Chamber like "Japhet in search of a father." But now, at any rate, my friend on my right, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. McCREARY] is, to all intents and purposes, its Congressional parent.

I am very glad after the amendment offered to the last bill from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and which amendment successfully passed this House to my surprise, that this bill comes up without any predominant materialistic element in it. After the passage of that last amendment in a resolution to accept the hospitalities of the republican Government of France I was inclined to believe that our age had become so materialistic that the stomach of man had gained complete domination over his soul, and that the American hog preceded man and pork was more than liberty. Now, I for one am not so much concerned as to whether we shall sell more or less of tin cans, sewing-machines, and cotton shirts, as I am concerned that this great Republic which professes belief in human freedom and prates much of liberty shall remain true to its convictions and witness for them to all the world.

The life of man will not finally be measured by his success in telephones and trade, locomotives and ships. Good and useful things these in their way; but in my opinion life would be of little value if these were its chief end. If bloodless, word-splitting, jargoning, alleged logic, and soulless so-called political economy, with its parrot cries of "supply and demand," "profit and loss," are really to rule this world, then the soul of man, with its lofty ideals, its aspirations, and its beliefs, has no place on such a wretched dirt heap.

I approve very highly of the idea contained in this bill. The eyes of Europe are on the three Americas. As the population of Europe becomes denser and its political complications and oppressions increase there will be even a greater emigration from that continent to ours than at the present day. The United States can not remain silent or passive while this tremendous flood of emigration is pouring into America from Europe. And while we have at our doors in South America the best market yet opened up in prospective to us, I am a strong advocate of commercial union with the South American republics. From observation and experience I have no faith whatever in finding any sort of a permanent and paying market in Europe for American wares; but I believe if a true policy is followed by the Congress of the United States a day will come when there will be commercial freedom from the Arctic circle to that unknown country of Terra del Fuego; and that in this great American market the sixty, or, as it may be then, one hundred and fifty or two hundred millions of free Americans will dominate, to the exclusion of almost all European countries.

I am not in this advocating anything but sound Democratic doctrine. We want no unnecessary foreign complications; but, from Jefferson to Monroe and his doctrine and down to the recent Chicago platform, we have always maintained, coupled with our declarations of non-intervention, the strongly maintained right to preserve this continent free from European sovereignty. The Americas belong to the Americans. We would not interfere with the humblest nation on these continents, but we will not permit their rights and liberties to be infringed by foreign un-American nations.

I find in this bill, Mr. Chairman, among the republics invited to come here and confer with us the little Republic of Venezuela. The other day I took the liberty to introduce into this House a resolution requesting the State Department to inform us as to what unlawful actions, if any, Great Britain had taken with regard to the territory of that little republic. Mr. Chairman, that resolution is still in the Committee on Foreign Affairs. I hope for a speedy report from that committee.

Mr. BELMONT. I will say for the information of the gentleman from New Jersey that it was decided to-day the committee would report that resolution favorably.

Mr. McADOO. I congratulate the committee; and while we are here to-day expressing our sympathy and our love for the republics of South America and our desire for closer relations, it might not be untimely to remind the Congress of the United States of what Great Britain is doing in that country. There are, as you know, three Guianas in South America—the French, Dutch, and British. The British, unfortunately for the Venezuelans, adjoins their territory; and immediately beyond the British lines as laid down on the maps prepared by the British themselves is the most auriferous territory in the world—the famous El Dorado, to which Sir Walter Raleigh made his great pilgrimage, where he lost his son in battle, and where he himself engaged in encounters with resident Spaniards.

That territory as a mining land has no equal in our own grand and blessed country—our own Western regions, auriferous as they are. And the greed of Britain—rapacious and unjust—is such that, notwithstanding the fact that on her own map, made by her own officers a few years back, that rich territory of Venezuela remained intact, to-day tempted by the golden bait of this rich mining region beyond her borders, she has entered the territory of Venezuela and claims, I understand, almost up to the river Orinoco. It is a strange spectacle. I have no desire to preach any doctrine of mere robustious Jingoism. It is my desire to be as conservative and exact as possible. But I call the attention of this committee to the very singular spectacle of inconsistency—a country that preaches arbitration to us when we do not ask for it, and is at the same time unwilling to arbitrate with the little Republic of Venezuela. Is this alleged champion of civilization and peace influenced in its pacific inclinations by the power of its opponent?

It is but a short time since some of the most distinguished men of that powerful country came to these shores and preached in forum and in pulpit that we should perpetually arbitrate all complications and differences that might arise between ourselves and Great Britain. Does Great Britain measure the strength of her adversary before she offers terms of arbitration? If the principle of arbitration is a good one to extend to sixty millions of the freest and the bravest and the strongest people in the world, would it not have been consistent for that powerful country to have accepted the offer of arbitration which was made by the small and struggling Republic of Venezuela, which ordinarily could not compete with her in a physical contest on the ocean or the field of battle?

Mr. Chairman, the Republic of Venezuela, through her official delegates to-day, is looking to the United States for support and protection, and, as I said at the outset of my remarks, from the very philosophy of the situation, we are obliged, in order to maintain our own liberties, in order to maintain our own material grandeur and greatness, we are obliged, without infracting our traditional Democratic policy, to protect the small countries of the three Americas against unjust and illegal European aggression and domination.

It will not do, Mr. Chairman, for this great Republic, if the influence of her free institutions is to have full and free course to permeate the political and commercial destinies of the western hemisphere, if liberty is to be preserved to ourselves, to allow a powerful nation like Great Britain, without right, without equity, without justice, to take possession of the territory and the homes of the people of the brave and struggling Republic of Venezuela, of whom, as of all republics in America, we are the political mother. With the internal affairs of Venezuela I grant we have no concern; with her relations to her neighboring free countries we have no right to interfere.

Mr. Chairman, I hope that when the three Americas meet here in a peaceful commercial congress, we may be able to look the representatives of Venezuela in the face and say to them that we are not merely prating about our liberty and our love of freedom, that it is no mere cant begotten of self-complacency, but that we really and truly believe in republican government, that we do believe in human liberty, and that sympathy for the weak and downtrodden is a sentiment and a conviction which will carry us even to and beyond the verge of action, if it be necessary.

I hope that we may be able to welcome this humble republic of the three Americas into that congress of the nations, conscious of the fact that the moral influence of this great Republic, its dignified and potential protest, has preserved her soil unpolluted from the tread of the British army and her gold mines untouched by the greedy hand of the gold-seeking and land-hungry Briton, who is unwilling to leave her that which belongs to her by the law of God and of nations.

Mr. McCREARY. I now yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER].

Mr. HOOKER. Mr. Chairman, representing as I do in part a State whose entire western border is washed by the waters of the Mississippi River, and whose southern border has a frontage on the Gulf of Mexico of 80 miles in extent, lying between the great ports of entry of New Orleans, in Louisiana, and Mobile, in Alabama, with a harbor at Ship Island which can shelter the commercial marine of the world, I feel a deep interest in the fate of the bill under consideration reported from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, of which I have the honor to be a member.

The bill has for its object the drawing more closely of the ties of commercial intercourse and friendly relations between our own country and the great Central and South American countries which lie immediately on our southern border and are washed by the waters of the same great inland sea, the Gulf of Mexico. It looks, too, to the finding of a market for the surplus products of our people in that vast region of our country lying between the Alleghany and the Rocky Mountains, drained by the Mississippi River and its tributaries.

The Gulf of Mexico has been appropriately termed "the Mediterranean of the New World," and it needs no prophetic ken to see in the future a realization of that commercial prosperity and national renown for the nations which line the shores of the Gulf of Mexico that marked the history of the nations that lined the borders of the Mediterranean of the Old World.

A glance at the map of the world will serve to show the physical analogy between these two great internal seas and the countries that line their shores. But the canvas that presents the picture of the Gulf of Mexico must be widened and made large enough to take in continents and empires, whose vast area dwarfs the picture of the ancient Mediterranean.

The Mediterranean Sea from where it breaks through the narrow Straits of Gibraltar into the Atlantic Ocean stretches its length 2,300 miles, separating the continent of Europe from that of Africa and part of western Asia, washing with its waters the classic shores of historic Italy and Greece, and connecting on the north with the Sea of Marmora by the channel of the Dardanelles, and thence by the Bosphorus into the Euxine Sea, and now by the genius of the great French engineer, Count De Lesseps, pours through the artificial channel of Suez into the Red Sea and the Arabian Sea into the Indian Ocean.

The Mediterranean deserved its name. It belonged to no nationality or country. It was emphatically in media terra.

Its great arms, the Adriatic (which Byron termed "the tideless Adriatic") and the Sea of Azof, might with propriety be termed European seas, because they are encircled by European countries; but the Mediterranean is "a sea of the earth," and enriched and made famous whatever country by its genius or its prowess controlled its commerce and trade.

The shores of the Mediterranean were in olden times the nursery of civilization. The nations which established themselves on its fruitful borders founded empires which, while cherishing the love of separate independence and home rule, were near enough for any commercial intercourse.

Commercial relations were early formed between Egypt, Phœnicia, Greece, and Rome, carrying with them their arts and literature and developing them to a standard which constitutes still the model for the world to pattern after. The Roman Empire brought the entire coast of this fruitful sea into its dominion, making it an open channel for the spread of Christianity from the country of its origin towards the west, where it was destined to receive its highest development.

A glance at the map will show that the Gulf of Mexico, "the American Mediterranean," holds to the three Americas of the New World and the Republic of Mexico a very similar position to that which the Mediterranean holds to the great nations that border on its coast.

The Gulf of Mexico, measuring 1,000 miles from east to west and 800 miles from north to south, after washing the shores of five States in North America—Florida, Alabama, Louisiana, Texas, and Mississippi—stretches along the entire eastern coast of Central America and the Republic of Mexico, embracing the ports of Tampico and Vera Cruz, to the Bay of Campeche, and doubling the extreme point of the Republic of Mexico, pours through the Straits of Florida on the one side of Cuba into the Atlantic Ocean, and on the other side, through the Yucatan Channel, into the Caribbean Sea, washing the entire northern shore of South America, and into the Atlantic Ocean.

The great streams pouring their accumulated treasures into the Gulf of Mexico are the Suwanee and Apalachicola, in Florida; the Mobile, in Alabama; the Pascagoula and Pearl, in Mississippi; the Sabine, Trinity, Brazos, Colorado, Nueces, and Rio Grande, in Texas; the Mississippi, in Louisiana, and the Panuco, Coatzacoalcos, Tobasco, and Unnuasista, in Mexico.

There sit midway on the Gulf of Mexico the great ports of New Orleans and Mobile, and at the former the great Father of Waters, with his forty-two navigable tributaries, draining all that vast and fertile region of North America lying between the Alleghanies on the east and the Rocky Mountains on the west, embracing twenty-one States and six Territories, with 15,000 miles of navigable water-courses, bearing on its broad bosom the teeming food crops of the West and the sugar and cotton crops of the South, debouching into that golden bowl of the West Indies, the Gulf of Mexico, carrying the food and clothing of the world, constituting a wonderful seat of commerce to the nations that dot the shores of this Mediterranean of the three Americas.

What had the ancient Mediterranean to compare with our great internal Gulf of Mexico, even in the palmiest days of her glory, when Rome sat upon its shores, the crowned mistress of the world, in arms, science, law, literature, and the arts? Three streams of short mileage of navigation, the Rhone, the Tiber, and the Po, were its feeders and the channels of its internal commerce, while to our internal Gulf comes the great Father of Waters, with its forty-two navigable tributaries, to bring to our Gulf ports the redundant products of the richest region of the world. It would bankrupt the multiplication table to attempt to compute the value in dollars and cents of this vast internal trade and commerce that flows down the Mississippi River and its tributaries into the Gulf of Mexico.

The tables of the last census show that the States and Territories drained by the Mississippi River and its navigable tributaries contain 51 per cent. of the nation's area and 58 per cent. of its production, and that these same States and Territories produced in 1880—the census year—98 per cent. of the sugar, 94 per cent. of the coal, 89 per cent. of the corn, 81 per cent. of the pig-iron, 76 per cent. of the oats, 74 per cent. of the wheat, 68 per cent. of the cotton, 66 per cent. of the tobacco, 60 per cent of the hay, 57 per cent. of the forest products, 56 per cent. of the wool, and contained 92 per cent. of the swine, 97 per cent. of the mules, 74 per cent. of the horses, and 73 per cent. of the cattle in that same census year.

The total grain products of these same States drained by the Mississippi River and its navigable tributaries, amounted in this same census year to: Of Indian corn, 1,558,358,686 bushels; of wheat, 342,230,515 bushels; of oats, 310,271,700 bushels; of barley, 18,888,089 bushels; of rye, 13,974,324 bushels; of buckwheat, 5,082,880 bushels; making a total aggregate of 2,248,779,373 bushels; making an average of 44 bushels per capita for every man, woman, and child enumerated in the census of 1880. Well may the compiler of these tables have exclaimed when he finished his compilation, "Behold! here is the granary of the world!"

In addition to the mileage of navigable waters of the Mississippi and its tributaries must be added 2,000 more miles of navigable tributaries flowing from Texas, Alabama, Louisiana, and Mississippi into the Gulf of Mexico.

To these great natural highways of trade and commerce must be added the artificial highways, consisting of the great chain of railways which like a network embrace the continent and find their southern terminus on the waters of the Gulf of Mexico.

To give an idea of the vast commerce which finds its distribution through the Gulf of Mexico, it must be remembered that the seven great cotton-producing States of Arkansas, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Texas, Tennessee, and Florida supply us annually over four million of bales of the cotton crop, made and shipped.

From the six States of Florida, Georgia, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, and Texas we had a supply of timber, amounting, according to a table of estimates compiled from the last census, to a grand total of 184,281,500,000 feet. The wealth of the Gulf coast States in timber alone, apart from their agriculture, is almost beyond calculation.

Of the great corn fields of the United States, estimated to cover 195,000 square miles, 157,000 square miles—or 80 per cent. of the whole corn area—lie in the States and Territories drained by the waters that flow into the Gulf of Mexico.

The great iron deposits of Kentucky, Tennessee, Missouri, Ohio, and Alabama constitute another source of illimitable supply and inestimable value to the commerce of the Gulf of Mexico.

But I turn from the contemplation of the vast, exhaustless, and unbounded resources which flow by God-given channels and the artificial channels devised by the genius of man through our own favored country into the Gulf of Mexico, to the consideration of the commerce of the countries which lie immediately south of us and border like ourselves on the shore of this "American Mediterranean," the Gulf of Mexico. The nations bordering on the Mediterranean of the Old World sometimes spread their power and colonized under the red battle-flag of the god of war. The nations bordering on the Mediterranean of the New World, the Gulf of Mexico, must send out as conquerors the white-winged messengers of commerce, bearing the olive-branch of peace.

The generous and magnanimous interest shown by our sister Republic of Mexico in the world's exposition at New Orleans has already accomplished much in the way of establishing closer commercial relations between the United States and Mexico. It is a remarkable fact that while our nearer neighborhood to our sister Republic of Mexico, lying next to us on the Gulf, has made us somewhat familiar with her products, resources, capacities, and wants, our people are almost strangers to the trade and commerce of Central and South America; indeed, it may be said to be almost an unknown country to the vast majority of the sturdy, energetic, and progressive people of North America.

It is estimated that in the last fifty years more than ten millions of immigrants have landed on the shores of North America. They have spread over our vast and fertile fields and into our manufactories and workshops, and added to the products of labor to such an enormous extent that we may be said to be the producers of the food and clothing and manufactures and machinery of the world; and one of the greatest problems, upon the successful solution of which depends our national prosperity, is that of the movement and distribution of the surplus products of our labor. In looking for markets for the surplus product of our nation's labor our eyes naturally turn to the countries which border on our great internal sea, the Gulf of Mexico; and yet when we examine the statistics of the commerce of our immediate neighbors whose ports lie at our very doors, we find the field occupied by British, French, and German vessels; and travelers in Central and South America tell us it is rare to find the flag of the Stars and Stripes floating at the mast-head of any maritime vessel on the Atlantic or Pacific shores of South America.

Maj. Frederick Hilders (to whom I am largely indebted for information on South American trade) in his learned essay advocating the construction of the "Three Americas Railway," quoting from an English paper, speaking of the trade of Central and South America, and how and where it goes, says:

> A great revival in the trade of Mexico and Central and South America is confidently anticipated. British merchants and manufacturers will do well to make the most of the opportunity before their French, Belgian, and German rivals shall have taken the lead in the supply of those markets.

America and American merchants and manufacturers are not even mentioned as a possible competitor for this vast trade, which lies at our very doors, easily approached over the most splendid sheet of water that dots the globe.

> On the continent south of the United States are fifteen Spanish-American republics, the Portuguese-American Empire of Brazil, and four European colonies.
> They have a total population of 40,000,000 consumers, an area of about 8,000,000 square miles, or more than double that of the United States.
>
> In climate, resources, products, supply, and demand they are the reverse and complement of the United States. Commercial exchanges with such countries are, therefore, in accordance with sound laws of trade and political economy.
> They are exceedingly deficient in manufactures.
>
> They need our railway iron and supplies, farming implements, cotton and woolen goods, boots and shoes, sewing-machines, telegraph and telephone supplies, clocks and watches, notions, and a thousand and one products of our invention and skill.
> We need their coffee and sugar, tropical fruits, hard-woods, fiber-plants, and other raw materials.
> In brief, these countries represent twenty American Indias, whose unsupplied and inviting trade fields we will find most profitable to occupy with our surplus energy, skill, products, and manufactures. At present, however, our share of that trade is disgracefully small. Their foreign commerce, exports and imports of merchandise combined, is in value as follows:

The Republic of Mexico	$55,000,000
The five Central American republics	24,428,000
The nine South American republics	348,646,000
The four European colonies	31,950,000
The Empire of Brazil	215,061,000
Total	675,085,000

> Of this total trade the United States controls but $126,822,000, or less than one-fifth part, the lion's share being monopolized by Great Britain, France, and other European powers.
> Of the total annual imports of these twenty countries, which amount to $303,812,000 in value, we supply but one-seventh part.
> But the facts are still more disgraceful when we confine the statistics to the fifteen sister republics.
> Their total annual foreign commerce, exports and imports combined, is as follows:

The Republic of Mexico	$55,000,000
The five Central American republics	24,428,000
The nine South American republics	348,646,000
Total of fifteen republics	428,074,000

> Of this total trade we control but $63,636,000, or less than one-sixth part.

This great trade is within our grasp if we will by intelligent action through this conference seize it. The great ports of the Gulf of Mexico are the entrepôts, marked out by nature, into which should flow and from which should go the trade and traffic of our own immediate southern neighbors on the Gulf. Shall we sit supinely by, as we have done in the past, and see this vast empire of commerce snatched from our hand by nations separated by thousands of miles of ocean from it? The laws of supply and demand and the necessity of opening channels of commerce between nations is the same to-day as when Adam Smith in his Treatise on the Wealth of Nations, more than a century ago, said:

> According to the natural course of things, the greater part of the capital of any growing country is first directed to agriculture, afterward to manufactures, and last of all to foreign commerce.

And again:

> When the products of any particular branch of industry exceeds what the demands of the country require, the surplus must be sent abroad and exchanged for something for which there is a demand at home. Without such exportation a part of the productive labor of the country must cease and the value of the annual product diminish.

Every market must be availed of; and that which is ours by the natural laws of trade must not longer be yielded to foreign nations, if we would prevent the calamity of having an overplus of production for which we can find no market, and which, without a market, ceases to be worth producing.

Major Hilders, in his admirable treatise, speaking of the importance of this trade with South America, says:

> The geographical position of the United States and the currents of the ocean which flow from the mouth of the Amazon to our shores will insure to American merchants the greater portion of that immense commerce, the magnitude of which can scarcely be estimated, when all that vast region of the interior of South America shall take the important place in the commercial brotherhood of the world for which nature has so bountifully prepared them.

Mr. Nimmo, the former Chief of the Bureau of Statistics at Washington, in a pamphlet published some years since, entitled "The Proposed Interoceanic Canal in its Commercial Aspects," tells us—

> That we have but 24 vessels in the Chilian trade, against 372 going between Chilian and European ports. Not one of our 24 is a steam-going vessel, while among the others, those under European flags, are many and magnificent ocean steamers.

What is here said of Chili is true of every Spanish-American port.

This vast region of South America is a country teeming with fertility, rich in tropical products, needing only that the genius and spirit of the sturdy Anglo-Saxon of North America shall be brought to bear upon its vast resources in order to make that country, barren as a desert, blossom like the rose. It is for this reason that we desire conference with these people, that we may be brought into commercial relation with them, that we may improve the national position we hold towards them.

The genius of our distinguished countryman, the late James B. Eads, proposed by his ship-railway across the Isthmus of Tehuantepec, to connect the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans, which would be practically to extend the mouth of the Mississippi to the Pacific Ocean, and thus realize the dream of Sir Walter Raleigh expressed to his royal mistress, Queen Elizabeth, more than three hundred years ago, "that the genius that should solve this problem will have opened the gateway to the commerce of the world."

Mr. Chairman, fortunately there can be no drawing of political lines on this bill, as both of the great political parties are committed by their platforms adopted in their respective national conventions at Chicago.

REPUBLICAN NATIONAL PLATFORM OF 1884.

> The Republican party favors a policy which shall keep us from entangling alliances with foreign nations, and which shall give the right to expect that foreign nations shall refrain from meddling in American affairs, the policy which seeks peace and trade with all powers, but especially with those of the western hemisphere

DEMOCRATIC NATIONAL PLATFORM OF 1884.

> We favor an American continental policy based upon more intimate commercial and political relations with the fifteen sister republics of North, Central, and South America, but entangling alliances with none.

Mr. Chairman, this proposed conference of the governments embraced in North and Central and South America has one other object, suggested by the enlarged philanthropy of the age in which we live, which is to submit the disputes that may arise between any of these American Governments to arbitration before resorting to the arbitrament of the sword. The Committee on Foreign Affairs had the pleasure of listening to the views of the venerable David Dudley Field, the Nestor of the American bar, who in a few simple, terse, strong, Anglo-Saxon sentences, presented this question forcibly to the consideration of the committee.

It would be a beautiful exhibition of national magnanimity for the strongest and most powerful nation on the globe to come to the front and propose to the other nations of the three Americas and of the world to submit all disputes and differences between nations to the arbitration of friendly powers. The present bill under discussion refers, of course, in this regard only to American nations. It is but to apply to men in their collective and national capacity the principle and essence of the message of the divine Messiah, "Peace on earth and good-will toward men." It is not going too far, Mr. Chairman, to express the hope that this measure, thus sanctioned and enforced by the representatives of the strongest people on the earth, will tend at once to the reduction of the vast and unwieldy standing armies of Europe, thus insuring the peace of the world, and will hasten the time when the hoarse roar of artillery and the sharp rattle of small-arms will be hushed, and the small, still voice of Peace be heard to swell its pæons of victory over the nations of the earth.

One word, Mr. Chairman, as to the time when the President of the United States, in the discretion invested in him by this bill, should invite this conference to meet. It will no doubt occur in the year 1889, the centennial year of the adoption of the Constitution of the United States, the parent Republic of the Americas It has been proposed to mark the lapse of the first century of our existence under our present Constitution by a grand assemblage of all the nations of America at the capital of the parent Republic, to express our fealty to the great principles embodied in this Constitution and copied into the constitutions of government adopted by the Central and South American republics. Would not this be the most fitting occasion for the assemblage by the President of the United States of the conference for which this bill provides?

All the nations of the Americas will have assembled to bow in admiration at the shrine of Liberty and Freedom, consecrated and secured by this Constitution, a constitution imitated in its essential features by all the Central and South American republics, and of which the greatest of English lawyers and England's premiers, the "old man eloquent," the octogenarian of the English Parliament, William E. Gladstone, said in his memorable speech:

The American Constitution is, so far as I can see, the most wonderful work ever struck off at a given time by the brain and purpose of man.

Mr. McCREARY. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND].

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, I wish briefly to call attention to a single aspect of this proposed conference, its relation to a common coinage between the United States and the people with whom we propose to hold this conference. We find that the Argentine Republic has the same standard of gold and silver that we have; Chili has the double standard; Cuba, the double standard; Peru also has the double standard, but her unit of value is silver; Mexico has the single silver standard; Bolivia, the double standard. Instead of sending our agents to European countries, as we have heretofore done, for the purpose of bringing about an agreement as to a monetary standard, a unit of value for Europe and America, in which efforts we have always met with a discourteous discussion of the question and have found our offers repelled, let us go to Central and South America and present in this conference the proposition for a uniform coinage of both gold and silver; and then our Government will do the coinage for this whole continent.

Even to-day the coins which by our law we discard—the subsidiary coins which do not circulate here on account of having been mutilated or punched—find their way into South and Central America and are now circulating there.

American coin has always been welcomed in these countries. They have always been ready to enter into any agreement with us for the purpose of establishing uniform coinage for all concerned.

Now, I can not on this occasion, Mr. Chairman, yield the floor without expressing my concurrence with my friend from New Jersey [Mr. PHELPS], who has presented the Monroe doctrine as involved in this joint resolution and as it will be in the result of this conference; that arbitration of the great principle and example to be set and enforced, so far as our neighbors are concerned on this continent, is that it shall be compelled by us to be observed in reference to them. When Great Britain had a conference some years ago in regard to this question and Venezuela agreed to arbitrate, just so soon as the Tory government came into power they refused to arbitrate and undertook by force of arms to refuse redress.

Mr. McCREARY. I move that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

The CHAIRMAN. The question will first be taken in gross upon the pending amendments reported by the committee.

There was no objection, and the amendments reported by the committee were agreed to.

Mr. DINGLEY. I desire to offer an amendment which I will send up to the Clerk's desk to be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "intercourse," in the twelfth line, insert "and means of direct communication."

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that there is no one thing more important to be taken into consideration by the proposed conference than that of my proposition; that is, the means of direct communication with these southern republics, and I have no doubt my amendment will meet with the concurrence of my friend from Kentucky.

Mr. McCREARY. I do not object to the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. DINGLEY'S amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McCREARY moved that the bill as amended be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BELMONT. I move that the committee rise.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker pro tempore having resumed the chair, Mr. HATCH reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had, according to order, had under consideration the special order, and had directed him to report a bill and joint resolution to the House, with amendments thereto.

PARIS INTERNATIONAL EXPOSITION.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union have reported back with amendments the joint resolution (H. Res. 83) accepting the invitation of the French Republic to take part in an international exposition to be held in Paris in 1889, and the question recurs on the amendments of the committee.

Mr. BELMONT. I move the previous question on the amendments and upon the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The previous question was ordered, and under the operation thereof the amendments were agreed to, and the joint resolution as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BELMONT moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ARBITRATION.

The next business reported from the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union was the bill (H. R. 1473) authorizing the President of the United States to arrange a conference for the purpose of promoting arbitration and encouraging reciprocal commercial relations between the United States of America and the Republics of Mexico, Central and South America, and the Empire of Brazil; which was read, together with the amendments of the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. McCREARY. I move the previous question on the amendments, and on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The previous question was ordered, and under the operation thereof the amendments were agreed to, and the bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. McCREARY moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

GENERAL PAEZ.

Mr. BELMONT. I am instructed by the Committee on Foreign Affairs to report back the resolution, referred to that committee on motion of the gentlemen from Illinois [Mr. BAKER], on the 27th of February, and to move its adoption with an amendment.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Whereas a commission of distinguished persons appointed by the Government of Venezuela has arrived in New York for the purpose of conveying the mortal remains of General José Antonio Paez to Venezuela, with a view to their interment in the National Pantheon at Caracas; and

Whereas General Paez (who died in New York in 1873) bore a very eminent historical part in the great and protracted struggle for South American independence, and was the first President of the Republic of Venezuela: Therefore,

Be it resolved by the House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (the Senate concurring), That, as a proper and graceful act of national courtesy in such case, the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized and directed to designate a national vessel of war to convey the mortal remains of General Paez, together with the commission aforesaid, from New York to the port of La Guayra, Venezuela.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Provided, It shall first be ascertained that such action will be agreeable to the Government of Venezuela.

The amendment was agreed to; and the concurrent resolution as amended was then adopted.

Mr. BELMONT moved to reconsider the vote by which the concurrent resolution as amended was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PRINTING THE TARIFF BILL.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, I want to renew the request I made this morning, that 3,000 copies of the bill presented in the Committee on Ways and Means to-day may be printed for the use of the House.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Will the gentleman not modify his motion so that it shall provide that each member's quota may be distributed to him in the usual manner, through the document-room?

Mr. MILLS. They are printed by the House and for the use of the House, and members will have no difficulty in getting them.

Mr. WILKINS. I would suggest that you make the number five or six thousand.

Mr. MILLS. Three thousand is enough.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

TIME AND PAY OF GOVERNMENT EMPLOYÉS.

Mr. BRUMM, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 7963) to regulate the time and pay of Government employés; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Labor, and ordered to be printed.

LOAN OF TENTS, TENNESSEE.

Mr. WASHINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to offer a joint resolution for present consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The joint resolution will be read, subject to objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it resolved, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to lend to the State of Tennessee five hundred army tents for use at the interstate competitive drill and military encampment at West Side Park, Nashville, Tenn., May 21 to 26, 1888: Provided, The State of Tennessee shall execute a bond for the safe-keeping and return of the same: And provided, That the War Department shall be at no expense for the transportation, delivery, and return of said tents.

There being no objection, the joint resolution (H. Res. 123) was read a first and second time, and ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WASHINGTON moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CONFERENCE COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC-BUILDING BILLS.

Mr. DIBBLE. Mr. Speaker, Senate bills 182 and 154 have been returned from the Senate with non-concurrence in certain amendments of the House of Representatives, and requests for conferences. I move, Mr. Speaker, that the House insist upon its amendments and agree to the conferences asked for.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore announced the appointment of Mr. DIBBLE, Mr. MCSHANE, and Mr. KENNEDY as conferees on the part of the House on the bill (S. 182) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Omaha, Nebr.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also announced the appointment of Mr. DIBBLE, Mr. NEWTON, and Mr. POST as conferees on the part of the House on the bill (S. 154) for the erection of a public building at Milwaukee, Wis.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had disagreed to the amendment of the House to the resolution of the Senate for printing additional copies of Executive Document No. 51, first session Forty-ninth Congress; asked a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and had appointed as conferees on the part of the Senate Mr. MANDERSON, Mr. HAWLEY, and Mr. GORMAN.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. LIND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent——

Mr. BLAND. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Minnesota has been recognized.

Mr. BLAND. I believe my motion is privileged?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is, if the gentleman insists upon it.

Mr. BLAND. I do insist upon it.

The question was taken on the motion of Mr. BLAND, and there were, on a division—ayes 49, noes 39.

So the motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PRIVATE BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS INTRODUCED AND REFERRED.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, March 2, 1888.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by Rev. WILLIAM BRUSH, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

DESTRUCTION OF UNITED STATES BONDS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, with a letter from the Treasurer of the United States, tables showing the probable losses by destruction of United States bonds; which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and ordered to be printed.

ALLEGED OBSTRUCTION OF WABASH RIVER.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the House, a letter from the Chief of Engineers, with inclosures, relative to the alleged obstruction of the Wabash River at Mount Carmel, Ill., by the construction of a railroad bridge by the Louisville, Evansville and St. Louis Railroad Company; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

REPORT ON IRON ORES, LOUISIANA AND TEXAS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the House, a letter from the Director of the Geological Survey in regard to the delay in the preparation of the report of Professor Lawrence Johnson on the iron ores of Northern Louisiana and Eastern Texas; which was referred to the Committee on Printing.

REFERENCE OF SENATE BILLS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House Senate bills of the following titles; which were severally read twice, and referred as follows, namely:

A bill (S. 1514) to establish a national art association—to the Committee on the Library; and

A bill (S. 1095) to provide for the compulsory education of Indian children—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House the Senate concurrent resolution providing for the printing of Executive Document No. 51, first session Forty-ninth Congress, on the subject of cattle and dairy farming, with House amendment disagreed to by the Senate.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I move that the House insist upon its amendment and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore announced as conferees on the part of the House Mr. RICHARDSON, Mr. GIBSON, and Mr. HIESTAND.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. PLUMB, until Monday next, on account of sickness.

To Mr. BRUMM, indefinitely, on account of the death of a relative.

TARIFF ON WINDOW-GLASS.

Mr. MCKINLEY. I desire to present a petition for reference to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ask that it may be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. MILLS. What is the memorial about?

Mr. MCKINLEY. It is very brief; it simply gives some reasons why there should be no reduction as proposed by the bill of the gentleman from Texas.

There being no objection, the petition was referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD. It is as follows:

To the Representative in Congress of the United States representing the Eighteenth Congressional district from the State of Ohio:

We, the undersigned citizens, most respectfully petition you to enter this, our protest, against the proposed reduction of the tariff on window-glass, and request that you vote against any reduction of the tariff on the same, but use every effort to have the rates of 1882 restored, for the following reasons, namely:

First. The tariff was reduced in 1883.

Second. Since said reduction, the importation of window-glass has increased to such an extent that over one-fourth of the window-glass consumed in this country is imported, and the revenue has increased over $1,000,000, in consequence of which the earnings of the workingmen have been materially reduced.

BUSINESS OF JUDICIARY COMMITTEE.

Mr. CULBERSON. I ask unanimous consent that the order which I send to the desk may be made by the House.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Saturday, the 17th day of March, and Saturday, the 7th day of April, and Wednesday, the 9th day of May, immediately after the morning hour for the consideration of bills called up by committees, be set apart for bills reported from the Committee on the Judiciary in such order as may be designated by the committee; this order not to interfere with appropriation and revenue bills.

Mr. MILLS. I have no objection to that resolution if it is agreed to without any amendment being offered.

Mr. WILKINS. Does that resolution exclude the second morning hour?

Mr. CULBERSON. It does not.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Is the proposition to increase judicial salaries excluded from this order?

Mr. CULBERSON. The bill to which the gentleman refers is not on the Calendar, and the committee do not propose to take it up.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Then I do not object.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I do not like to object, but I think that proposition should go to the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The resolution is referred to the Committee on Rules.

EMORY R. SEWARD.

Mr. BELDEN. I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole House from the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7319) for the relief of Emory R. Seward, and that the same be now put upon its passage.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to pay to Emory R. Seward, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $8,174.79, for balance due said Seward for work done in removing rock at the entrance of New Rochelle Harbor, State of New York.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. MCMILLIN. Let the report be read, subject to objection.

The report (by Mr. KERR) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7319) for the relief of Emory R. Seward, submit the following report:

We find from a statement made by General J. C. Duane, Chief of Engineers, United States Army, that the sum of $8,174.79 is actually due said Emory R. Seward for work done under contract with the United States for removing rock at the entrance of New Rochelle Harbor, State of New York.

That the money has been appropriated to pay for the same, and that nothing has been paid said Seward, the contractor, for such work, and payment can not be made without authority of law, owing to a technical question of authority under the contract.

Your committee therefore report back the bill H. R. 7319 and recommend its passage, and in support of the recommendation the letter of the Chief of Engineers is herewith appended:

"OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF ENGINEERS, UNITED STATES ARMY,
"Washington, D. C., February 14, 1888.

"SIR: Referring to your letter of January —, 1888, received at this office February 1, 1888, relative to the application of Emory R. Seward, of Albany, N. Y., for payment for work executed at New Rochelle, N. Y., I have the honor to inclose herewith a copy of report from Lieut. Col. D. C. Houston, Corps of Engineers, in reference thereto.

"It is understood that, the contract being incomplete, no payment can be authorized by this office; but under the circumstances payments can justly be granted by Congress. Had the contract been completed, $9,000 would have been paid. The removal of loose rock left by the contractor cost the sum of $200.21, and the estimated cost of removing the balance of the rock at the contract price is $625; and therefore in an equitable settlement the total sum of $825.21 should be deducted from the $9,000, the total amount of the contract, leaving the sum of $8,174.79 as the amount which could be properly allowed.

"Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

"J. C. DUANE,
"Brigadier-General, Chief of Engineers.

"Hon. J. J. BELDEN, M. C.,
"United States House of Representatives, Washington, D. C."

Mr. MCMILLIN. The report is not very explicit as to why the money has not been paid. There is a recital in the bill that the money had been appropriated heretofore; but why it was not paid when appropriated, and why it was covered back into the Treasury, as to that the report is not very explicit. I would like to hear some statement in explanation.

Mr. KERR. The reason why the money was not paid before was because the Government held that this was an entire contract, and because there was a little deficiency they would not pay any money until the contract was completed. The officers of the Government say that if the contract had been completed $9,000 would have been paid. They recommend the passage of the bill as now drawn.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Is it a fact that the contractor failed to complete the work according to contract? If so, where does the responsibility of the Government attach?

Mr. KERR. The Engineer Department found that the contract was not entirely completed, and they would not authorize the payment because they held it was an entire contract.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Was it demonstrated that the contract had not been completed? And what was the cost of completing the contract?

Mr. KERR. It is estimated that $825 should be deducted from the $9,000, the total amount of the contract.

Mr. BELDEN. When the engineers took the second level they found the work would cost twice as much as had been contracted for. And as it was not the contractors' fault, they recommended that it should be settled for the lump sum of $9,000.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Is the work in its present condition satisfactory to the Government?

Mr. BELDEN. It is.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MCMILLIN. I do not object.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BELDEN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JOHN C. ADAMS, ADMINISTRATOR.

Mr. LAFFOON. I ask unanimous consent to call up for consideration at this time from the Private Calendar the bill (H. R. 3617) for the relief of John C. Adams, administrator of Joseph Adams, deceased.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to John C. Adams, administrator of the estate of Joseph Adams, deceased, the sum of $8,747, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for stores and supplies taken by and furnished to the United States during the late rebellion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. MCMILLIN. Let the report be read.

The report (by Mr. STONE, of Kentucky) was read, as follows:

The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3617) for the relief of John C. Adams, administrator of Joseph Adams, deceased, report as follows:

Joseph Adams in his lifetime was a resident and citizen of the city of Henderson, Henderson County, in the State of Kentucky.

The committee find that during the late war he was a large land-owner in his county and was possessed of large stores of corn, hay, oats, meat, wood, etc.

That he furnished the United States troops under the command of Generals John W. Foster and James M. Shackelford during said period with supplies for the use of the army, as set forth in his itemized account verified by him prior to his death; a copy is hereto attached and made part of this report.

There is ample evidence as to Mr. Adams's loyalty, liberality, and honesty by affidavits and statements from business acquaintances and county officials, properly certified to.

Generals Foster and Shackelford, who were in command of the forces at the time and place, have been before the Committee on War Claims in person and their written statements furnished, which are also appended and made part of this report.

The committee, after due consideration of all the facts set forth, are of opinion that as an act of justice the heirs of said Joseph Adams should be reimbursed to the full amount set forth in the bill, and accordingly recommend its passage.

EVANSVILLE, IND., February 6, 1886.

DEAR SIR: I have been requested by the administrator of the estate of Joseph Adams, of the city of Henderson, Ky., to write you what I may know of the correctness and justice of the claim which the decedent had against the Government of the United States, and which is now being presented by his personal representative.

In compliance with the request, I make the following statement of the facts connected with the matter:

For several consecutive months during the progress of the war I was in command of a district embracing a part of Southwestern Kentucky, having my headquarters at the city of Henderson.

Col. John W. Foster and his command were stationed in the city at the same time.

Mr. Joseph Adams, the decedent, who resided at Henderson, owned at that time a large farm in the immediate vicinity of our camps. On the farm was a large amount of corn and other provender, which our commands needed and had to have provided for them, and, in pursuance of the orders which were issued by Colonel Foster and myself, large quantities of the corn and other supplies were taken from Mr. Adams's farm, the whole of which was appropriated to the use of the Government without any payment being made to the owner therefor.

I was well acquainted with Mr. Adams, having known him for a number of years before the war, and I know that he was a loyal citizen; in fact, such was the character of his loyalty, and such his desire for the success of the Union armies, that he, being at that time a gentleman of large fortune and without an apprehension that the time would come when he would need the money which he was entitled to receive from the Government for the value of his property which he had caused to be taken from his farm, he neither asked for nor were there any vouchers given him on account thereof.

After the close of the war, however, and after the expiration of the time fixed by the law of Congress for the payment of such claims, Mr. Adams met with financial disasters, which caused him to lose the whole of his fortune. His health also broke down and he became in a manner blind, and then it was that he for the first time made a move for the payment of the debt by petitioning to Congress to pass a bill for the payment of the same.

Such are the facts connected with the matter, as I recollect them.

The claim is a just one, and in my opinion it ought to be paid.

Very respectfully, yours,

JAMES M. SHACKELFORD.

Hon. POLK LAFFOON, Washington, D. C.

In the matter of the claim of John C. Adams, administrator of the estate of Joseph Adams, deceased. Before the Committee on War Claims.

STATEMENT OF JOHN W. FOSTER.

During the war of the rebellion I was in command for some time of several regiments or detachments of troops of the Union Army at and in the vicinity of Henderson, Ky.

Most of these troops were cavalry or mounted infantry. During a part of this time I reported to General James M. Shackelford, as commanding officer, and a part of this time to General J. T. Boyle, at Louisville. These troops were constantly engaged in expeditions against the marauding bands of Confederate troops, or in efforts to prevent the recruiting in that vicinity for the Confederate army, and in their marches they were seldom able to carry with them their forage or a large commissary supply, and in great measure lived upon the country.

Mr. Joseph Adams was a large farmer and land owner in Henderson County, Kentucky, and I know that the Union troops named took from him, for their subsistence, a large amount of forage and supplies during the time stated, and I have been informed and believe that he did not at the time require any vouchers for the same, and was not paid therefor.

He was then in affluent circumstances, and a strong Union man, personally known to me as loyal to the Government, and he did not choose to urge demand for payment.

In the latter years of his life financial and physical misfortunes overtook him, and upon the advice of General Shackelford, myself, and other friends, who were his neighbors, living on the opposite side of the Ohio River, at Evansville, Ind., he presented his petition to Congress for relief and payment for his claim.

The bill now pending before Congress I believe to be a just and equitable measure for that purpose.

February 12, 1886.

JOHN W. FOSTER.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. BURROWS. I inquire of the gentleman who calls up this bill whether this bill has ever been presented to any tribunal for adjustment.

Mr. LAFFOON. It was before the Quartermaster's Department.

Mr. BURROWS. Had the Quartermaster's Department jurisdiction of this claim?

Mr. LAFFOON. It was filed after the Bowman act was passed. It was filed too late for action under the Bowman act.

Mr. BURROWS. It was not filed in time?

Mr. LAFFOON. No, sir.

Mr. BURROWS. Then the claim is barred under existing law?

Mr. LAFFOON. I will make a brief statement in explanation of the claim. The late Joseph Adams left his family in poverty. When he was rich and the Government was poor, he furnished these supplies. The Government is now rich and he is poor, and we think he ought to be paid for them. If the gentleman has any further doubt, I would like to have read here a letter from the Union general who received the supplies.

Mr. BURROWS. Oh, no. The gentleman's statement is sufficient. What is the evidence, though, as to this man's loyalty?

Mr. LAFFOON. Oh, it is entirely indisputable.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. I will say to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] that it is the evidence of Union generals who ordered the property taken.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, while I have no disposition to resist the passage of this bill, I wish to say to the House that it involves a question that should be taken into consideration before the bill is passed, because it will be a precedent for the allowance of a great many other similar claims that may be presented hereafter. There can be no doubt as to this man's loyalty; there is no doubt that the Government got the quartermaster's and commissary's stores; but there is a question as to whether at the time these stores were delivered they were not delivered as a gratuity, and with no intention on the part of this claimant of charging the Government for them. That is the question that is involved. As I have said, I do not wish to resist the passage of the bill, but the House should understand before acting upon it the principle that is involved in the case.

A MEMBER. What is the amount involved?

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. About $8,000.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. LAFFOON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

EVENING SESSIONS FOR PENSION BILLS, ETC.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, I rise to submit a privileged report from the Committee on Rules, upon which, after it is read, I shall demand the previous question.

The report was read, as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, February 29, 1888.

Resolved, That, until further ordered, on each Friday at 5 o'clock p. m. the House shall take a recess until 7.30 p. m., and after the 15th day of April next until 8 p. m., at which evening sessions bills on the Private Calendar granting pensions, reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions and the Committee on Pensions, and bills on the Private Calendar reported from the Committee on the Judiciary, removing political disabilities, shall be considered; and no other business shall be transacted at such evening sessions; and the House shall adjourn on each of said evenings not later than 10.30 p. m.

Mr. RANDALL. I demand the previous question upon the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. Is not an amendment in order?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is not, pending the demand for the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. RANDALL moved to reconsider the vote by which the previous question was ordered; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I was on the floor for a parliamentary inquiry and was recognized before the gentleman from Pennsylvania was recognized to make that motion.

Mr. RANDALL. I object to debate until after my motion is disposed of. Then, under the rule, there will be fifteen minutes for debate on each side, if the gentleman from Indiana desires to debate the subject.

The motion of Mr. RANDALL to lay on the table the motion to reconsider the vote by which the previous question was ordered was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question now is on the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I do not want to debate this question.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman has a right to debate it for fifteen minutes.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. I do not want to debate it; I only want to offer an amendment to the resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. An amendment is not in order.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. I want unanimous consent to offer an amendment.

Mr. RANDALL. I object to amendments. They are not in order now.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. An amendment can be entertained only by unanimous consent.

Several MEMBERS. Regular order!

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. I will take my fifteen minutes, then. Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to the passage of this resolution, but I want the House to consent to an amendment providing that we shall also consider at these Friday evening meetings bills for the removal of charge for desertion. If we are to have special meetings here for the purpose of removing the political disabilities of men who fought against the Government, I think we should have power at the same meetings to remove charges of desertion against men who fought for the Government in cases where those charges can be shown to be wrong. That is the only amendment I propose, and I ask unanimous consent that it be inserted in the resolution. I now ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] if he objects to that amendment?

Mr. RANDALL. I will not object if the gentleman will introduce such a proposition and have it referred to the Committee on Rules, and, after conference just now with one or two members of that committee, I can say to the gentleman that I do not believe an unfavorable report will be made upon his proposition. On the contrary, I think an opportunity will be promptly given to the House to vote upon it.

Several MEMBERS. That is all right.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, my objection to that is that if the proposition goes to the Committee on Rules, and this order is passed in the mean time, it will be necessary to set apart a separate night for the other business.

Several MEMBERS. No.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. There are hundreds of men who are asking to have charges of desertion removed from their records in cases where the charge is a mere technicality, but those men can not get relief through the Department, and all I ask is to put them on an equal footing with the men who voluntarily fought against the Government.

Mr. BLAND. The effect of the amendment would be to put deserters upon an equal footing as to pensions with men who fought for the Government and never did desert.

Mr. TAULBEE. Mr. Speaker, I would cheerfully support the proposition of the gentleman from Indiana as an independent one, but I shall have to object to it as an amendment lest this resolution should be embarrassed by it.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say that the proposition of the gentleman from Indiana is one which should come from the Committee on Military Affairs.

This resolution was introduced on behalf of the Committee on Invalid Pensions and the Committee on Pensions; and the subject which the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. JOHNSTON] has been discussing was not before us; and no desire for action in that direction was expressed. But if the gentleman will introduce and refer to the Committee on Rules a proposition embodying his views, I think I can say with full assurance that it will receive at the hands of the committee prompt and fair consideration.

Mr. HOOKER. To what the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] has said, I wish to add that there is now before the Committee on Military Affairs a proposition to enact a general law with reference to these questions of desertion.

Mr. RANDALL. Will the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER] be kind enough to repeat his statement, so that the gentleman from Indiana can hear it?

Mr. HOOKER. I say that the Committee on Military Affairs has been considering a proposition for a general statute providing for the restoration to the Army rolls of all those who have been improperly charged with desertion.

Mr. STEELE. My colleague on the committee [Mr. HOOKER] will allow me to state that the bill to which he refers was reported yesterday and is now on the Calendar. I have no doubt that unanimous consent will be asked to take that bill up; and I do not believe anybody will object to it. It will so extend the authority of the Secretary of War as to enable him, when proper evidence has been presented, to remove the charge of desertion in the case of every man who has not been guilty of willful desertion. So there is no necessity for special night sessions or special legislation for the relief of these men.

Mr. KELLEY. I will ask the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. STEELE] whether the bill to which he refers will cover cases of enlistment in the Navy by men who had been in the Army and by one cause or another were prevented from rejoining their companies or regiments?

Mr. STEELE. It will relieve all men who re-enlisted, provided they did not do so for the purpose of obtaining bounties to which they were not entitled. It is not the purpose of the committee to show any favors to "bounty-jumpers"——

Mr. KELLEY. Of course not.

Mr. STEELE. But where men who were prevented from joining their commands re-enlisted in a different branch of the service this bill will enable them to be relieved.

Mr. KELLEY. Then I understand the bill covers transfers from the Army to the Navy?

Mr. STEELE. All that would be necessary in such a case would be for the men to show that they were not intentional deserters.

Mr. PETERS. Will it apply to soldiers who, having been in the infantry corps, enlisted in a different arm of the service—the cavalry, for instance?

Mr. STEELE. It will cover such cases, except where the person has been intentionally guilty of desertion.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. In reply to the remark of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] that the proposition I have suggested should come from the Military Committee, I wish to say that early in this session I called upon the chairman of that committee in order to have a proposition of this kind adopted. I also asked permission of the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions. He referred me to the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, whom I saw, and he promised me to have this thing done. Inasmuch as the Military Committee appears not to have done it, I felt it my duty to call the attention of the House to the matter.

Mr. HOOKER. I beg to say that the Military Committee has given attention to the subject, and a bill relating to it was reported yesterday.

Mr. ENLOE. Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to this resolution and think it ought not to be adopted.

From the observation I have been able to make as to the action of the House at Friday night sessions, I believe that the public business at those sessions never commands the respect to which it is entitled—never enlists the attention of a quorum of the House. So far as I am concerned, while I do not expect to prevent the adoption of the resolution by making this declaration, I want to go on record as saying that I am opposed to the Friday night sessions.

The question being taken on the adoption of the resolution, it was adopted.

Mr. RANDALL moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

FIRST NATIONAL BANK OF PORTLAND, OREGON.

Mr. HERMANN. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 1761) for the relief of the First National Bank of Portland, Oregon, for money advanced the Oregon Iron Works, the contractor in building the United States revenue-cutter Thomas Corwin.

The bill was read, as follows:

Whereas in the year 1876 the United States entered into a contract with the Oregon Iron Works, a corporation under the laws of the State of Oregon, for the construction, at Albina, Oregon, by the said Oregon Iron Works, of the United States revenue-cutter called Thomas Corwin, for the consideration of $92,000, to be paid by the United States; and

Whereas the First National Bank of Portland, Oregon, advanced money for the construction of said revenue-cutter to the said Oregon Iron Works, and held as security for such advances a hypothecation of the payment to be made by the United States to the said contractor; and

Whereas before the completion of the said cutter the said Oregon Iron Works failed and work on said cutter was suspended; and

Whereas at the time of such failure the said First National Bank of Portland, Oregon, had advanced upon the security of the hypothecation of the last payment to be made to said contractor the sum of $18,399.96, which money went with the construction of said vessel in the form of labor and material; and

Whereas upon the failure of the said Oregon Iron Works the United States took possession of said vessel, and the vessel proceeded to San Francisco, where she was completed by the United States at a cost much less than the payment still due to the contractor for her construction; and

Whereas such payment, after deducting the cost to the United States of completing the said revenue-cutter, was covered into the Treasury of the United States: Therefore,

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to the First National Bank of Portland, Oregon, the sum of $18,399.96, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, said sum being the amount advanced by said bank to the Oregon Iron Works, the contractor with the United States for the construction of the United States revenue-cutter called Thomas Corwin, built at Albina, Oregon, during the years 1875 and 1876, upon the security of the hypothecation of the payments to be made by the United States to said contractor and used in the construction of said revenue-cutter, and which sum has not been paid to said bank.

The amendments reported by the committee were read, as follows:

Strike out all of the preamble.

In lines 5 and 6 of the bill strike out "$18,399.96" and insert "$8,249.23."

In line 9 strike out the words "said sum being the amount" and insert "for moneys."

Mr. HOLMAN. Let the report be read.

Mr. HERMANN. With the consent of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] I will make a brief statement, as the report is very lengthy. Congress made an appropriation of $92,000 for the construction of a revenue-cutter, to be called the Thomas Corwin. The contract for the construction of this vessel was let to the Oregon Iron Works, as set forth in the report, for $92,000, which was to be paid in five installments of $18,400 each. Four installments, aggregating $73,600, were paid. In the mean time the First National Bank of Portland, Oregon, had advanced to the Oregon Iron Works something like $25,000 in all, to assist in the purchase of material and the construction of the vessel. The Iron Works gave the bank a lien for these advances, hypothecating to the bank as collateral security its claims upon the United States for money due or to become due upon the contract. Before the fifth installment became due the Iron Works became insolvent and went into bankruptcy, so that there was not a dollar left on their part to compensate the bank for its unpaid advances, which up to that time amounted to $18,399.96.

The Government then took possession of the vessel, took her to San Francisco, and completed her at a cost of about $10,150, leaving unexpended $8,249.23 of the maximum contract price; and this amount was covered into the Treasury, leaving unpaid the sum of about $18,000, and due to the National Bank. Now the bank comes to Congress and asks for relief to the extent of the unpaid amount it advanced upon the construction of the vessel—money which went into the vessel in the form of labor and material. But the committee of the House has concurred in a previous report of a Senate committee in the view that only so much of the remainder of the contract price as was invested in the construction of the vessel after the payment of the four installments should, in equity, be paid to the bank; and the amendments reported by the committee are designed to carry out this view.

Mr. HOLMAN. That is right.

Mr. WILKINS. I did not quite understand the remark of the gentleman from Oregon in regard to the Iron Works giving the bank a lien.

Mr. HERMANN. It was a lien upon the amount of the claims due or to become due by the United States on account of the contract.

Mr. HOLMAN. I suggest that the equity here is manifest; but it should be provided that this payment is in full.

Mr. HERMANN. It is in full.

The amendments reported by the committee were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HERMANN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Y. G. RUST.

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. I move by unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 5091) for the relief of Y. G. Rust, and it be taken up for consideration.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $409.38 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the relief of Y. G. Rust, postmaster at Albany, Ga., that amount of postal funds having been stolen from the safe of said postmaster by burglars on the 21st day of March, 1887, and accounted for by said postmaster to the Post-Office Department.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

EQUALIZATION OF SALARIES.

Mr. BOOTHMAN. I ask, by unanimous consent, to call up for consideration the following resolution, reported by me from the Committee on Accounts.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Appropriations be, and it hereby is, requested to report in the forthcoming legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill an item appropriating the sum of $4,582 to be expended in equalizing the salaries of the following employés of the House, namely:

Five persons in attendance at the north door of the House.
Four persons in attendance at the east door of the House.
Three persons in attendance at the west door of the House.
Four persons in attendance at the east lobby door of the House.
Four persons in attendance at the west lobby door of the House.
One person in attendance at the seal-room of the House.
One person acting as captain of House pages.
One person in attendance at the ladies' reception-room of the House.
Seven persons in attendance at the north gallery doors of the House.
Three persons in attendance at the south gallery doors of the House.
Four persons in attendance at the west gallery doors of the House.
Six persons in attendance at the east gallery doors of the House.

In all, forty-three persons; and that such sum shall be expended so as to make the whole pay of said employés equal to $100 each per month for the time they are so employed.

Mr. RANDALL. I object to that, unless it is for reference.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Its consideration is asked for at the present time.

Mr. RANDALL. I object.

SOLOMON SPITZER.

Mr. BYNUM. Mr. Speaker, I objected the other day to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 2699) for the relief of the heirs of the late Solomon Spitzer, which was called up by the gentleman from New York [Mr. TIMOTHY J. CAMPBELL]. I wish now to withdraw my objection, and ask that it be now taken up for consideration.

Mr. TIMOTHY J. CAMPBELL. I move, Mr. Speaker, that the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 2699) for the relief of the heirs of the late Solomon Spitzer, and that it be put on its passage.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there be, and is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $12,500, to pay the heirs of Solomon Spitzer the claim of the said Spitzer for the unexpended increase in the work of weighing imports at the port of New York, under his contract with the Secretary of the Treasury, during the year 1879.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask for the reading of the report.

Mr. TIMOTHY J. CAMPBELL. The report was read the other day.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the gentleman will make a statement.

Mr. TIMOTHY J. CAMPBELL. It is a most just bill, and should be passed as soon as possible. It appears that Mr. Spitzer entered into a contract with the Treasury Department to do all the work of weighing imports at the port of New York for three years from February 1, 1878, at a compensation of $75,000 per annum. That contract also specified, in case the work was increased 10 per cent. by legislative action increasing the classes of weighable goods, the contractor should be entitled to compensation in proportion to the increase, less the 10 per cent. specified.

Now, as we all know, an unanticipated increase in the volume of importations took place in the latter part of the year 1879, and the quantity of weighable goods imported continued to increase to such an extent that Spitzer was no longer able to perform his contract, and it was terminated on the 1st of January, 1880.

He presented a claim to the Treasury Department for extra compensation on account of the unexpected increase, and it was referred to a committee of Treasury officers, appointed by the Secretary of the Treasury. They examined the matter carefully and reported that, under the terms of the contract, Spitzer was equitably entitled to additional compensation to the extent of $12,500, but there was no power vested in the Department to pay the same, and recommended legislative action. The Secretary concurred in that report.

When Mr. Spitzer applied for this $12,500 he was told there was no money in the Treasury to pay the account, and in order to do so it was necessary that Congress should pass an enabling act. Mr. Spitzer came to Washington in 1882 and the bill for his relief was introduced into Congress, but during its pendency he fell sick at Willard's Hotel and died.

The passage of this bill was recommended in the Forty-seventh Congress by Mr. Waldo Hutchins, of New York; in the Forty-eighth by Mr. TILLMAN, of South Carolina, and in the Forty-ninth by Mr. BUCHANAN, of New Jersey. It has been reported at this session by myself by the instruction of the Committee on Claims. The committee unanimously indorsed the report. This bill is in favor of the poor widow, who has been left with five children to care for, and I hope it will be passed. [Applause.]

There was no objection; and the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. TIMOTHY J. CAMPBELL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BUSINESS OF MILITARY COMMITTEE.

Mr. HOOKER. I ask, by unanimous consent, to submit the following resolution:

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That Tuesday, the 20th day of March, Thursday, the 29th day of March, and Thursday, the 26th day of April, 1888, immediately after the hour for the consideration of bills by committees, be set apart for the consideration of bills and measures reported from the Committee on Military Affairs in such order as may be designated by said committee, the order not to conflict with prior orders or revenue or general appropriation bills.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not object if that resolution is introduced for reference to the Committee on Rules.

Mr. HOOKER. I should like, of course, to have the resolution acted on at this time, but objection being made, I must submit to its reference to the Committee on Rules.

There was no objection; and the resolution was received and referred to the Committee on Rules.

VOLUNTEER SOLDIERS.

Mr. STEELE. I reported yesterday from the Committee on Military Affairs, as a substitute for sundry bills, a bill (H. R. 6106) for the relief of certain volunteer soldiers of the late war, which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed. It occurs to me the numbers and titles of the bills for which the substitute was reported should be given in the RECORD, the House having disposed of them by laying them upon the table. I have been asked by several members as to bills which they had introduced; and, by unanimous consent, I ask that the numbers and titles of the bills, which were not read at the Clerk's desk yesterday, be published in the RECORD.

There was no objection; and it was ordered accordingly.

The bill referred to was reported as a substitute for bills of the following numbers:

89, 106, 123, 146, 245, 318, 336, 371, 453, 465, 515, 568, 596, 617, 629, 638, 686, 687, 711, 730, 757, 761, 803, 837, 858, 859, 887, 896, 913, 949, 958, 959, 966, 967, 973, 980, 989, 1003, 1006, 1075, 1084, 1089, 1098, 1106, 1170, 1323, 1324, 136, 2027, 2049, 2062, 2130, 2199, 2206, 2306, 2312, 3165, 2339, 2353, 2356, 2436, 2419, 2485, 2486, 2492, 2487, 2500, 2512, 2516, 2581, 2582, 2680, 2698, 2722, 2744, 2785, 2792, 3144, 3149, 3159, 3204, 3346, 3139, 3162, 3212, 3213, 3214, 3217, 3818, 3832, 3966, 3968, 3969, 3970, 3971, 3519, 3448, 3449, 3451, 3486, 3501, 3514, 3526, 3542, 3545, 3546, 3552, 3555, 3558, 3562, 3598, 3602, 3707, 3787, 3795, 3817, 3821, 3882, 3915, 3917, 3920, 3973, 4022, 4030, 4064, 4071, 4094, 4096, 4111, 4131, 4143, 4206, 4211, 4212, 4213, 4229, 4224, 4250, 5368, 5442, 5478, 5513, 5519, 5526, 5572, 3607, 6332, 6027, 4476, 4569, 4570, 2096, 2866, 2868, 3000, 3005, 3119, 3120, 3128, 3131, 3178, 3450, 3513, 3563, 3605, 3614, 4503, 4509, 4513, 4515, 4537, 4549, 4561, 4587, 4588, 4625, 4636, 4637, 4641, 4644, 4650, 4674, 4682, 4708, 4822, 4840, 4858, 4901, 5081, 5087, 5085, 5102, 5103, 5110, 5161, 5219, 5258, 5277, 5289, 5291, 5292, 5302, 5326, 5358, 5360, 5369, 5384, 5393, 5439, 5440, 5450, 5489, 5568, 5578, 5745, 5749, 5800, 5838, 5839, 5868, 5908, 5909, 5915, 5923, 5940, 5967, 5977, 5978, 5979, 5989, 6010, 6028, 6029, 6031, 6034, 6041, 6060, 6074, 6077, 6090, 6200, 6276, 6283, 6305, 3501, 6323, 6325, 6349, 6376, 6381, 6401, 6417, 6484, 6488, 6528, 6537, 6590, 6600, 4749, 3876, 950, 6333, 6506, 6729, 6526, 6608, 6621, 6623, 6718, 6728, 6752, 6790, 6836, 6846, 6850, 6854, 6856, 6866, 6873, 6874, 6920, 6921, 6926, 6929, 6957, 6980, 6989, 7001, 7002, 7004, 7005, 7021, 7096, 7108, 7135, 7138, 7161, 7167, 7178, 7193, 7203, 7207, 7243, 7245, 7249, 7258, 7259, 7267, 7274, 7276, 7324, 7336, 7338, 3876, 7288, 7318, 7377, 7448, 7478, 3225, 3166, 4780, 4208, 5496, 4608, 3177, 3221, 3164, 467, 3530, 3600, 3619, 4237, 3058, 242, 877, 3229, 731, 728, 2272, 3203, 7479, 7480, 7481, 7489, 7515, 7535, 7537, 7551, 7560, 7561, 7606, 7607, 7617, 7631, 7661, 7664, 7697, 7703, 7716, 7796, 7855, 7879, 7893, 7894, 7896.

J. MILLER RAUB.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole House from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 2514) granting a pension to J. Miller Raub and put it upon its passage.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of J. Miller Raub, late of Company D, One hundred and twenty-second Regiment of Pennsylvania Volunteers.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Let the report be read.

The report (by Mr. CHIPMAN) was read, as follows:

J. Miller Raub was mustered into the service of the United States August 12, 1862, as captain of Company D, One hundred and twenty-second Pennsylvania Volunteers, and served until May 15, 1863, when he was discharged with his company, he having enlisted to serve nine months. April 12, 1883, he filed his application for a pension upon the ground of a hernia incurred at Cloud's Mills, Va., in August, 1862, by slipping and falling while moving on the double-quick in the line of his duty.

The claimant proves by those who knew him intimately that he was free from hernia at the time he entered the service.

Abraham Dennis swears that he was acquainted with claimant for five years before enlistment, and that he was free from rupture. In response to office letter he says that he had opportunity to know by going bathing with claimant.

Claimant in his own behalf swears that at the time he sustained the injury he was not aware of the nature of his injury until he went to the surgeon, and that no officer or comrade had personal knowledge of the injury except the surgeon.

John Hildebrand, a neighbor, knew claimant intimately for about five years before enlistment; knew him to be a man of sound bodily health, and free from rupture.

Daniel H. Heitshel, adjutant of claimant's regiment, swears that he was bunkmate of claimant during the nine months' service. Affiant did not see rupture, but knows that Captain Raub frequently complained of severe pain after the fall, attributing the same to rupture received at Cloud's Mills.

L. W. Krebs knew claimant for eighteen years, and from 1866 to 1878 lived near neighbor; saw him frequently, and knew him to be ruptured, and believes him to have been disabled one half.

Paul J. Hunsinger has known claimant since 1866, and has worked for him almost constantly since that date. While he worked for him, if claimant would lift anything heavy his rupture would come down; his truss would not hold it. Has seen him many times go and sit down or about half lie down, trying to work his rupture in until the sweat would break out on him. He seemed to be in great pain until he could work it in. This I have seen him do so often, and up to the present date almost, that it would be impossible to state how often.

D. V. W. Burg, assistant surgeon of claimant's regiment, swears that on or about August 30, 1862, while in line of duty at Cloud's Mills, Va., said claimant incurred an injury while in active service causing him to fall, with the result of producing an inguinal hernia of the left side. The hernia seemed to be of recent origin, which I saw. The above I knew from being present always with regiment.

Dr. H. D. Reutschler swears that he has known claimant since the spring of 1866, and has been his family physician since 1866 to 1880, and on several occasions was summoned in haste to see him when his hernia became strangulated. Also treated him for hemorrhoids, and that he has been one-half disabled for manual labor. This claim was rejected by the Pension Office for the want of a medical record while in the service.

From the testimony in the case the committee is of the opinion that the claimant was sound when he entered the service, that he became injured in the service as claimed, and that he has remained partially disabled until the filing of his claim.

The committee therefore report the bill back with the recommendation that it do pass.

There being no objection, the bill was considered, and ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CUTCHEON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table

The latter motion was agreed to.

ALFRED HEAD.

Mr. HEARD. I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 860) for the relief of Alfred Head, and put it upon its passage.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Alfred Head, or his legal representatives, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $200, being the amount of purchase-money paid by him for the west half of the southeast quarter and the east half of the southwest quarter of section 26, township 42, range 22 west, subject to entry at the land office at Fayette, Mo., and subsequently resold by the land office and repurchased by said Alfred Head.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was considered, and ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HEARD moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. LANHAM. I now demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is the call of committees for reports on private bills.

ABERDEEN, BISMARCK AND NORTHWESTERN RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. GIFFORD reported as a substitute for House bill No. 5046 a bill (H. R. 7964) granting to the Aberdeen, Bismarck and Northwestern Railway Company the right of way across a portion of the Sioux Indian reservation, in Dakota Territory; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

The bill H. R. 5046 was ordered to be laid upon the table.

P. E. PARKER.

Mr. SIMMONS, from the Committee on Claims, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 1032) for the relief of P. E. Parker; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ARTHUR C. TOMPKINS.

Mr. SIMMONS also, from the Committee on Claims, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 5310) for the relief of Arthur C. Tompkins, late postmaster at Hempstead, Tex.; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

CHARLES M. KENNERLY.

Mr. SIMMONS also, from the Committee on Claims, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 1050) for the relief of Charles M. Kennerly; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

GEORGE W. SAMPSON AND BENJAMIN HENRICKS.

Mr. KERR, from the Committee on Claims, reported back with amendments the bill (H. R. 4789) for the relief of George W. Sampson and Benjamin Henricks, of Austin, Tex.; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. KERR. I ask that the bill H. R. 2989, of the same title and identical in substance, be laid upon the table.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

ANDREW BURGESS AND OTHERS.

Mr. KERR also, from the Committee on Claims, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 4114) for the relief of Andrew Burgess, John Hall, and William T. Roundtree; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

JOHN W. WHITFIELD.

Mr. KERR also, from the Committee on Claims, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 4624) for the relief of the estate of John W. Whitfield; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ANNA W. OSBORNE.

Mr. KERR also, from the Committee on Claims, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 3181) for the relief of Anna W. Osborne; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ELY MOORE AND DANIEL WOODSON.

Mr. KERR also, from the Committee on Claims, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 2263) for the relief of the estate of Ely Moore and Daniel Woodson; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

J. A. M'CREARY.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 3612) for the relief of J. A. McCreary, late United States Navy; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

JOHN DE BREE, EXECUTOR.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky, also, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 7800) for the relief of John De Bree, executor of Margaret T. Higgins; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

SAMUEL A. B. WOODFORD.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky, also, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 2359) for the relief of Samuel A. B. Woodford; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

JOHN R. REYNOLDS.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky, also, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 6322) for the relief of John R. Reynolds; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

JAMES W. SEARS.

Mr. LAWLER, from the Committee on War Claims, reported with amendments the bill (H. R. 5794) for the relief of James W. Sears; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the amendments and accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

FEMALE NURSES.

Mr. THOMAS, of Wisconsin, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 7392) granting relief to the female nurses in the war of the rebellion; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

WELLS C. M'COOL.

Mr. THOMAS, of Wisconsin, also, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 3151) for the relief of Wells C. McCool; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

W. R. ALLBRIGHT.

Mr. BROWER, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 7861) for the relief of W. R. Allbright; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

JOHN S. BOSWELL.

Mr. BROWER also, from the Committee on War Claims, reported as a substitute for the bill H. R. 359 a bill (H. R. 7965) for the relief of John S. Boswell; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

The bill H. R. 359 was laid on the table.

ESTATE OF SYLVANUS SANDFORD.

Mr. HIESTAND, from the Committee on War Claims, reported as a substitute for the bill H. R. 5412 a bill (H. R. 7966) for the relief of Sylvanus Sandford; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

The bill H. R. 5412 was laid on the table.

PRESTON BECK, JR.

Mr. BIGGS, from the Select Committee on Indian Depredation Claims, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 4554) for the relief of Preston Beck, jr.; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The call of committees for reports is now completed.

RAILWAY MAIL SERVICE.

Mr. DOCKERY, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 4930) relating to the railway mail service; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

FRENCH SPOLIATION CLAIMS.

Mr. SAYERS. I ask unanimous consent that the letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings of fact and conclusions of law in the matter of the ship Joanna vs. United States, French spoliation claims, be printed.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

PRIVATE CALENDAR.

Mr. LANHAM. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House for the consideration of business on the Private Calendar.

The motion was agreedto.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House, Mr. HATCH in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole for the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar. The Clerk will report the unfinished business coming over from last Friday.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 2952) for the allowance of certain claims for stores and supplies taken and used by the United States Army as reported by the Court of Claims, under the provisions of the act of March 3, 1883, known as the "Bowman act."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the pending paragraph.

The Clerk read as follows:

To John R. McKinnie, administrator of David McKinnie, deceased, of Hardeman County, Tennessee, $1,142.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I think when the committee rose on last Friday there was no objection to this clause, and the Clerk had commenced to read the next claim.

Mr. LANHAM. I ask that the report of the findings of the Court of Claims be read with reference to this claim of McKinnie.

The Clerk read as follows:

Court of Claims. John R. McKinnie, administrator, etc., vs. The United States. Congressional case No. 364.

At a Court of Claims held in the city of Washington on the 17th day of January, 1887, the court filed the following findings of fact, to wit:

The claim in the above-entitled suit having been transmitted to this court by the Committee on War Claims, House of Representatives, on the 4th day of March, 1885, and the Attorney-General having appeared for the defendants, and the suit having been brought to a hearing on the 29th day of April, 1886, the court, upon the proofs and evidence, and after hearing Gilbert Moyers, esq., of counsel for the claimant, and Lewis Cochran, esq., of counsel for the defendants, finds the following facts:

David McKinnie, the intestate, was owner of the property taken. he resided 5 miles from Middleburgh, Hardeman County, Tennessee, and was a farmer; the property taken consisted of commissary supplies, which were not paid for because the Commissary-General was not satisfied as to the owner's loyalty. The larger part of the supplies were carried by the intestate to Middleburgh, Tenn., and delivered there to assistant quartermasters in charge. For some, receipts were given; some were taken by details of troops sent out to collect supplies, and of all a full itemized account was made by the intestate at the time, which account was subsequently presented to the Commissary-General. The officers to whom the supplies were delivered or by whom they were taken were Assistant Quartermaster Baldwin, Second New Jersey Cavalry; Lieut. William Newsom, regimental quartermaster Sixth Tennessee Cavalry; Capt. Gustavus Schurager, Iowa Cavalry, and Lieut. W. B. Perrott, assistant quartermaster Twelfth Michigan Volunteers. The supplies were taken at various times between November 17, 1862, and May 2, 1864, and consisted of 6,500 pounds pork, 11 barrels flour, 200 pounds lard, 1,600 pounds beef, 1,000 pounds ham, 500 pounds bacon, 350 pounds salt, 600 gallons honey, 500 pounds salted meat, the aggregate value of which was $1,142.

By the court.

A true transcript of record.

Test this 18th day of January, 1887.

[SEAL.] JOHN RANDOLPH.
Assistant Clerk Court of Claims.

Mr. LANHAM. I do not discover from the reading of the report that there was any finding by the Court of Claims that the claimant was loyal. The other reports that have preceded this have shown that that fact of loyalty was found by the court. There was a question originally as to the loyalty of this claimant, and the court failed to find that he was loyal. In view of that fact I move to strike out that paragraph of the bill relating to the claim of McKinnie.

Mr. RICHARDSON. In reply to the gentleman from Texas I desire to call his attention to section 4 of the Bowman act, under which this claim was considered by the Court of Claims. It is true, as the gentleman has stated, that the court has not set out as one of its findings the loyalty of the claimant. But if the gentleman will turn to section 4 of the Bowman act he will find the court is prohibited from entering upon consideration of the claim until the fact of loyalty is established. Section 4 of the Bowman act is as follows:

SEC. 4. In any case of a claim for supplies or stores taken by or furnished to any part of military or naval forces of the United States for their use during the late war for the suppression of the rebellion, the petition shall aver that the person who furnished such supplies or stores, or from whom such supplies or stores were taken, did not give any aid or comfort to said rebellion, but was throughout that war loyal to the Government of the United States, and the fact of such loyalty shall be a jurisdictional fact; and unless the said court shall, on a preliminary inquiry, find that the person who furnished such supplies or stores, or from whom the same were taken as aforesaid, was loyal to the Government of the United States throughout said war, the court shall not have jurisdiction of such cause, and the same shall, without further proceedings, be dismissed.

Now the question of loyalty is a jurisdictional question of law. It is not necessary for the Attorney-General of the United States to appear and file a plea of want of loyalty. The law itself files that plea; and the Court of Claims, until the fact of loyalty is fully established, declines to enter into the consideration of the merits of the claim.

Contrary to the general practice in courts there are two investigations by this court; first, as to the question of loyalty——

Mr. OATES. Is not the gentleman mistaken as to the question of loyalty being a jurisdictional fact? Does that cut any figure in the case at all, unless the act requiring the reference, or under which the reference was made, required proof of loyalty? Otherwise it cuts no figure whatever, as decided by the Supreme Court.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OATES] is correct, but there is no act referring this case to the Court of Claims. It is referred under the Bowman act, which provides that in all cases referred under it by a committee of Congress, the fact of loyalty must be first ascertained before the court can consider the claim. Therefore the question of loyalty is a jurisdictional question. The law itself makes it a jurisdictional question. Now, Mr. Chairman, as I was about to state when interrupted, the court first hears each claim upon the plea of loyalty; and unless by affirmative proof the claimant overcomes the difficulty in that respect and establishes his loyalty throughout the war—not from the time of taking the oath, as in the 4th of July cases, but throughout the war—the court decline to enter upon the consideration of the case under the Bowman act. Therefore, while the court have not set out in their report that they found affirmatively that this claimant was loyal, they could not, under the law, as an intelligent court, and would not, and, I undertake to say, did not enter upon the consideration of the case until the claimant was found to have been loyal.

When the question of loyalty is established to the satisfaction of the court, then the case is remanded to the rules, as it were, in chancery practice. The case is not proceeded with. The court does not go on to try the case upon its merits, but it remands it, just as a chancellor does when he remands a case for additional proof. It is sent back to the rules, to a separate docket, and then it is that the case is tried upon its merits. Proof is introduced; witnesses for the claimant are examined by his attorney and cross-examined by the United States Attorney-General; witnesses for the Government are introduced by the Attorney-General and cross-examined by the attorney for the claimant, and this second trial of the case is upon its merits. Now, sir, there is no case in this bill that has not undergone both these investigations; first a preliminary one to establish the loyalty, and then, that being affirmatively established, a second trial upon the merits of the case. I hope the gentleman will not insist upon his motion.

Mr. LANHAM. It seems from the reading of the report of the Court of Claims that the Commissary-General was not satisfied at the time as to the loyalty of this claimant, and there is an omission in the report of the Court of Claims to make any statement whatever with reference to the question of loyalty. In all the other cases that have preceded this one in the bill I believe the fact of loyalty has been affirmatively set forth by the court.

Mr. CATCHINGS. The gentleman is mistaken about that. There was a case the other day in which the same omission occurred, and attention was called to it by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS], but he finally conceded that it was not necessary that the fact of loyalty should be set out in the report, because it was a jurisdictional fact.

Mr. LANHAM. I had not noticed that, but in view of this case as it stands, I think that we ought to have some affirmative showing as to this claimant's loyalty.

Mr. HOLMAN. What is the gentleman's motion?

Mr. LANHAM. I move to strike out so much of the bill as refers to the claim of John R. McKinnie.

Mr. WARNER. Can the gentleman in charge of this case state whether it was referred to the Court of Claims by a committee of this House or by Congress?

Mr. RICHARDSON. It was referred by the Committee on War Claims.

Mr. WARNER. Then I apprehend that the case having been referred under the Bowman act, the question of loyalty is a jurisdictional question, because the court could not take jurisdiction of the case unless loyalty was established.

Mr. RICHARDSON. That is correct.

Mr. LANHAM. It is singular that the court should find the fact of loyalty in the other cases and should be silent as to this one.

Mr. WARNER. If the gentleman will permit me I think I can explain that. My understanding of the practice in the Court of Claims is this · When t he court finds for the claimant the attorney for the claimant prepares the finding of fact, and I have no doubt that many attorneys, in the abundance of their caution, have the court find the jurisdictional fact of loyalty, while other attorneys, knowing that it is a jurisdictional fact, do not insert it in the finding. The question of loyalty is a jurisdictional fact, and unless the loyalty of the claimant is established the court must dismiss the case.

Mr. RYAN. But is it not the practice of the court to find that fact affirmatively?

Mr. WARNER. I cannot answer the gentleman's question as to the general practice any further than I have stated. Unless the fact of loyalty is established the court can not take another step in the case. Therefore the fact of their proceeding further seems to show that the fact of loyalty must have been previously established. The presumption is that the Court of Claims have not violated the law that creates them and gives them power to hear these cases at all. The presumption is that they have acted in accordance with the law, and that, having found the jurisdictional fact of loyalty established, they then proceeded to pass upon the merits of the claim and to ascertain the amount, if anything, due to the claimant.

That seems to me to be reasonable and proper.

Mr. RYAN. But if it is the general practice of the court to find the fact of loyalty affirmatively, then the omission in this case is singular.

Mr. WARNER. In answer to the gentleman, let me say that it would be still more singular and strange if the judges of the Court of Claims, in violation of their sworn duty, should proceed to hear and determine a case before the establishment of a jurisdictional fact which the law says must be established before they shall proceed one step.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that the facts in this case have been brought out by what has been already said. The bill providing for this claim was introduced in the Forty-ninth Congress. The claim had been originally filed before the Quartermaster-General, and had been rejected because the Quartermaster-General, as he said, was unable to certify to the loyalty of the claimant. When the bill was introduced here it went to the Committee on War Claims, who, deciding that they wanted the facts judicially determined, referred this case, like many others, to the Court of Claims.

No man who reads the Bowman act can question the fact that the Court of Claims must be satisfied of the loyalty of the claimant before it proceeds to an investigation of the merits of the claim. The very fact that the court took jurisdiction and sent in here a favorable finding should be, it strikes me, sufficient evidence that the Court of Claims found that the claimant was loyal, and that the amount named in the findings was justly due.

Sir, even the Supreme Court of the United States, upon cases appealed to it, never goes behind the finding of the Court of Claims on a question of fact. Now, if the Supreme Court of the United States is willing to take the finding of the Court of Claims upon questions of fact without going back and investigating the evidence on which the facts were found, it certainly seems to me that the Congress of the United States, who can not act judicially on these questions, should take the findings of fact as found by the Court of Claims, and not question them further.

I hope that the amendment proposed will not be adopted, and that this paragraph will be allowed to remain in the bill and be favorably reported to the House.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. LANHAM, it was not agreed to; there being—ayes 12, noes 56.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I move that the claim embraced in this paragraph be reported back to the House with a recommendation that it be re-referred to the Court of Claims with instructions to report further the facts found in the case. This is one of a series of claims, and there is no separate bill accompanying it, as there was last session.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Indiana please reduce his motion to writing?

Mr. HOLMAN. My motion is simply that this claim—there being no separate bill accompanying it—be reported to the House with the recommendation that it be re-referred to the Court of Claims for further findings of fact. On this motion I wish to be heard a moment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair wishes to understand the proposition of the gentleman. This is simply a single paragraph of the bill. Does the gentleman propose to recommit the bill?

Mr. HOLMAN. I desire that this specific item be re-referred to the Court of Claims. My motion applies only to this claim, there being no separate bill accompanying it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is unable to see how the gentleman from Indiana can make a motion to lay aside a part of a bill to be reported to the House with a recommendation that this particular portion of the bill be re-referred to the Court of Claims.

Mr. HOLMAN. For purposes of legislative consideration, every distinctive part of a bill is a separate measure, as the Chair well understands. Each one of these propositions was originally a separate and distinct bill, and was referred in that form to the Court of Claims. The fact that these different claims are now combined in one bill does not change our power of separate action upon each. Each item is subject to separate consideration. Certainly it is not necessary to recommit the whole bill.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I wish to suggest that if the gentleman from Indiana, instead of making further objection to this claim, will let it be passed over by unanimous consent until we reach the last claim in the bill, I will put into his hands the record in the case, which I know will show affirmatively the loyalty of this claimant; if not, I will myself move to strike this paragraph out of the bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. I am willing this paragraph should be passed over.

Mr. WARNER. Will the gentleman from Tennessee permit me ask why he would agree to strike this out of the bill if the report was made by the committee on the facts submitted to them and favorably? Why should this injustice be submitted to, if the claim be a proper one? I certainly would not consent, for one, to that being done, though I know nothing of the merits of the claim, without some explanation of the reason for it. I want to proceed according to law in this matter; and upon the question of loyalty I contend that it need not be affirmatively proven, if that is the ground for striking it out. The law does not warrant or require it. Hence no claim should be stricken out unless the committee has received further information which indicates that it has no proper standing here.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I recognize the propriety of the objection the gentleman makes; but I am so absolutely certain that the loyalty of this claimant will be found to be beyond question that I had no hesitancy in agreeing to make that motion in the event of a failure to prove it.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Indiana desire his motion to be regarded as pending?

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will proceed to read the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

To Sarah E. Mendenhall, of Shelby County, Tennessee, $583.73.
To John A. Oursler, administrator, of Fayette County, Tennessee, $2,439.10.
To Thomas F. Perkins, administrator of Eliza M. Dawson, deceased, of Marshall County, Mississippi, $19,237.68.
To John B. Reid, of Fayette County, Tennessee, $1,000.
To Robert Smith, of Madison County, Tennessee, $510.
To S. H. Brodnax, executor of George T. Taylor, deceased, of Tipton County, Tennessee, $1,435.
To James Tucker, of Fayette County, Tennessee, $500.
To Robert H. Walton, of Hardeman County, Tennessee, $360.
To Americus V. Warr, administrator of Nicholas H. Isbell, deceased, of Fayette County, Tennessee, $13,475.15.
To John R. Watkins, administrator of Matilda W. Anderson, deceased, of Haywood County, Tennessee, $2,530.
To Simon Witkowski, of West Carroll Parish, Louisiana, $7,200.
To Mrs. Ann Moreau, of Avoyelles Parish, Louisiana, $5,995.
To John R. McDowell, administrator of John McDowell, deceased, of Fayette County, Tennessee, $15,570.
To John League, administrator of Delos A. Harrell, of Shelby County, Tennessee, $885.
To T. J. Powell, administrator of Warren M. Benton, deceased, of West Carroll Parish, Louisiana, $14,585.
To John H. Mitchell, of Sebastian County, Arkansas, $2,070.
To Duncan Marr, of Montgomery County, Tennessee, $9,424.

The committee recommend striking out lines 92 and 93, as follows:

To Duncan Marr, of Montgomery County, Tennessee, $9,424.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The reason of that recommendation is this: When the bill was made up the findings in this case of Duncan Marr had not been furnished. The findings had been made by the Court of Claims, and I put it in the original bill. But inasmuch as these findings did not reach the committee when the bill was completed, then I thought it better that it should be stricken out. It is true that this is a claim for supplies, and the loyalty of the claimant has been found; but it is not recommended in this bill, although it appears in an omnibus bill, or a bill including a number of items lower down on the Calendar, and that is the reason why it is proposed now to strike it out.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, the reports of the Court of Claims accompanying these various items of the bill, according to the understanding of last Friday, are to be read. They have not yet been read, and I ask for their reading.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I hope the gentleman will not insist upon that. I have the reports here, and ask to have them printed.

Mr. HOLMAN. The agreement was that they were to be read.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I make the point of order that the gentleman should have called for the reading at the time these various paragraphs of the bill were read.

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee certainly does not ask to have the rule adopted on last Friday set aside?

The CHAIRMAN. The present occupant of the chair of course has no knowledge of any rule of procedure which may have been adopted on last Friday and to which the gentleman from Indiana now refers.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I will not debate the question, but in order to save time will ask to have these read.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that it will simply consume time. I have examined these reports, and we would save time, I think, by dispensing with the reading of them. Still, if it is insisted upon, they can be read.

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not wish certainly to consume the time of the committee, but I wish the House to be informed of the facts in these cases. This bill involves the expenditure of a large amount of money. I would suggest to the gentleman, therefore, to let the report in the claim involving some $15,000 be read; and in the mean time I will indicate the other reports that I would beg to have read before action is taken.

The CHAIRMAN. If the Chair understands the status of this bill, it comes over from last Friday as the unfinished business, and is being read by paragraphs for debate and amendment under the five-minute rule. The committee can not go back, unless by unanimous consent, now to any preceding paragraph for argument or amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN. The Chair has certainly been informed of the fact that the committee, in considering the bill and in order to avoid trouble, agreed to have each report read bearing upon these several items of the bill; and whether it be read in connection with the item itself or whether all are read together of course made no difference, as far as that agreement was concerned. It would be a departure from the agreement of Friday last if the reports are not read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair must take notice of the fact that as these paragraphs of the bill were read and passed over no gentleman rose to seek recognition of the Chair. The gentleman from Indiana is aware of the fact that when a paragraph of a bill is read and passed over under such circumstances, it can only be recurred to again by unanimous consent.

Mr. HOLMAN. At the moment that the Clerk read this portion of the bill I supposed—if the Chair is uninformed as to the agreement of last Friday—or took it for granted that the body of these items were grouped together, until the Clerk had proceeded with the whole of them, whereupon the reports accompanying them would be read. But if the Chair will have the record of last Friday's proceedings referred to, it will be seen that the agreement was such as not to require the attention of any member to demand the reading of the reports, but that the reports were to be read without further order.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the gentleman's request?

Mr. HOLMAN. My request now is, that this proposition, or the report accompanying it—I refer to the claim covering some $15,000—shall be read, and in the mean time I will look to see if there are others which I desire to have read.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I hope there will be no objection to reading the report in this claim—the McDowell claim—to which the gentleman refers.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. That item has been read and passed over, and it has been decided by the Chair that it requires unanimous consent to go back to any item in the bill to read the report or to amend or debate. I would not object to the reading of the report in this case if it is understood that that reading does not bring that section of the bill again before the committee.

Mr. HOLMAN. What section?

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. The McDowell section. If the reading of the report is to open up the question again and bring it before the committee I shall object.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has already stated that, as the Chair understands the order of business, this bill is being considered in committee under the five-minute rule, and you can only recur to a preceding paragraph by unanimous consent either for amendment or debate.

Mr. HOLMAN. There has been no agreement or arrangement either in the committee or in the House that this bill should be considered under the five-minute rule.

The CHAIRMAN. It does not require such an agreement. The bill is being read and considered under the rules of the House.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the Chair, before we vote on this question, will have the record of last Friday referred to, that it may be known to the committee what the understanding was.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will do so. In the mean time he directs the Clerk to read the findings in the present case.

The Clerk read the findings of the Court of Claims, as follows:

Court of Claims. John R. McDowell, administrator of the estate of John McDowell, deceased, vs. The United States. Congressional case No. 211.

FINDINGS OF FACT. FILED DECEMBER 13, 1886.

At a Court of Claims held in the city of Washington on the 13th day of December, A. D. 1886, the court filed, in the aforesaid cause, its findings of fact, and ordered that a copy thereof be transmitted to the Committee on War Claims of the House of Representatives, to wit:

The claim in the above-entitled suit having been transmitted to this court by the Committee on War Claims of the House of Representatives on the 22d day of December, 1884, and the Attorney-General having appeared for the defendants, and the suit having been brought to a hearing on the 13th day of April, 1886, the court, upon the proofs and evidence, and after hearing Gilbert Moyers, esq., of counsel for the claimant, and H. J. May, esq., of counsel for the defendants, finds the following facts:

I.

That John McDowell, deceased, resided during the late war on his farm, located near Rossville, in Fayette County, Tennessee, containing 2,300 acres, of which about 1,000 was under cultivation; that he did not give any aid or comfort to the rebellion, but was throughout that war loyal to the Government of the United States.

II.

In the year 1862 and 1863 stores, subsistence, and supplies were taken from said John McDowell by the military forces of the United States for their use during the late war, consisting of horses, mules, cattle, hogs, sheep, hay, rails, wood, etc., amounting in the aggregate to the sum of $15,570.

III.

No payment has been made for said supplies.

By the court.

A true transcript of record.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the seal of said Court of Claims this 14th day of December, A. D. 1886.

[SEAL.] JOHN RANDOLPH,
Assistant Clerk Court of Claims.

Mr. HOLMAN. I desire to have read the findings in favor of T. J. Powell. I will furnish the paper to the Clerk.

The Clerk read the report of the Committee on War Claims of the Forty-ninth Congress (by Mr. Geddes), as follows:

That the Committee on War Claims of the Forty-ninth Congress, not being fully and clearly advised of all the facts in the case, referred it to the Court of Claims for a finding of the facts, under the provisions of an act entitled "An act to afford assistance and relief to Congress and the Executive Departments in the investigation of claims and demands against the Government," approved March 3, 1883.

Said claim has been returned by said Court of Claims with the following findings of fact, filed February 7, 1887, which findings have been referred to the Committee on War Claims of the present Congress, to wit:

"Court of Claims. T. J. Powell, administrator of Warren M. Benton, deceased, vs. The United States. Congressional case No. 902.

"At a Court of Claims held in the city of Washington on the 7th day of February, 1887, the court filed the following findings of fact, to wit:

"The claim in the above-entitled suit having been transmitted to this court by the Committee on War Claims of the House of Representatives on the 18th day of May, 1886, and the Attorney-General having appeared for the defendants, and the suit having been brought to a hearing on the 26th day of January, 1887, the court, upon the proofs and evidence, and after hearing Gilbert Moyers, esq., of counsel for the claimant, and Lewis Cochran, esq., of counsel for the defendants, finds the following facts:

"I.

"That Warren M. Benton, deceased, and the decedent of the claimant, did not give aid or comfort to the rebellion, but was throughout that war loyal to the Government of the United States.

"II.

Your committee therefore recommend the payment of the amount found due by said court, and recommend the passage of the accompanying bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. I now ask to have read the report accompanying the claim of John Kelley.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry. I ask if that claim has been regularly reached by the Clerk in reading the bill? If not, it occurs to me the Clerk should read the paragraphs in their order. I think the next claim is at line 90, two claims ahead of the one to which the gentleman from Indiana refers.

Mr. HOLMAN. I reserve the request to read the report in that case until it is reached.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk has not reached that paragraph in the bill.

The Clerk read the following paragraph:

To Elizabeth Greggs, administratrix of Charles Murphy, deceased, of Hardeman County, Tennessee, $3,187.

The Clerk read the report of the Committee on War Claims of the Forty-ninth Congress (by Mr. RICHARDSON), as follows:

That the Committee on War Claims of the Forty-eighth Congress, not being clearly and fully advised of all the facts in the case, referred it to the Court of Claims for a finding under the provisions of an act entitled "An act to afford assistance and relief to Congress and the Executive Departments in the investigation of claims and demands against the Government," approved March 3, 1883.

Said claim has been returned by said Court of Claims to the committee with the following findings of fact, filed January 11, 1886, to wit:

"In the Court of Claims. Elizabeth Greggs, administratrix of Charles Murphy, vs. The United States. Congressional case No. 182.

"At a Court of Claims held in the city of Washington on the 5th day of April, A. D. 1886, in the cause aforesaid the court filed findings of fact, and it was ordered that a copy of said findings be certified to the Committee on War Claims of the House of Representatives.

"In the Court of Claims. Congressional case No. 182. Elizabeth Griggs, administratrix of Charles Murphy, deceased, vs. The United States.

FINDINGS OF FACT. FILED APRIL 5, 1886.

"This case, referred by the Committee on War Claims of the House of Representatives, under the provisions of the act of March 3, 1883, chap. 116 (22 Stat. L., p. 485), having been heard by the court, the Attorney-General, by his assistants, appearing for the defense and protection of the interests of the United States, the court, upon the evidence, finds the facts to be as follows:

"I.

"Charles Murphy, deceased, late of Hardeman County, Tennessee, during the late war for the suppression of the rebellion, did not give aid and comfort to said rebellion, but was throughout that war loyal to the Government of the United States.

"II.

"There was taken from the said Charles Murphy during the late war, by the military forces of the United States, for their use, the following quartermaster's stores and subsistence supplies, to wit:

8 mules, worth	$1,000
3 horses	375
300 bushels of sweet potatoes, worth 50 cents per bushel	150
50 head of hogs, worth $9 per head	450
2,000 bushels of corn, worth 40 cents per bushel	800
1 wagon and harness	75
75 stacks of fodder	337

"Said property was taken in the year 1862 and 1863, in Hardeman County, Tennessee, from the said decedent, by said forces, and were used for the benefit of the Army of the United States.

The Clerk read the following paragraph:

To John Kelley, of Alleghany County, Virginia, $6,571.71.

The Clerk read the findings of fact by the Court of Claims, as follows:

Court of Claims. John Kelley vs. The United States. Congressional case No. 446.

At a Court of Claims held in the city of Washington on the 7th day of February, 1887, the court filed the following findings of fact, to wit:

The claim in the above-entitled suit having been transmitted to this court by the Committee on War Claims of the House of Representatives on the 5th day of February, 1886, and the Attorney-General having appeared for the defendants, and the suit having been brought to a hearing on the 24th day of January, 1887, the court upon the proofs and evidence, and after hearing P. E. Dye, esq., of counsel for the claimant, and Lewis Cochran, of counsel for the defendants, finds the following facts, after having upon a preliminary inquiry, on the 20th of December, 1886, found that the claimant was loyal to the Government of the United States throughout the late war of the rebellion.

I.

During the years 1863 and 1864, the claimant, a citizen of Alleghany County, in the State of Virginia, resided upon his plantation, "Sweet Chalybeate Springs," in said county, and was the owner of the stores and supplies hereinafter mentioned.

II.

During said years there were taken from the claimant on his said plantation the following described stores and supplies by the military forces of the United States, for their use, of the value set against the same in the following list:

Articles.	Value.	Articles.	Value.
1,800 pounds pork	$126.00	10 horses	$1,200.00
11 head	330.00	1 four-horse wagon	75.00
8 mules	1,000.00	1 set four-horse harness	75.00
300 bushels corn	300.00	1 set carriage harness	50.00
1,000 pounds hay	8.00	1 four-horse wagon	75.00
7 head cattle	210.00	1 two-horse wagon	50.00
5 head cattle	75.00	437 pounds buckwheat flour	17.08
4,625 pounds pork	323.75	145 pounds buckwheat flour	5.80
360 sheep	1,080.00	451 pounds bacon	36.08
500 bushels corn	500.00	15 bushels corn	15.00
300 bushels oats	180.00	250 bushels corn	250.00
150 bushels wheat	450.00
20 bushels beans	40.00	Total	6,571.71
1 carriage	100.00

The Clerk will report a copy of these findings to the Committee on War Claims of the House of Representatives.

Court of Claims. John Loague, administrator of Elizabeth Becton, vs. The United States. Congressional case No. 185.

At a Court of Claims held in the city of Washington on the 7th day of February, 1887, the court filed the following findings of fact, to wit:

The claim in the above-entitled suit having been transmitted to this court by the Committee on War Claims of the House of Representatives on the 22d day of December, 1884, and the Attorney-General having appeared for the defendants, and the suit having been brought to a hearing on the 26th day of January, 1887, the court, upon proofs and evidence, and after hearing Gilbert Moyers, esq., of counsel for the claimant, and Heber J. May, esq., of counsel for the defendants, finds the following facts, the claimant's intestate, Elizabeth Becton, having on the 22d day of March, 1886, been found loyal to the United States throughout the rebellion:

I.

During the year 1864 the said Elizabeth Becton, deceased, of whom the said claimant is the duly appointed administrator, resided on her plantation in Tennessee, and owned and possessed the property hereinafter mentioned.

In said year there was taken from said Becton, upon her said plantation, by the military forces of the United States for their use, the following supplies, of the value set against the same in the following schedule:

7 mules	$875
1 horse	100
Hams and meat	80

JOHN RANDOLPH,
Assistant Clerk Court of Claims.

Mr. HOLMAN. I believe that the motion now recurs with regard to the claim that was first under consideration.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I move that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. HOLMAN. But there is a motion pending with regard to a former item.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Which item?

Mr. McCOMAS. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 101, insert the following: "To John Heflebower, $1,764.50."

Mr. McCOMAS. The chairman of the Committee on War Claims, I am confident, will accept this amendment. This is the very first case adjudicated under the Bowman act by a reference of the Committee on War Claims to that court, and it is only on account of a clerical omission that it does not appear in the present bill. It was reported in the last Congress, and would have been included in this bill except for a clerical error. It stands on the Calendar reported from the committee last year unanimously. It has also been reported by the Committee on War Claims this year unanimously.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. This claim stands on the Calendar, but was not included in the pending bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. I trust the report will be read.

The Clerk read the findings of fact by the Court of Claims, as follows:

In the Court of Claims. Congressional case No. 16. John Heflebower vs. The United States.

FINDINGS OF FACT. FILED APRIL 5, 1886.

The claim in the above-entitled suit having been transmitted to this court by the Committee on War Claims of the House of Representatives on the —— of February, 1884, and the Attorney-General having appeared for the defendants, and the suit having been brought to a hearing on the 8th day of February, 1886, the court, upon proofs and evidence, and after hearing Ivory G. Kimball, esq., counsel for the claimant, and Lewis Cochrane, esq., of counsel for the defendants, finds the following facts:

I.

John Heflebower was the owner, during the war of 1861, of a farm of 190 acres, of which 120 acres were under cultivation, in Washington County, Maryland, adjoining Maryland Heights, and lived there from the time of its purchase, in 1860, to the filing of this suit.

II.

The farm, being more level than other farms in the vicinity and conveniently placed and well adapted to the purposes of a camp, was occupied continuously and successively for camping purposes by large bodies of United States troops from the latter part of July, 1861, until the close of the war, with the exception of brief intervals in 1863. It was used as a stopping-place for wagon-trains, as many as one thousand four hundred teams being there at one time; by the Signal Corps, as a depot for recruits, and generally for all the purposes incidental to a permanent camp, and constituted a military dwelling-place for troops. The quantity of land so occupied and used amounted to 55 acres, which was arable land.

III.

At the time when the United States entered upon and occupied the premises of the claimant, as set forth in the second finding, the land was reasonably worth for agricultural purposes the rental value of $5 per acre per annum, amounting in the aggregate for the four years of use and occupation to the sum of $1,100, which has never been paid to him in whole or in part.

IV.

The United States, as lessees within the State of Maryland, were bound to leave the premises so occupied by them in as good order and condition as when entered upon, reasonable wear and tear excepted. But during the occupancy great injury was done to the premises by the usage incident to the occupation. The ground was trampled hard, so as to be unfit for two years for agricultural use; pit-holes and sewers had to be filled in; chimneys and the other débris of a camp had to be removed. The injuries were not damage by the Army for military purposes, but were of the nature of waste under an implied tenancy for which the Government, as tenant, is liable under the decision of the Supreme Court in the case of Bostwick, administratrix, vs. The United States. The reasonable cost of restoring the premises to as good a condition as when the United States entered into possession thereof would be the sum of $550.

V.

During the occupancy of the claimant's farm the military authorities removed and used as fuel 14,200 rails and posts, which, at the rate determined and allowed by the Quartermaster-General and Southern Claims Commission of 100 rails to the cord, were equivalent to 142 cords of wood. The reasonable value of the wood so taken and consumed for army fuel was $3.50 per cord, amounting in the aggregate to the sum of $497, which has never been paid to the claimant.

VI.

The officers of the Quartermaster's and Commissary Departments also procured from the claimant for public use the following stores and supplies:

50 bushels wheat, at $2.35, for cavalry feed	$117.50
50 bushels of oats (for army cattle), at 80 cents	40.00
½ ton of hay, at $20 per ton (for cavalry)	10.00
Amounting in the aggregate to	167.50

SUMMARY.

The amounts in which the United States remains indebted to the claimant, as shown by the preceding findings, are as follows:

Rental of land for agricultural purposes	$1,100.00
Restoring waste committed during the implied tenancy	550.00
142 cords of wood, at $3.50	497.00
Wheat, oats, and hay	167.50
Amounting in the aggregate to	2,314.50

Court of Claims. A true transcript of record.

Test, this 20th day of April, 1886.

[SEAL.]

JOHN RANDOLPH,
Assistant Clerk Court of Claims.

Your committee therefore find that the item 4 in the findings of the Court of Claims, as above, should not be allowed, and therefore do not recommend the payment of the same, but do recommend the payment of the amounts found by the Court of Claims, as set forth in the above findings Nos. 3, 5, and 6, amounting to $1,764.50, and recommend the passage of the accompanying bill.

Mr. McCOMAS. This bill, as reported in the last Congress, omits the item of waste during the implied tenancy of the land and pays the other item of 142 cords of wood, and the wheat, oats, and hay; and also for the use of this land as a camping ground and as a regular dwelling-place for the troops during the four years. The only item to which an objection could be made or would be made has been omitted. The other items are here and have passed two committees unanimously in this Congress.

This bill, as I understand, was the very first one passed on by the Court of Claims under the Bowman act. This man was loyal and is loyal. He was so early an anti-slavery man that he liberated and sent off to Liberia ten years before the war a dozen of his slaves at a time when the flesh and blood of slaves commanded their highest price. This man liberated all the slaves he had and sent them away because they could not remain emancipated in this country.

The property, being near Harper's Ferry, was taken for a Signal Service station during the war. That is the only item of controversy. Nobody would dispute the other two items.

I ask the attention of the House to this man's case, he being so earnestly loyal and so ardently a lover of the freedom of the human race that he took out of his own pocket eight times the amount of the money in this bill in that cause. And now if we pass this item we would not pay him more than a tithe of what the war cost him. I only ask what the two committees of Congress agreed to give him, and I hope no objection will be made, but that the amendment will be adopted.

I want to state further that if this bill is not now adopted as an amendment it will come up a few minutes later on the calendar of cases reported from the Court of Claims, and it being a part of this general bill, which has been omitted by accident, I appeal to gentlemen to let it be considered next.

Mr. HOUK. Mr. Chairman, I have no objection to the gentleman's bill, but I think we ought to come to a common understanding about these cases. The chairman of the Committee on War Claims, as I understand the matter——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HOUK] that this bill is pending as an amendment to the bill under consideration, and unless the gentleman from Tennessee desires to occupy his five minutes upon the amendment the Chair will take the vote.

Mr. HOUK. I want to say what I do say before the vote is taken. I submit to the chairman of the Committee on War Claims and to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. MCCOMAS] that there are a number of cases on the Calendar which the law required should come over and take a place on the Calendar of this Congress, and as one case has been excepted and treated as an amendment, why can not these gentlemen and the Committee of the Whole, for the purpose of expediting business, agree that all those cases which have been reported shall be added to this bill, and let us go on until we dispose of them and get them out of the way? If you are going to take up one of those cases, it seems to me that it is only fair that you should take them all. I submit to the chairman of the Committee on War Claims and to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. MCCOMAS] and to this entire Committee of the Whole the question whether it would not expedite business to let all those cases which under the law have precedence be added to this bill and be disposed of without further delay?

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. MCCOMAS].

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, in answer to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HOUK] I can only speak for myself. So far as I am concerned I am perfectly willing to do what he suggests, and indeed I think it is the duty of the House to put every one of these claims which are upon what is designated as the Court of Claims Calendar—to put every one of them on as amendments to this bill and pass them and be done with them. We treat the Court of Claims, the very tribunal which we have created for the purpose of examining these cases and finding the facts—we treat that tribunal with indignity when we take even such action as we have already taken here, and I believe it is due to the Court of Claims, due to the people who have these claims, due to the members upon this floor who have introduced these bills and have been urging them forward, that the House should take all the cases contained in the first two pages of the Private Calendar, known as the Court of Claims Calendar, and put them into one bill and pass them.

Mr. HOOKER. How many bills are there on this Calendar reported from the Court of Claims under the Bowman act that are not included in the bill we have been considering?

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. I think there are seven, and if the amendment of the gentleman from Maryland is adopted it will leave about six.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The difficulty is this: I do not think that you can take half a dozen separate bills and add them on to this bill, and I think we had better dispose of one at a time. The amendment of the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. MCCOMAS] is pending, and should be first disposed of.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has stated that more than once, and if gentlemen will make the point of order the Chair will see that the committee proceeds in order.

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Chairman, I give notice now that I shall make the point of order against any bill being added to this as an amendment. This bill has already taken precedence over a great deal of other business, and I object to anything being added to it.

Mr. MCCOMAS. Mr. Chairman, I ask a vote on my amendment. It is too late to make the point of order against that.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that no point of order can lie to the amendment of the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. MCCOMAS], which has already been entertained and debated by the committee. The question is on the amendment, which will be read.

The Clerk again read the amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN. My friend from Maryland [Mr. MCCOMAS] has stated that there is no doubt about the loyalty of this claimant, and yet in the report made by the Court of Claims that question is entirely ignored. I wish now to call the attention of the committee to the state of the law upon this subject, for I insist that the Court of Claims, in the reports it has made to the House, has not properly considered the law, has not properly considered the measure of its jurisdiction, and that those reports as a general thing are not such as were contemplated when the law was enacted.

This statute known as the Bowman act contains the following provision:

> When the facts and conclusions of law shall have been found, the court shall not enter judgment thereon, but shall report its findings and opinions to the Department by which it is transmitted, for the purpose of guidance and action.

That same provision, as I understand, applies to all the findings of the court under this law. In the latter part of this provision I find the words "and its opinions." The language of the preceding part is, "When the facts and conclusions of law shall have been found." I do not find a single instance in all these reports where the conclusions of law have been reported. As I remarked last Friday, the powers of the Court of Claims under the Bowman act are the same as under the act of 1855, when that court was first organized, and when it had at its head one of the most enlightened judges that ever sat upon a bench in this country, Isaac Blackford. The law then was the same in substance as it is now, and the court under that law reported its findings and conclusions to the House. They were referred to the Committee on Claims, who reported a bill to carry into effect the conclusions which the court had reached. I hold in my hand the report of the court in the last case that has been considered. There is in it no conclusion of law; there is no determination as to the liability of the Government.

Among the facts required to be found by this court, and, if found, to be reported to the House, was the fact of loyalty; and at the time the law was passed it could not have been passed had it not contained the provision to which I wish to call attention. That section of the bill was intended for the purpose of securing full information to Congress, not simply as to questions of fact, but as to the conclusions reached by the court, just as under the law of 1855. One of the facts to be found, and the very first fact to be found, was whether the claimant had been loyal throughout the war to the Government of the United States.

Gentlemen say that is a jurisdictional question—not a fact entering into the case. But there gentlemen make a mistake. The court is one of limited jurisdiction; everybody concedes that—not only limited jurisdiction, but severely restricted jurisdiction. Such a tribunal, according to the law of the whole land, must, in the first place, determine affirmatively that it has power to assume jurisdiction of the subject-matter submitted. No lawyer I think will dissent from this view. The very first fact to be ascertained by the court was the loyalty of the claimant; and that was the first fact to be reported to Congress as the basis of our action. But in this case, as in others pending here, the court has ignored the restrictions imposed by law upon its jurisdiction.

[Here the hammer fell].

Mr. MCCOMAS. Mr. Chairman, the loyalty of the claimant in this case was a jurisdictional fact; and if it had not been found affirmatively there would have been no printed report here. The finding was made by the court and returned to Congress. It is now, or was last year, on the files of the Committee on War Claims. There was no occasion to print that finding here in the report of the committee, because if the finding had not been in favor of the claimant's loyalty the committee would not have reported the claim favorably. It goes without saying that in the findings of fact by the court the jurisdictional fact has been found affirmatively.

And there was every reason in this case why such should have been the finding. The proof, with which I am familiar, showed that this man Heflebower was one of about one hundred men in my State of Maryland who voted for Lincoln in 1860; and, as I have already stated, he liberated a large body of slaves ten years before the war and sent them as free men to Liberia. He was loyal of the loyal. My friend from Indiana could not find a better exemplar of loyalty. The claim having been reported favorably by the court, I hope a vote will be taken, and this claim, in at least the reduced amount reported by the committee, will be paid.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend pro forma by striking out the last word. I apprehend that it will be found that the Court of Claims has taken the view sought to be expressed by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OATES] upon the question as presented when the Bowman act was pending here. That bill could not have passed without the third and fourth sections, which were drawn by me and offered as amendments. I apprehend it will be found that the Court of Claims has ignored the power of Congress to impose this limitation on the jurisdiction of the court. I assume it has been held by the court that the proclamation of the President had the effect of eliminating the question of loyalty from these cases.

But, sir, the provision requiring the fact of loyalty to be first found before the court should obtain jurisdiction was inserted for the very reason that clearly, under the decision of the Supreme Court, after the Court of Claims obtained jurisdiction, the question of loyalty was of no moment. Hence, special effort was made to restrict the power of the court, and require the fact of loyalty to be found before the court should proceed to try the case. But I say again, I apprehend from the character of this report the court has ignored the power of Congress to impose this limitation upon it. I do not know that such is the case, but I apprehend it will be found to be the fact.

Mr. McCOMAS. The argument which the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] makes certainly can not have any application to this case when I give him my assurance from personal examination and knowledge that the court did find the fact of loyalty upon the proof of various witnesses—among them myself; and this finding was of record and on file a year ago in the Committee on War Claims. It has not, however, been printed in the report. I presume the criticism of the gentleman from Indiana does not apply to this case.

Mr. HOLMAN. My criticism is not intended to apply particularly to this case, although, so far as I have observed, in all the other cases except one, the very first finding of the court has been upon the question of jurisdiction.

Mr. McCOMAS. When I assure the gentleman that I have seen the finding of the court on that point not over a year ago, that it is now on the files of the committee, as I suppose, though not printed here, I presume that disposes of this case.

Mr. HOLMAN. I should be very glad to know whether the court felt justified in following a given line of decision in one class of cases and another line in other cases; for in all these cases, except the two I have mentioned, the fact of loyalty has been found, in conformity with the requirements of the Bowman act, and reported to the House.

I wish to call attention further to the utter disregard by the court of the limitations imposed by that act. Here is an item in the finding:

Rental of land for agricultural purposes, $1,100.

This is for the use of the land as a military camp, but the allowance of any such claim is expressly excluded by the terms of the statute. Another item is:

Restoring waste committed during the implied tenancy, $550.

"Implied tenancy!"

Mr. RICHARDSON. That has been stricken out of the bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. I am aware of that; but I am speaking of the action of the Court of Claims. I commend the Committee on War Claims for striking out this item; but what is to be said of the Court of Claims for finding such an item? In spite of an express prohibition against taking jurisdiction of claims of this kind, the court deliberately inserts as a part of its judgment, "rental of land for agricultural purposes" and "restoring waste committed during the implied tenancy." Where are we drifting? The occupation of land for military camps and the waste connected therewith were not confined during the war to the country south of Mason and Dixon's line. Is it possible that the Court of Claims, directly in the teeth of the restriction of the law, has undertaken to find in favor of claims for occupation of land by our armies during the war?

Mr. McCOMAS. I know that the gentleman wants to be entirely frank. The matter to which he now refers has been excluded from the bill by the committee.

Mr. HOLMAN. But I am speaking of the Court of Claims.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I ask the gentleman in fairness whether he undertakes to say that the Court of Claims recommended the payment of the items he has just read?

Mr. HOLMAN. I was giving the Committee on War Claims credit for excluding the item; I understood it was done by them.

Mr. RICHARDSON. So it was.

Mr. HOLMAN. But here is the "summary" given by the court:

SUMMARY.

The amounts in which the United States remains indebted to the claimant, as shown by the preceding findings, are as follows:

Rental of land for agricultural purposes	$1,100.00
Restoring waste committed during the implied tenancy	550.00
142 cords of wood, at $3.50	497.00
Wheat, oats, and hay	167.50
Amounting in the aggregate to	2,314.50

By the court.

Now, does the gentleman from Tennessee say that the items I read a moment ago are not embraced in the judgment of the Court of Claims? I hope my friend will answer.

Mr. RICHARDSON. This claimant presented his case to the Court of Claims, and the court in its finding has said that so much of the claim as the gentleman has referred to was for "waste;" the court simply finds that fact and reports it for the information of Congress. The court does not recommend payment for "waste." The gentleman, if he will read the finding of the court, will not undertake to make such an impression on the House and the country, and thereby cast a reflection on the court.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted on the pending amendment, and also on the pro forma amendment submitted by the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. HOLMAN. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The question recurred on Mr. McCOMAS'S amendment; and it was agreed to.

Mr. LEE. I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add as follows:

"The Secretary of the Treasury be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $20,000 to the trustees of the Protestant Episcopal Theological Seminary and High School of Virginia, said amount having been found due them by the Court of Claims for rent, for use of their building for hospital purposes from May, 1861, to August, 1865."

Mr. STEELE. I make the point of order against the amendment that it proposes to add the substance of one bill as an amendment to another. It is not in order, therefore, as an amendment to the pending measure. We are not permitted to do by indirection under the rules what we can not do directly.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Indiana the recollection of the Chair is that in the amendment of the rules of the Forty-ninth Congress, which was adopted, the proposition the gentleman submits as a point of order was omitted, so that it is now in order to offer as an amendment the substance of another bill pending in the House.

Mr. STEELE. I submit the further point, Mr. Chairman, that the amendment which is moved is in the nature of a private bill, while the other measure is a general bill.

Mr. HOOKER. We do not understand exactly the point of order submitted.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana is on the floor stating his point of order.

Mr. STEELE. My point is, this is a private bill, and it is not in order to move a private bill as an amendment to a general bill. If it were in order to add this private bill as an amendment, then you might add as amendments, every other bill upon the Private Calendar, and there would be no end of it. From now to the close of the session we would be considering amendments containing the substance of private bills now upon the Private Calendar.

Then, too, we must not forget, Mr. Chairman, this is a general bill, and could not be considered on private-bill day, but that it is here now by unanimous consent.

Mr. DINGLEY. I wish to call the attention of the Chair to page 271 of the Manual, where it is stated:

It is out of order to ingraft upon a bill for one individual a provision for the relief of another.

This is a private bill, and although it includes several individuals, it nevertheless continues to be a private bill for the relief of the specific individuals named therein. It was ruled in the Thirty-second Congress that a private bill for the relief of one individual was not in order in the nature of an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. On what page?

Mr. DINGLEY. Two hundred and seventy-one of the Manual, under the heading of "Amendments."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overruled the first point of order, that this amendment was the substance of a bill now pending in the House. The Chair thinks that point is not well taken.

The gentleman now submits the further point that the pending measure is a private bill and can not be amended by moving to add another private bill to it. The only point to be determined by the Chair is whether or not by its title and enacting provision this is a public or a private bill. If it is a private bill the Chair has no hesitation in saying the point is well taken. The Clerk will read the enacting clause of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and required to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the several persons in this act named, the several sums mentioned herein, the same being in full for, and the receipt of the same to be taken and accepted in each case as a full and final discharge of, the several claims examined, investigated, and reported favorably by the Court of Claims of the United States under the provisions of the act of March 3, 1883, entitled "An act to afford assistance and relief to Congress and the Executive Departments in the investigation of claims and demands against the Government," namely.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will be glad to hear from gentlemen who wish to speak on the point of order.

Mr. OATES. Let the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. LEE] be read.

The amendment was read.

Mr. OATES. I do not remember the language of the changed rule, but it seems to me it does allow the substance of a pending bill to be attached as an amendment. If that be so, then if the subject-matter of the amendment offered be germane, it is in order. Now it appears the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia is of precisely the same character as the pending bill, and it is germane as a matter of course, and therefore in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point the gentleman from Indiana makes, the Chair will state to the gentleman from Alabama, is that, although the amendment is germane, which he admits, and relates to the same subject-matter, coming within the class of claims, so far as the subject-matter is concerned, covered by this bill, that being for the relief of one individual or person or corporation, it can not be offered as an amendment to another private bill.

Mr. STEELE. And for the reason that if it could be so offered the Calendar could be exhausted of bills by amendments, adding each one to any pending bill.

Mr. OATES. Does the rule that permits the offering of such amendments limit or restrict the amendment to public bills?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will cause the rule to be read. The Clerk will turn to page 271 of the Digest and read.

The Clerk read as follows:

An amendment proposing to ingraft a general provision of law upon a private bill is against order—Journal 1, 31, page 784—or having the effect to convert a private into a public bill, or vice versa.—Journal 1, 48, pages 761 and 762. It is also out of order to ingraft upon a bill for the relief of one individual a provision for the relief of another.

Mr. DUNN. I suggest to the Chair this point: that the pending bill is not a bill for the relief of one private individual. It is an omnibus bill for the benefit of a number of persons having claims of a certain designated class; and it seems to me that, being a general or omnibus bill, this would permit as germane an amendment which would seek to ingraft upon it any claim of the same class as those covered by the bill. Those cases are sui generis. They are made so by the law which gives them perpetuity, which gave them their standing, and places them upon the Calendar. The mass or body of them is embodied in one bill, and the amendment is a proposition to introduce another of the same class and standing, as I understand the question, in the same attitude upon the Calendars of the House.

Mr. BURROWS. Does my friend think that this is a public or a private bill?

Mr. DUNN. It is manifestly a bill for the relief of private individuals, but it is not a private bill in the sense of being a bill for the relief of any one individual. It embraces a number of claims, as the gentleman is aware.

Mr. BURROWS. Then when you put on two individuals it would change a private bill into a public one?

Mr. DUNN. No. The fact is to be recognized here that this is an omnibus bill for the Bowman cases.

Mr. STEELE. But it has only been taken up by unanimous consent, as embodying the separate claims covered by that act.

Mr. HOOKER. Mr. Chairman, a word in reference to the point of order of my friend from Indiana. It will be remembered by the committee that when the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering bills upon the Private Calendar, we were confronted with a class of bills, numbering some thirty or forty and embraced upon two pages of the Calendar, pages 19 and 20. Upon a proposition which was made here these bills were laid aside, they being the bills which had been reported back to the House under the Bowman act, which has been read by my friend from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN]. They were laid aside and the reports from the committee on other private bills were considered, they being not disposed of. Then, as I understand it, a bill was introduced by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON], which embodied the provisions of all of these separate bills, with the exception of perhaps six or seven, and the gentleman from Maryland, [Mr. MCCOMAS] has by his amendment to-day added one other, which leaves, I believe—and I appeal to my friend, the chairman of the Committee on War Claims, to set me right if I am in error—which leaves but six of these bills, or of this class of bills now on the Calendar reported from the Court of Claims and awaiting the action of this House.

Now, I appeal to the committee to know, if there is justice in the finding of the Court of Claims and propriety in its decisions with regard to the bills which are embraced in this omnibus bill of the gentleman from Tennessee, why the same principle should not permit it to include all the favorable reports from that court if offered by way of amendments to this bill? The subjects are identical, and they come from the same authority. We referred—the House did—these claims to the Court of Claims for the purpose of a finding and a report of the findings of fact in each case. They have reported them; and why should we embody all of these but six, and leave that number out, including the one that my friend from Virginia, General LEE, now asks to incorporate by way of an amendment?

Mr. DUNN. And then make the point of order when it is sought to do so.

Mr. HOOKER. Yes, and then make the point of order against it when offered. I submit to my distinguished friend from Indiana [Mr. STEELE], who makes the point that if you admit this bill you may add every other bill upon the Private Calendar as an amendment, that it does not by any means follow. I do not think that it follows logically. This bill which the gentleman from Virginia has offered is not a proposition to fix upon a bill for the payment of a specific amount to one individual a proposition to pay a sum to another individual. His amendment is only to append to a bill embodying a large number of cases reported from the Court of Claims another case reported from the Court of Claims and which stands upon the same footing.

Now, this bill of the gentleman from Virginia is to pay to the trustees of a certain church compensation for its use and occupancy. The point made by the gentleman from Indiana is that this is an attempt to attach one private bill to another, in contravention of the rule and the authority given under the decisions which have been read by direction of the Chair from page 271 of our Manual.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the truth is that there are only six bills that we leave out of this omnibus bill. And why are they left out? If the committee are willing to give those bills a fair consideration, why should they not have the opportunity of doing so? This is a bill not for the relief of a private individual but for the relief of a corporate body, and I say that the point of order made by the gentleman from Indiana ought not to be sustained by the Chair, more especially if it should turn out, as suggested by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OATES], that that rule of the House no longer exists which prohibits embodying in a pending bill the substance of another bill before the House. I submit the point of order is not well taken.

Mr. STEELE. The omnibus bill itself was reported long after the first bill on the Private Calendar was taken up by unanimous consent. This bill was reported on the 17th of January and the omnibus bill was not reported until February. If we are to let a bill come in by unanimous consent in this way it looks as if we might amend the pending bill by any of the bills on the Calendar.

Mr. LEE. It would be presumption in me to argue the effect of the rules with gentlemen of experience on this floor. But I had hopes that this bill, being of the peculiar nature it is, would have commended itself to every gentleman on this floor, whatever his political faith and whatever constituency he represented. This is somewhat different from the ordinary claims of this class. It comes from an institution which stands above all politics. It is not carried on for the sake of making money. This institution sends these young men into every clime and into every section of the habitable globe on their missions of mercy; and I trusted, sir, in introducing this amendment, that it would have met with the unanimous approval of my friends on the other side of the House.

In 1861 that section of the territory across the river was taken possession of by the United States Government, and their lines were lines of steel, and they embraced the lands and buildings of this institution. They occupied them for four years. They returned them then to the trustees. Their great Secretary of War himself recommended that rents should be paid to this institution for the use of these buildings as hospitals; and, sir, I am somewhat surprised to find now in this age, when we had hoped that all feelings of hatred and animosity, which war ever engenders, had had time to cool—I am somewhat surprised to find my friends on the other side of the House when a bill of this sort so fair is presented to them, and when we have, with a liberal hand and with some possible strain of conscience, sat here and voted for the bills which they have brought forward—I am surprised to find that they should now attempt to defeat this measure.

If my friends on the other side will consider the proposition and it is ruled out of order, I will ask unanimous consent that it be presented to the House with the hope that they will give it a candid consideration.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I want to suggest that under the ruling of the Speaker of the House these Court of Claims cases stand at the head of the Calendar; and if not put into this bill under the rule and under the Bowman act, they will stand at the head of the Calendar and be first considered.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has examined carefully the title and first section of this bill, and can find nothing either in the title or in the first section to take away its character as a private bill. Therefore the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. LEE. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of this bill as an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia now asks unanimous consent to consider at this time the amendment that has already been read.

Mr. COX. I hope that request will be granted.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

Mr. HOLMAN. Let the amendment be reported.

Mr. BURROWS. I would like to know something about this amendment. Has it been reported by the Court of Claims?

Mr. LEE. Yes, sir.

Mr. BURROWS. Let the report of the Court of Claims be read.

The report of the Committee on War Claims of the Forty-ninth Congress (by Mr. RICHARDSON) was read, as follows:

The Committee on War Claims, to whom were referred the findings of the Court of Claims in the claim of the Protestant Episcopal Theological Seminary and High School, Virginia, beg leave to report:

That the Committee on War Claims of the Forty-eighth Congress, not being fully and clearly advised of all the facts in the case, referred it to the Court of Claims for a finding of the facts, under the provisions of an act entitled "An act to afford assistance and relief to Congress and the Executive Departments in the investigation of claims and demands against the Government," approved March 3, 1883. Said claim has been returned by said Court of Claims with the following findings of facts, filed April 6, 1886, which findings have been referred to the Committee on War Claims of the present Congress, to wit:

"Letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the order and findings of fact by that court in the case of the Protestant Episcopal Theological Seminary and High School in Virginia against the United States.

"FINDINGS OF FACT. FILED MARCH 29, 1886.

"The claim in the above-entitled suit having been transmitted to this court by the Committee on War Claims of the House of Representatives on the 7th day of January, 1885, and the Attorney-General having appeared for the defendants, and the suit having been brought to a hearing on the 3d day of February, 1886, the court, upon the proofs and evidence, and after hearing C. G. Lee, esq., of counsel for the claimant, and F. P. Dewees, esq., of counsel for the defendants, finds the following facts:

"I.

"At the time hereinafter referred to, the trustees of the Protestant Episcopal Theological Seminary and High School in Virginia, a corporation in the State of Virginia, was the owner of real property in Fairfax County, Virginia, near Alexandria, used by them for the accommodation of a theological seminary and high school. The United States, under the authority of the Medical Department of the Army, as hereinafter set forth, used said property for the purposes of a military hospital from August 28, 1861, until August 14, 1865, and acquired the use and occupancy of the premises in the manner set forth in the next statement.

"II.

"On the 25th of August, 1861, Brigade Surgeon George Suckley addressed the following communication to the medical director, which was approved and carried into effect in the manner indicated by the letters following:

"'HEADQUARTERS BRIGADE NEW JERSEY VOLUNTEERS,
"'Near Alexandria, August 25, 1861.

"'SIR: I have the honor to report that there are now within the limits of the encampment of this brigade several buildings in every way suitable for hospital purposes. One, the Episcopal Theological Seminary, is a fine, large, new building, in a commanding and healthy situation, capable of giving good accommodation to at least 200 men. Another has, until recently, been occupied as a young ladies' boarding-school. It contains several good-sized rooms suitable for offices, etc., and in addition a large dormitory, containing 80 bedsteads, with mattresses, etc.

"'With the material we thus have at hand, one of the principal objections against the establishment of a brigade hospital—its cost to the Government—is almost entirely done away with; and when we consider the advantages to be gained by having such a hospital in this particular brigade, I can hardly doubt but that the commanding general will, upon your recommendation, order its recognition.

* * * * * * *

"'Besides, I do not believe that for healthiness of locality or excellence and suitableness of buildings the general hospital at Alexandria can compare with the seminary buildings in our camp. This I understood Dr. Magruder, who visited us yesterday as acting medical inspector, is also his opinion. Dr. Magruder went further in saying that, as a hospital building, the Theological Seminary exceeds in structure and advantages any other now in use in the Department of the Potomac.

"'Referring to my official indorsement of December 8, 1865, upon the claim of Rev. W. Sparrow, dean of Fairfax Seminary (copy annexed), I am of the opinion that the above sum would be a moderate and reasonable compensation for use of the premises for hospital purposes during the time specified.

Your committee therefore recommend the payment of the amount found by said court, and recommend that the accompanying bill do pass.

Mr. SOWDEN addressed the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. A request for unanimous consent is now pending.

Mr. SOWDEN. I would like to ask the gentleman who has this bill in charge why this particular claim was omitted.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent that the amendment he has offered be considered at this time as an amendment to this bill. Is there objection?

Mr. BREWER. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BREWER. I have no objection to the admission of this amendment. But if it be admitted at this time will it be open to discussion afterward?

The CHAIRMAN. If the amendment be considered at this time it will be open to discussion as any other.

Mr. BREWER. Then I do not object.

Mr. SOWDEN. I want to ask, reserving the right to object, why this particular claim was omitted in the pending bill?

Mr. RICHARDSON. The answer to that question is that this claim is for the payment of rent. The bill I had the honor to present, and which includes within it a number of other bills, is for supplies alone. I only put into the bill claims for supplies, quartermaster's and commissary stores.

Mr. BURROWS. I would like to inquire of my friend whether this bill has been reported and is upon the Calendar.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I so understand it.

Mr. BURROWS. And it will be reached in due time, I suppose. It appears to me that this bill is one which opens up an entirely new field, and yet it seems ungracious for one to object and stop the consideration of the matter. I would like to have a little time to examine the case, but I will not take the responsibility of objecting. If the committee want to pass it, all right.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the amendment is before the committee for consideration.

Mr. BREWER. Mr. Chairman, I only desire to call attention to the manner in which we are drifting away from established precedents and are undertaking to pay claims against which years since a rule was established in this House. Those of us who were here some eight or ten years ago remember very well that claims of this nature were from day to day presented for the consideration of the House. At that time the famous bill for the reimbursement of William and Mary College of Virginia was under consideration. That bill was thoroughly discussed upon both sides of this House, and I might add that it was advocated by one of the leading Republican members of the House at that time. The position that was then taken by a large majority of the House—and the House at that time was more largely Democratic than it is to-day—was that claims of that nature should not be paid by the Government; that the Government was neither equitably nor legally liable for the injury that had been sustained by the college mentioned or for the use of it. I am willing to concede that the seminary which was mentioned in this bill was occupied by the United States troops and occupied for the purposes set forth in the report.

Mr. WISE. Will the gentleman allow me to make a suggestion?

Mr. BREWER. I will yield for a question.

Mr. WISE. I simply want to remark that the case of William and Mary College is not at all similar to this one. William and Mary College was not occupied as a hospital; the claim there was for damages for injury done in the course of the war.

Mr. BREWER. I concede that the question in that case was as to injury done to the college. But, sir, that was not the only case of this kind. Claim after claim was presented for the use and occupancy of churches, and I think also of other institutions of learning besides William and Mary College, and I know of no case where a bill was permitted to pass the House to reimburse those churches or those institutions of learning for use or occupancy by our soldiers. Now, it is a fact well known to my friend here [Mr. LEE] that at the time this institution of learning was occupied or taken possession of by the United States troops it had recently been vacated, or that section of country had, by troops that were in rebellion against the Government.

The institution was in a territory that was in open revolt against the Government of the United States; in other words, it was within the line of the enemy's territory. Our troops took possession of it and they used it, no doubt, for the purposes mentioned in this report; but, sir, if we are to reimburse all the institutions and churches that were occupied in that way in the enemy's territory, then we are entering upon a line of legislation that we shall not see the end of in the next thirty years. It means not only the reimbursement of this institution for its use and occupancy by our troops while they were fighting to put down the rebellion; it means that we must pay for the use of every church, of every school-house, of every institution of learning in the States that was in open, armed hostility to the Government of the United States.

I wish simply to call the attention of this committee to the precedent we are about to establish. It is not merely the few thousand dollars that we are asked to pay for the use and occupation of this building. It means thousands of claims of a similar nature that are to be presented here for many years to come. A number of bills of a similar nature, making compensation for the use of property, have passed this committee and this House during the present session; but all those bills, if I remember correctly, were for cases in States that were not in open rebellion against the Government, and for that reason I did not object to them. And I do not object to this because I am opposed specially to paying for the occupancy of this building. I object to it because it establishes a precedent which will lead to claims and expenditures without limit.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BREWER. I did not understand, Mr. Chairman, that I was speaking under limited time.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee is proceeding under the five-minute rule.

Mr. JACKSON obtained the floor and said: I yield my time to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BREWER].

Mr. BREWER. Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to occupy further the time of the committee for more than a moment.

The institution of learning across the river is well known, having existed before the war. Many personal friends of mine were educated there. I sympathize deeply with those who suffered this loss, but, in my judgment it was one of the incidents of war, and the Government of the United States is neither legally nor equitably obliged to pay the claim mentioned in the bill. I believe we ought not to pay it.

If gentlemen would come here and as a matter of charity ask us to aid in building up that institution, I might deem it my duty to render it assistance. But I would much rather give this money out and out as charity than establish the precedent which we should establish by the passage of this claim.

Mr. LEE. Mr. Chairman, I think I can remove the doubts from the mind of my friend from Michigan [Mr. BREWER], whom I know to be a most fair and just man.

The State of Virginia, if I recollect aright, passed her ordinance of secession on the 23d of May, 1861, and these lines were established by the Federal troops on the 24th. This domain was just as much a part of the United States as territory lying on the north side of the Potomac. Federal courts were held there during the whole war. It was the seat of the restored government of Virginia, and the Government of the United States has paid for the use of property in the city of Alexandria as in the city of Washington.

Mr. O'FERRALL. And the governor of the reorganized State of Virginia lived at Alexandria.

Mr. LEE. Yes, sir; the governor lived there; and it was just as much a part of the Federal domain as the State which my friend from Michigan represents on this floor.

Mr. BOWDEN. And that portion of the State had a Senator in Congress.

Mr. LEE. Yes, sir; a Senator and a Representative.

Mr. BREWER. Though the jurisdiction of the United States may have extended at that time over that portion of the country, and though courts of the United States were held there, were they not held under the protection of the United States troops?

Mr. TAULBEE. The case was the same in Kentucky.

Mr. WISE. And in Washington.

Mr. LEE. I will ask the gentleman from Michigan whether the courts in Washington City and in Pennsylvania were not protected by United States troops? Suppose the United States Army had been overcome, could United States courts have been held even in Illinois? Now, I am dealing in facts. This territory was held by the United States Government.

Mr. BREWER. I remember the fate of Ellsworth. Talk about "loyalty" in Alexandria!

Mr. LEE. I did not raise that question. I am stating the facts as I believe them to have existed.

Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. I wish to ask the gentlemen from Virginia whether this seminary, at the time it was taken possession of by the United States, was owned by private individuals or by a corporation organized under the laws of Virginia. If it was owned by private individuals, then I want the gentleman to tell me where they were at that time and what they were doing. I desire these questions answered, in order that I may vote intelligently on this question of compensation.

Mr. LEE. As I understand, this institution was a corporation, and these gentlemen who were the corporators and trustees were ministers of the Gospel.

Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. Was it a public or a private corporation?

Mr. LEE. Public, I suppose.

Mr. O'FERRALL. No; private.

Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. A private corporation, like other private schools.

Mr. LEE. No, sir; it was a theological seminary of the Episcopal Church, and I will say to my friend——

Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. I want to get at the facts of this case; that is all. I would like, if I can do so consistently and justly, to vote for paying every dollar here asked.

Mr. LEE. I am undertaking to give the gentleman the facts. I am not aware that a Confederate soldier ever crossed the grounds of this theological seminary; and I am confident that no Confederate soldier ever did so from the 24th of May, the day after the secession of Virginia, until the institution was returned to the trustees.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Would not Confederate soldiers have crossed those grounds but for a line of Federal troops which prevented them?

Mr. LEE. Certainly; and but for such a "line of Federal troops" they would have crossed into Pennsylvania, into New York, into Illinois. Nothing but that "line of Federal troops" prevented them from doing so.

Mr. JACKSON. I supposed that the Confederates "only asked to be let alone."

Mr. LEE. That was the theory of secession; but when the war was carried into our territory, we "carried the war into Africa."

A MEMBER. You did the best you could.

Mr. LEE. The Government has already paid for the use of other property which it occupied in the city of Alexandria; and I recall an instance in my own neighborhood, 9 miles west of Alexandria, where a farmer named Armes, who, I believe, was afterward a distinguished soldier of the United States Army, was paid for damage done upon his farm by United States troops.

It seems to me this institution occupies a peculiar position from the fact that it was not sectional, that there was no politics in it. The statistics will show that its alumni have come from every portion of this Union; and that, in point of fact, since the inauguration of the institution more of its graduates have come from Northern States than from Southern.

Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I want to vote intelligently on the pending proposition. For one, I am prepared to vote, where corporations are interested and represented only as such, and fairly and squarely to give compensation, if any good ground can be shown for it; but I am frank to say that I am opposed to giving any compensation to any individuals who deliberately went into the rebellion. I wish to put to the gentleman from Virginia just one question.

Mr. LEE. Certainly.

Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. Can he tell us where the faculty of this college, where the trustees were during the entire war? Were they on the Union side, or were they on the side of the Confederacy? If they were on the other side, I want to know it.

Mr. LEE. How do you want to know it?

Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. If they were on the side of the rebellion, I want to know it.

Mr. LEE. Why, sir, they were ministers of the Gospel.

Mr. BURROWS. How did they pray? [Great laughter.]

Mr. LEE. They prayed to God for all sinners. [Laughter.]

Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. I do not wish unnecessarily to interrupt the gentleman from Virginia. I believe those gentlemen who were ministers prayed, and prayed as they thought right. But the question I wish to ask, and which I have asked is, did they go into active hostilities against the Government, and did the trustees of this college go into active hostilities against the Government?

I wish to know, further, whether this was a private institution, where the proceeds went into the pockets of the stockholders, or was it a public institution endowed by and maintained by the State of Virginia. For, sir, it makes a great difference with me if the men who owned it went into the rebellion, for in that case they are not entitled to anything. But if they were acting simply as trustees, it is an open question whether anything should be paid, and whether the Government of the United States should pay it.

Mr. LEE. I wish to say these trustees, so far as I know, were within the Federal lines—a great majority of them—during the war, and that their prayers were offered for all sinners and for those who had spitefully used them. [Laughter.]

Mr. BURROWS. I did not understand the gentleman's last remark.

Mr. LEE. They prayed for all sinners and those who had spitefully used them. [Laughter.]

Mr. GROSVENOR. What is it that brings such an interesting crowd as is collected around the gentleman from Virginia while he is advocating the adoption of this amendment? This is but a private bill upon its face. I oppose this amendment, and put my opposition on several distinct and independent grounds. The first is, claims such as this ought not to be considered together with the claims in this bill. They ought to be kept in separate and distinct classes, and we ought not to decide a question having such far-reaching importance as the one under consideration in connection with a bill which ostensibly and in fact only attempts to deal with quartermaster's and commissary stores taken by the Government for the use of the Government. One of the requirements we have made in all these cases is that the property should belong to these two general classes, and should have been taken for the use of the Government. My own opinion is based upon the principle——

Mr. LEE. Will the gentleman let me ask him a question?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Yes, sir.

Mr. LEE. Suppose this college had been on the north side of the Potomac, would he have objected?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I will give my opinion on that in a moment, and the gentleman has only anticipated me in asking it. From one end of the country to the other, right through the district in which I live, school-houses and churches, everything within a radius of miles in extent, were taken in the summer of 1863, and occupied by the Government for quartering its troops and for the care of its sick. They were seized by the rebels under General Morgan. They were taken possession of promiscuously, just as the open-air bivouac of the Army was taken, and no one was paid a single cent, or thought of such a thing. That was in Ohio, a State which did not go out of the Union. I am putting the opposition to this claim upon the particular ground that the Government has never paid such a claim as this, and never ought to touch such a claim as this. What do we open up here?

Mr. LEE. How long were those buildings occupied in Ohio?

Mr. GROSVENOR. The length of time of occupation reflects upon the value of the rent, and not the essence and quality of the claim.

Mr. O'FERRALL. Were they occupied forty-eight hours?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Some were occupied for six weeks, some for forty-eight hours, and some for a much less time.

Mr. LEE. Did Morgan stay there for six weeks?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Morgan did not stay there for six weeks, but he left many who staid longer. [Laughter.] If you were there you did not happen to remain, but some of your friends did stay for a long time. [Renewed laughter.]

Go across the river and down to Shiloh Church, and from there to Savannah, or Nashville, and Chattanooga—and right here, Mr. Chairman, I wish to state that if there is a claim in the whole category of claims that in my opinion is just against this Government, it lies in Chattanooga, for the occupation and destruction of the Catholic church there; and if there is one that I would vote for, it is that one. But all of these places, and hundreds of others, present just similar claims to this, and we have never paid them. We have gone on for more than a quarter of a century without paying one, so far as I know. Where, then, is the line to be drawn?

The principle is here; it is directly involved in this bill; the principle is involved in the smallest eleemosynary institution throughout the South that the Union Army took possession of during the whole of that period. And when we begin by paying for one of them, the same principle will make good claims for rent for every camp we occupied from the Ohio to the sea.

I have been quite interested to hear the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. LEE] speak of the character of the men composing this organization and the sacredness of this claim.

If it was a corporation under the laws of Virginia for public purposes, surely it could not ask to be exempted from the effect of the acts of the State of Virginia itself when it went out of the Union, or wherever it did go, God only knows where, and the courts have never been able to settle it. If it was a corporation for public purposes, chartered by the State of Virginia, it is affected by the action of the State. If it is a private corporation for private purposes, then so far as the question of loyalty is concerned it is affected by the political character of the owners of the institution themselves.

But, sir, it is not worth while to discuss that question, or to talk of these men being ministers of the Gospel and without politics. The preachers in the South during the war had something, some influence, call it what you will, that put more deviltry into the minds and the hearts of the people of that country than any other one single agency or all other agencies combined; and it is not worth while to screen an institution over which ministers presided by throwing over it the halo of their priestly or ghostly character.

I was sorry to hear the distinguished gentleman from Virginia say he thought and hoped that the time had now come when the animosities of the war had so far passed away that such questions would have no weight, and that money considerations would be granted now in such cases that would not have been granted in years gone by.

Mr. LEE. Will the gentleman permit me?

Mr. GROSVENOR. If that is all that is to be gained by the passing away of the animosities of the war, it is hardly worth while to argue the question further. Questions of patriotism and love of country are to have no weight. But it seems to me that that is a remark so sordid in character that the gentleman could scarcely have deliberated upon its force, and must have unintentionally delivered it.

Mr. LEE. Will the gentleman permit me?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Certainly.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. CUTCHEON took the floor and yielded to Mr. GROSVENOR.

Mr. LEE. I hope the gentleman from Ohio will permit me a moment.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Certainly.

Mr. LEE. The money consideration involves an act of justice. I said I thought it was an act of justice.

Mr. GROSVENOR. And yet the act of justice is worked out through an appropriation bill.

Mr. LEE. Well, let the gentleman from Ohio construe his own actions and not impugn those of others.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I do not; and the declaration of the gentleman relieves the amendment of the gentleman from the imputation that he was hopeful that the time had come when the animosities of war have so far passed away——

Mr. LEE. That we could now do an act of justice.

Mr. GROSVENOR. That an appropriation could be made. The gentleman now says that an act of justice might be done. I say that these acts of justice require an appropriation to be made. I draw no line of distinction upon such questions.

Now, can we not meet this question upon its own merits? Is it necessary that this bill, covering as it does a line of claims about which there seems to be no contention, should be loaded down with a proposition so fraught with ultimate consequences as this question? It seems to me that if this bill stood here upon its own merits it would not last five minutes; and it seems further that it is a strong suggestion against the justice of the bill that it is sought to be put on here as an amendment upon a bill that everybody seems in favor of the immediate passage of, that it should so hamper and delay it.

Mr. LEE. Mr. Chairman, I shall content myself with calling the attention of the gentleman to a few cases where the same principle has been recognized by the Government. I hold in my hands a brief which shows that claims for compensation were paid for damages for the use and occupancy by the Government of the United States of the property of Joseph Segar, near Fortress Monroe, Va. The University of Kentucky was paid for in the same way, as well as the University of East Tennessee. There is also the case that I called attention to a little while ago, the property of J. G. Armes, for which the Government paid $9,500 for damages, near Annandale, about 9 miles west of Alexandria.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Was not Joseph Segar, to whom the gentleman alludes, a loyal man during the war, and was he not a member of Congress?

Mr. LEE. He was.

Mr. BOWDEN. He was, and was recognized by the very Government that held this portion of the State where this claim comes from. He was elected under laws passed by that Legislature.

Mr. LEE. The only point I make is that the Government has already paid for the use of buildings occupied by its Army under similar circumstances. I could cite other instances from this same document I hold in my hand. Why, therefore, discriminate against this Christian institution? That is the point in my mind. They paid damages in the city of Alexandria, in the county of Fairfax, and around Norfolk.

Mr. REED. Give us a description of those cases.

Mr. LEE. There was the case of Segar, who was compensated for damages during the war.

Mr. REED. He was a loyal man.

Mr. LEE. Yes, sir.

Mr. REED. In what way did the United States take possession of the property in that case? What is the gentleman from Virginia reading from?

Mr. LEE. From a brief prepared in this case.

Mr. BOWDEN. The claim was for the use and occupation of the old Hygeia Hotel at Norfolk. I know that the claimant received compensation from Congress. I do not know that there was any contract.

Mr. LEE. There is also the case of the East Tennessee University, where there was a bill passed by both Houses of Congress. There was a case from Kentucky, also. You could extend the list of those cases ad libitum if you would look them up.

Mr. REED. You can not extend them ad libitum. You can find a few cases where this was done; but if the United States undertakes to pay for losses of property incurred during the war, the surplus in the Treasury will not remain long.

Mr. LEE. I have endeavored to make the matter plain. This was part of the United States territory during the war.

Mr. REED. It was all United States territory during the war.

Mr. LEE. It was within the lines and occupation of the United States.

Mr. REED. The United States were not likely to occupy anything that was not in their lines. They occupied the territory as far as they went down.

Mr. LEE. Precisely; as far as they could conquer they occupied.

Mr. REED. And you think the United States Government ought to pay rent in those cases?

Mr. LEE. I do not say so. But I say this was within the lines of the United States. I do not say you should pay anything for rent south of Alexandria; and if there is any bill for that purpose I am ignorant of it. This was a part of the United States territory during the whole war, and the United States Government occupied these buildings precisely as they occupied the city of Washington.

Mr. O'FERRALL. I suggest also that the Legislature which gave consent for the formation of the State of West Virginia sat in Alexandria, and that West Virginia owes its existence as a State to an act of the Legislature sitting in Alexandria.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Will the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. LEE] yield for a question?

Mr. LEE. Yes, sir.

Mr. GROSVENOR. What effect, in his judgment, did the ordinance of secession passed by the State of Virginia and the subsequent acts of the people of Virginia have upon the political relation of Virginia to the United States?

Mr. LEE. I will say they had nothing to do with it so far as this particular territory is concerned.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Then, as I understand the gentleman, the ordinance of secession only operated on so much of the territory of Virginia as was occupied by the Confederate army?

Mr. LEE. Certainly.

Mr. GROSVENOR. And then as rapidly as the Confederate army was driven off the State established its relations to the Union?

Mr. LEE. So far as the United States Government could hold it.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Then the ordinance of secession was not a political step, but merely a declaration of war?

Mr. LEE. I do not wish to be led into a discussion of that question. I do not think it is germane to this subject.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has expired.

Mr. CUTCHEON rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that debate on the pending amendment and upon the pro forma amendment is exhausted.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I move to strike out the last three words.

Mr. HOLMAN. I rise to a question of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOLMAN. I make the point of order that the five-minute rule does not apply to the consideration of this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana makes the point of order that the House having placed no limit on the general debate on this bill, the five-minute rule is not operative.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to say a single word on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. HOLMAN. There is no general rule on the subject except the hour rule; but the House may limit the debate by applying the five-minute rule. Unless the House has limited the debate to five minutes, the hour rule necessarily applies. That limit can only be imposed by the House. There is no authority in the Committee of the Whole to fix any limit except the hour rule.

The CHAIRMAN. This bill, as the present occupant of the chair understands from the record, was under consideration during a portion of last Friday. General debate was had on the bill for a considerable length of time; and without any formal action, either by the House or the committee, the committee entered on the consideration of the bill by paragraphs. And the Chair holds that the committee having entered on the consideration of the bill by paragraphs for amendment and debate, it is subject to the five-minute rule, and that the hour rule does not apply after the reading of the bill has been begun. The Chair therefore overrules the point of order made by the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I agree with what has already been said that no more far-reaching measure has been called to the attention of the House in this Congress than this amendment. And it appears to me there is nothing in this amendment to discriminate it from the great mass of war claims which, if they should be presented here and receive attention and be passed, would be sufficient to bankrupt the Treasury over and over again.

Something has been said here in the course of this debate in regard to the subsidence of the animosity of the war. So far as I am concerned, I have no animosities remaining from that struggle. This to me is not a question of animosity or prejudice. It is simply a question of public law; a question whether or no claims can be preferred here for damage occurring within the lines of the Army when war was flagrant in the immediate vicinity.

If the position taken by the distinguished gentleman from Virginia [Mr. LEE] is tenable, then a claim can be preferred for the use and occupation of every camp-ground on which the armies of the Union passed a night from the time they crossed the Ohio River until they reached Savannah, after their march across Georgia; because as fast as they advanced the territory was brought within Federal domination, and, according to the judgment of the gentleman from Virginia, within Federal jurisdiction.

What are the facts surrounding this case? At the very time when the use and occupation of these premises commenced by our troops they were in the immediate vicinity of the armies on both sides; they were situated within the State of Virginia, which had already declared its secession from the Union. The questions presented by my friend from Ohio on my right [Mr. GROSVENOR], as to the nature and effect of that declaration of secession, I think are exceedingly pertinent. So far as it was possible for Virginia to affect the status of this property, this property was within a seceded State.

It is claimed by the other gentleman from Virginia [Mr. O'FERRALL] that there was at that time recognized within the State of Virginia a government which was loyal to the United States and which gave its assent to the formation of the new State of West Virginia, but it does not seem to me that, as a matter of public law, that affects the question of the status of this property within a seceded State. It was within a seceded State; it was occupied by the Union Army for purposes of war; and I remember very well that pending the campaign of 1876, when the late Mr. Tilden was the candidate of the Democratic party, and this question of war claims was being pressed all along the line, Mr. Tilden felt compelled to publish a letter (which I have not seen for years and which I speak of only from memory) in which he declared that no government ever had recognized, and no government ever could recognize, the duty or obligation of paying claims arising from the ravages of war or from the use and occupation of property by its armies.

If the principle of this bill, or this amendment, can be sustained, then there is absolutely nothing to prevent the preferring and the allowing of claims for the use and occupation of all manner of real estate in the Confederacy. The owners of the battle-ground at Manassas could present a bill for the trespass of the Union Army upon their property.

Mr. STEWART, of Vermont. Use and occupation.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Yes, they could present a bill for use and occupation of their property; and so claims might be made for every battle-ground; for every tree destroyed by cannon shot; for the digging and the construction of rifle-pits and breastworks; for every possible form of "use and occupation." I can see nothing in the use of this property. I can see nothing in the circumstances that surround the use of this property that discriminates it from the great mass of property which was occupied and used for purposes of war.

I appeal to gentlemen to consider well the principle of law that is involved before they admit this entering wedge which will open the door of our Treasury to claims amounting to millions, and hundreds and possibly thousands of millions of dollars.

Mr. SPOONER. I wish the gentleman would state what distinction he finds between this claim and other claims for the use of property in Alexandria that have been paid.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I am not sufficiently well advised in regard to those claims to answer the gentleman's question.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. Mr. Chairman, I hold in my hand a report made at the second session of the Forty-ninth Congress by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON], from which report I discover that the trustees of this seminary, when they demanded the return of the property from the Government, were required to take the oath of allegiance. At that time they were not demanding compensation; they did not know but the property had been confiscated by the Government. The Government had had possession of it and had taken good care of it, and after the war these men, when they returned from the South, I suppose, had come and demanded possession. But before they did that, they voluntarily took the oath of allegiance. The bishop made that statement when he made application for the return of the property. If, therefore, it be true that we are only professing to pay the claims of loyal men, there can be no pretense that these men were loyal, for this report shows that they were disloyal. They had been within the Confederate lines, and before they made their application for the restoration of the property they stepped forward and took the oath of allegiance. This report shows that they were not loyal. I doubt very much whether there was a loyal man in that city of Alexandria. I have heard that there was not, and, so far as I know, there was not. I think this claim ought not to be allowed, under these circumstances, unless some explanation can be made of this report which came from the other side of the House in the last Congress.

Mr. LEE. I would say to my friend that it is not likely that the Surgeon-General of the Army would have recommended the payment of this claim unless it was a proper one; and further, I have heard, and I believe it to be true, that Secretary Stanton himself said that although he would not recommend the payment of damages, he would recommend the payment of rent.

Mr. LONG. Is this $20,000 for rent?

Mr. LEE. Yes, sir, for rent.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. I do not see that in Secretary Stanton's order.

Mr. LEE. I can not say positively that he so stated, but I have heard that he did, and I believe it to be true.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. Chairman, my attention was called originally to this claim by letters which I received from Episcopal clergymen, and other persons connected with the Episcopal Church, who felt an interest in this seminary, in which some of them had been educated, and which, as they assured me in their letters, had been supported by Northern as well as Southern funds. I could understand that they felt the same interest in this institution that they would have felt in a similar institution located in any of the Northern States.

It seems to me that the distinction made by the gentleman from Virginia between this claim and other claims which have been referred to, claims for the occupation of property in States which were in rebellion, is well taken. As the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. LEE] has said, this seminary was situated in that part of Virginia which was within the Union lines from the beginning to the end of the war. This property was occupied in the same manner in which property was occupied in the Northern States. It was within the Union lines, not within the lines of the Confederacy, from the date of the passage of the secession ordinance of Virginia until the close of the war.

Mr. WISE. And was so recognized by the Government.

Mr. SPOONER. And was so recognized, I am told, by the Government.

Mr. MILLIKEN. And did not that portion of Virginia have a loyal Representative in Congress during the entire war?

Mr. SPOONER. Yes, sir; as I am informed, there was a Representative in Congress from that portion of Virginia during the entire war.

Mr. WISE. And they also had Senators here.

Mr. JACKSON. Did they not have representatives at Richmond during the war, in both the senate and the house?

Mr. LEE. No, sir.

Mr. SPOONER. I can not say whether that was so or not. If so, those representatives were certainly unauthorized. It seems to me that this case is very clearly distinguished from other cases which have been referred to. I believe that this claim ought to be paid, and therefore I shall vote in favor of the amendment.

Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that common fairness and honesty require that the Government of the United States should pay for the use and occupation of these buildings from the close of the war till the time when they were vacated by the Government. No pertinent reason has been presented against the payment of the claim to this extent.

As to paying for the use of these buildings for the period before the close of the war, if they were held by the Federal Government by means of an armed force and in that way only were kept from the hands of the Confederates, a very different question is presented. In the southern portion of our country during the war churches and school-houses were occupied at one time by Union troops and at another by Confederates, just as the wave of battle surged one way or the other. It will never be possible to pay claims for the use and occupation of buildings which were in the midst of hostile territory. The same principle applies to all property so close to the dividing line as that now in question—property which was simply held by the power of Federal bayonets. While I am in favor of paying for the use of these buildings every dollar that it was worth from the time the war closed until the Government vacated them, I am not prepared to pay for the period during which the property was held by the force of arms.

Mr. SPOONER. The "wave of battle" never rolled over Fairfax Seminary.

Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. I recognize that fact; but I recognize also the reason—because Federal bayonets prevented it.

Mr. LONG. Suppose this property had been in the city of Washington, would not your argument apply equally well? Was not property in the city of Washington equally protected by Federal bayonets?

Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. The argument does not apply equally in the two cases, for the reason that in respect to this property in Virginia the Federal troops could not at any time during the war have fallen back from their lines for twenty minutes without the ground being occupied by the Confederate soldiers. In other words, this seminary was upon the picket lines between the two armies.

Mr. LONG. How was it in Washington?

Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. Washington was never on the picket-lines. There was never a day or an hour, except once, when the capital was in danger. But Fairfax Seminary was directly on the picket-lines. Now, as we had to hold it by force of Federal bayonets, I say this seminary occupies the same position as would a seminary in Georgia or Alabama. But if these buildings were occupied by the Government after the war closed let us be honest and pay for their use.

Mr. LEE. Fairfax was the picket-line of Washington.

Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. In military parlance that is true.

Mr. LEE. It protected Washington.

Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. But, I say again that if the Federal troops had been at any time during the war withdrawn for twenty minutes, that territory would have been occupied by Confederate soldiers. That was not the case in Washington. We removed troops from Washington and we brought them back again; but the Confederate soldiers did not suppose that, because troops were removed, they could rush in here.

Mr. LEE. If at any moment the picket-line at Fairfax had been raised, Washington would have been invaded.

Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. I think the distinction is perfectly plain. I want to do justice. Let us pay for the use of these buildings after the war closed; and let us pay for their use during the war, unless it is the fact, as I maintain, that they were held simply and solely by Federal bayonets. This being the case, we ought to adopt the same rule as we would with reference to buildings in Georgia or Alabama, right in the midst of the territory of the rebellion. That is fair.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I ask unanimous consent that debate on the pending amendment be considered as closed.

Mr. HOLMAN. I suggest that ten minutes more be allowed.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I understand the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] wants to occupy only one minute and another gentleman two. Suppose we say three minutes.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let it be five minutes.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Very well.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] asks unanimous consent that debate upon the pending amendment be considered closed in five minutes. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask the other section of the law be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. The jurisdiction of said court shall not extend to nor include any claim against the United States growing out of the destruction or damage to property by the Army or Navy during the war for the suppression of the rebellion, nor for the use and occupation of real estate by any part of the military or naval forces of the United States in the operations of said forces during the said war at the seat of war; nor shall the said court have jurisdiction of any claim against the United States which is now barred by virtue of the provisions of any law of the United States.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I think it is very clear the Court of Claims has palpably disregarded the provisions of that statute, and if these appropriations are to be opened up I hope the committee will adopt the following addition, which I propose as an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, however, That this appropriation shall not be construed as recognizing the liability of the United States to pay for the use and occupation of property by the United States Army at the seat of war during the late war.

Mr. GROSVENOR. That is not necessary, and will have no effect. We are establishing a precedent, and it is not worth while to put in a disclaimer of why you pay rent for the use of certain real estate.

Mr. LEE. I have no objection to the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana, and hope it will be accepted.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I have no objection to it, but I say this amendment will not have any effect whatever except to quiet the consciences of some gentlemen who desire to vote for this amendment. In one breath you pay for the use of property under these circumstances, and say in the next breath you do not intend thereby to do the thing you have done. [Cries of "Vote!"]

The question recurred on Mr. HOLMAN'S amendment to the amendment.

Mr. HOOKER. The gentleman from Virginia accepts the amendment to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has not the power to accept the amendment to the amendment. It is only in the power of the House to pass upon the amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN'S amendment to the amendment was disagreed to.

The question recurred on Mr. LEE'S amendment.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 102, noes 64.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RICHARDSON. In line 56 of the bill on page 3, the name "Thomas F. Perkins," should be stricken out and "W. P. Wilson" inserted in lieu thereof, as administrator of Eliza M. Dawson, deceased. Mr. Perkins is dead. I move that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RICHARDSON. In lines 19 and 20 "to John M. Campbell, of Gibson County, Tennessee, $1,046.50" was stricken out. I yield in reference to that claim to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that lines 19 and 20 stricken out of the bill upon the report of the Southern Claims Commission, that the claimant was disloyal, be reinstated. The Committee on War Claims, on inquiry, gave no information to the committee on that subject. I have made personal inquiry in relation to the matter, and have become satisfied he was loyal during the war. I went to the Court of Claims and examined the evidence on that point, and am satisfied he was loyal. He went to the North, to Illinois, during the war, and remained. Having done this claimant an injury, I ask the lines be restored.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Chairman, early this afternoon, when the case of John R. McKinnie was reached, my friend from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] made the point that the findings of the Court of Claims did not show affirmatively the loyalty of the claimant. I made a statement at that time which will probably be remembered by the committee. I ask to have read now in support of that statement a certificate under seal from the Court of Claims.

The Clerk read as follows:

In the Court of Claims. John R. McKinnie, administrator of David McKinnie, vs. The United States. Congressional case No. 364.

At a Court of Claims held in the city of Washington on the 18th January, 1886, the following finding as to loyalty of David McKinnie was filed:

This case being a claim for supplies or stores taken or furnished to the military forces of the United States for their use during the late war for the suppression of the rebellion, the court, on a preliminary inquiry, finds that the claimant's intestate, David McKinnie, was loyal to the Government of the United States throughout said war.

JOHN RANDOLPH,
Assistant Clerk Court of Claims.

Mr. WASHINGTON. I wish to ask unanimous consent to offer an amendment to this bill to restore lines 92 and 93, heretofore stricken out; and I send to the desk the report of the Court of Claims in support of the motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the proposed amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Restore lines 92 and 93, as follows:
"To Duncan Marr, of Montgomery County, Tennessee, $9,424."

Mr. WASHINGTON. I ask the Clerk to read the findings of the Court of Claims.

The Clerk read as follows:

Court of Claims. Duncan Marr vs. The United States. Congressional case No. 19.

At a Court of Claims held in the city of Washington on the 10th day of January, A. D. 1887, the court filed the following finding as to loyalty, to wit:

This case, being a claim for supplies or stores taken or furnished to the military forces of the United States for their use during the late war for the suppression of the rebellion, the court, on a preliminary inquiry, finds that the claimant was loyal to the Government of the United States throughout said war.

And at a Court of Claims held in the city of Washington on the 9th day of May, A. D. 1887, the court filed the following findings of fact, to wit:

The claim in the above-entitled suit having been transmitted to this court by the Committee on War Claims of the House of Representatives on the 27th day of February, 1884, and the Attorney-General having appeared for the defendants, and the suit having been brought to a hearing on the 26th day of January, 1887, the court, upon the proofs and evidence and after hearing Gilbert Moyers and D. W. Glassie, esqs., of counsel for the claimant, and Lewis Cochran, esq., of counsel for the defendants, finds the following facts:

I.

The claimant sets up and seeks to recover for the following property taken and used by the Army or officers of the United States, and for public purposes:

7,800 cords of wood, at $2 per cord	$15,600
78,000 brick, at $9 per thousand	702
Total	16,302
And for the use and occupation of 180 acres of land for two years, at $540 per annum	1,080
Aggregate total	17,382

II.

This claim is for wood, for brick, and for the occupation of the claimant's farm near Clarksville, Tenn.

The Quartermaster's Department caused the claim to be carefully investigated and the wood-land to be surveyed.

The amount of wood taken by officers of the Quartermaster's Department, by officers for the use of the freedman's camp, and by officers for fortifications, was 9,837 cords; of which the Quartermaster-General has paid for 2,037 cords; leaving unpaid 7,800 cords, of the value of $1 per cord, or $7,800.

There was likewise taken by the above officers 190,000 brick, of which the Quartermaster-General has paid for 112,000 at $8 a thousand, leaving 78,000, which, at $8 a thousand, were worth $624.

The claimant's farm near Clarksville, consisting of 180 acres, was occupied for more than two years subsequent to January 1, 1863, as a rendezvous camp, a refugees' camp, a camp for freedmen, and a burial ground. The occupancy was under officers of the United States. The reasonable value of the use and occupation for two years was $2,080.

SUMMARY.

7,800 cords of wood, at $1	$7,800
78,000 brick, at $8 per thousand	624
Use and occupation 180 acres land two years, at $540	1,080
	9,424

By the court.

JOHN RANDOLPH,
Assistant Clerk Court of Claims.

Mr. BLAND. I wish to ask if we are not considering in this bill claims that have been certified up by the Court of Claims?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands this to be a case of that character. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to restore to the bill the lines which have been stricken out during the preceding part of the day and which have been read by the Clerk. Is there objection to the consideration of the amendment?

Mr. BLAND. What is the paragraph?

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will again report the lines proposed to be restored to the bill.

The proposed amendment was again read.

Mr. BLAND. I understand that was stricken from the bill on motion to-day.

Mr. RICHARDSON. No; let me correct the gentleman. This is not a motion really to insert what has been stricken out by the committee. When I presented the bill, not having the findings of the Court of Claims before me, I erased this name. Now the findings are here, they are regular in form, and I see no objection whatever to inserting this paragraph in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to considering the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. HOLMAN. Permit me to make an inquiry first. I notice that there is an item there for occupation and rent. According to the precedents that item, for rent, ought to be omitted, I suppose.

The CHAIRMAN. The first question is, Will the committee agree to consider the amendment?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask the House to indulge me for a moment. I wish just to say to the gentleman from Tennessee that this claim has clearly been before the Quartermaster-General under the act of the 4th of July, 1864. But I will not press that point. It embraces, however, the item of rent or occupation, which, I suggest, ought not to be contained in the bill.

Mr. WASHINGTON. Mr. Chairman, as this item does include, agreeably to the findings of the Court of Claims, $1,080 for the use and occupancy of this gentleman's farm for a period covering more than two years, for the use of a freedmen's camp, and as the Government refused to pay claims of that character, I agree that that portion shall be stricken from the bill, if such be the sense of the committee, leaving it then to stand only to pay him for the actual supplies taken and used for the Army. If the gentleman desires to offer that amendment I shall not object.

Mr. HOLMAN. Then I suggest that as an amendment to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment to the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out from the claim the sum of $1,080 for rent, so that the total shall read: "$8,344."

Mr. GROSVENOR addressed the Chair.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I desire to inquire of the Chair if the opportunity to object to the amendment is still open.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee is before the committee. The Chair would suggest that if the gentlemen who are interested in the passage of this bill will be seated and cease conversation on the floor much valuable time will be saved.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I do not understand, under the precedents we have set, and I suppose will be bound by, that we will make any distinction between a disloyal college and a loyal citizen of the United States in regard to the rental of property the Government has got the benefit of. It has been argued, and I suppose it is decided by the committee, that when the Union Army was able to take possession of so much of the Commonwealth of Virginia as lay in the region of Fairfax County the ordinance of secession was not operative in that territory, and it was all the time thereafter within the Union lines.

Now, I take it, the county in Tennessee in which Clarksville was located, was not operated on any differently by the presence of Union troops than the county of Fairfax in Virginia was.

Mr. WASHINGTON. If the gentleman from Ohio will allow me, I will withdraw my amendment, as it is now getting late and the hour for a recess has nearly arrived.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Then I will go on with my speech on the whole bill. I am obliged to the gentleman from Tennessee; he sees the point of my argument.

When the Union Army penetrated into Tennessee, as I understand the decision of the committee, it became thereby Union territory, and thereafter it was at all times during the war occupied by the Union troops. I take it, then, that all the claims for camping ground are opened up by this decision; for I do not suppose the Union Army occupied as a camping ground any territory they had not conquered or at least occupied. If, therefore, that changes the status of these claims and sets aside the principle we have so long adhered to, I deny there is any difference in the effect of our occupation of an academy, a church, a school-house, or a loyal man's farm.

It occurs to me a loyal Tennesseean, upon whose land we camped and whose property we despoiled thereby, ought to be at this late day as much an object of the consideration and justice of this Government as a corporation which now comes here under the shield of corporate existence.

Mr. TAULBEE. I rise to a question of order. We can not hear the remarks of the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I have made my speech and have spoken as loud as I could.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] to the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. WASHINGTON].

Mr. PERKINS. I understood the whole amendment was withdrawn.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio was on the floor and the gentleman from Tennessee did not have the floor for the purpose of withdrawing his amendment. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana to the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. I move that the committee rise and report the bill as amended to the House, with the recommendation that it do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker pro tempore having resumed the chair, Mr. HATCH reported that the Committee of the Whole House having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 2952) for the allowance of certain claims for stores and supplies taken and used by the United States Army, as reported by the Court of Claims under the provisions of the act of March 3, 1883, known as the "Bowman act," had instructed him to report the same to the House with sundry amendments.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. I move the previous question on the amendments, and the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. BURROWS. I call for a separate vote on the amendment relating to the Episcopal Seminary.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I rise to a question of order. When the bill was last before the Committee of the Whole, the committee had proceeded with its consideration as far as the fifth item, for the relief of Henry Bazsinsky. A somewhat lengthy debate arose, and at the conclusion of that debate the Chair called for the reading of the next item. According to the RECORD, page 1461, the Clerk read the following item:

To W. H. Cook, sr., of St. Mary's Parish, Louisiana, $2,085.

The next item was not that one; it was this:

To the corporation of the Roman Catholic clergymen of Maryland, $4,035.50.

That item seems never to have been considered in the Committee of the Whole at all. There is nothing in the RECORD or in my recollection which tells me that item was ever considered. If it was, some gentleman can state so. If it was not, I raise the point that it is not in order to put that item on its passage, because it has never been considered in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. COMPTON. If I understand correctly, the gentleman from Michigan says it does not appear that that item was read.

Mr. CUTCHEON. According to my recollection it was never read or considered.

Mr. COMPTON. I only want to say this: whatever the RECORD may disclose, it is a fact that that item was read and was considered. About that there can be no sort of question. It was the only item in the bill in which I, as a representative of those people, had any particular interest, and I waited specially to hear it read, and to be assured that it was passed before I left the Hall, as I had been called out. I remained and heard it read.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I accept the statement of the gentleman. The point of order, therefore, will simply go to the correction of the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state for the information of the House that he ascertains that the paragraph was read. The Reading Clerk remembers that he read it, and the RECORD will be corrected as suggested by the gentleman from Michigan.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. FISHER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the following title, when the Speaker pro tempore signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 4756) to amend an act to restrict the ownership of real estate in the Territories to American citizens, etc., approved March 3, 1887.

CLAIMS UNDER THE BOWMAN ACT.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. STONE] has demanded the previous question on the engrossment and third reading of the pending bill.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. Speaker, at what hour will it be in order to ask for a separate vote upon the amendment?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman can designate the amendment on which he desires a separate vote. The question is on ordering the previous question.

Mr. BURROWS. Must not the vote on the amendment be taken before the previous question is ordered?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Not necessarily.

The question was taken on ordering the previous question; and there were—ayes 54, noes 59.

So the previous question was not ordered.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I understand that the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. STONE] does not object to a separate vote upon the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS].

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. No, I do not object to that.

Mr. BURROWS. Well, it is near 5 o'clock, and probably the bill had better go over for a week.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Let the previous question be ordered, and then we can take a vote in the morning.

Mr. BURROWS. No; that would bring it up to-morrow. Let it go over for a week.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. I demand tellers on ordering the previous question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has not yet put the question on the amendment.

Mr. BLAND. I move that the House adjourn.

Mr. NELSON. I call for the regular order, which is to take a recess at this hour.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair so understands. The hour of 5 o'clock having arrived, the House now takes a recess until half past 7 o'clock this evening.

EVENING SESSION.

The recess having expired, the House (at 7.30 p. m.) resumed its session.

The Clerk called the House to order, and read the following communication:

SPEAKER'S ROOM, HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., March 2, 1888.

Hon. WILLIAM D. BYNUM, of Indiana, is hereby designated to preside at the session of the House this evening.

S. S. COX, Speaker pro tempore.

To Hon. JNO. B. CLARK,
Clerk House of Representatives.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MATSON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of bills under the special order for the evening session.

The motion was agreed to. The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. DOCKERY in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole for the consideration of business under the special order, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That until further ordered, on each Friday at 5 o'clock p. m. the House shall take a recess until 7.30 p. m., and after the 15th day of April next until 8 p. m., at which evening sessions bills on the Private Calendar, granting pensions, reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions and the Committee on Pensions, and bills on the Private Calendar, reported from the Committee on the Judiciary, removing political disabilities, shall be considered; and no other business shall be transacted at such evening sessions, and the House shall adjourn on each of said evenings not later than 10.30 p. m.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the first bill.

JAMES A. BUCK.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 2218) to increase the pension of James A. Buck.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to increase the pension of James A. Buck, late private of Company E, One hundred and fifty-first Regiment of Illinois Volunteers, to $45 per month.

Mr. MATSON. Let the report be read.

The report (by Mr. MORRILL) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2218) to increase the pension of James A. Buck, submit the following report:

The claimant in this case is now receiving a pension of $30 per month for injury to the spine received while in service. Under existing laws there is no grade between that that he is now receiving for total inability to perform any manual labor and the disability requiring the constant aid and attendance of another person, rated at $50 per month. This soldier requires the personal aid of another a portion of the time each day. He is unable to dress or undress without assistance. He is fearfully deformed and is never free from pain, suffering intensely a great portion of the time. He is so bent over that in walking his face is on a level with his hips, and he is slowly but surely growing worse month by month. While the Pension Office can grant no relief because he does not require the constant personal aid and attention of another person, he is in much worse condition than the soldier who is simply unable to perform manual labor.

Your committee recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MALINDA VEST.

The next business upon the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 863) granting a pension to Malinda Vest.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Malinda Vest, widow of William Vest, late a private in Company F, of the Seventh Regiment of Provisional Enrolled Missouri Militia, and to pay her a pension from and after the passage of this act.

Mr. MATSON. Let the report be read.

The report (by Mr. WALKER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 863) granting a pension to Malinda Vest, submit the following report:

The files in this case show that claimant is the widow of William Vest, a private in Company H, Twenty-sixth Regiment Missouri Enrolled Militia. The records in the Third Auditor's Office disclose the fact that his regiment was ordered into active service September 15, 1862, and relieved from active duty February 4, 1863; that on the 1st of April, 1863, said Vest was detached in Company F, Seventh Regiment Missouri Enrolled Militia, and served in said company in active duty until the 13th of October, 1863, on which day he was killed by the enemy. On the 28th of March, 1864, she was paid by Maj. S. D. Mitchell, paymaster, for his services, including the day he was killed.

Claimant, in her statement, testifies the soldier was killed under the following circumstances: "Our house had been burned by the Confederates; my husband had come home by permission of his officers to see about a place for us to live and get something for us to eat, and while he was at home the Confederates attacked and captured him and killed him." The adjutant-general of Missouri certifies that "William Vest was a private in Company F of Seventh Missouri Enrolled Militia, served 196 days, and was killed October 13, 1863." This man gave his life to his country as surely as though he had fallen on the battle-field. There should be no hesitation in providing for his widow, who is now poor and destitute. Your committee recommend the passage of the bill.

Mr. TAULBEE. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have some explanation as to why this claim was not allowed in the Pension Office. I believe the case comes under the provisions of an act granting pensions to certain Missouri soldiers.

Mr. MORRILL. The limitation under that act expired on the 4th of July, 1874, and as the case of this lady was not presented until after that date, of course it could not be allowed in the Pension Office. Let me remind my friend from Kentucky also that I reported this case in the last Congress, and it then had his hearty support, as I am sure it will have now.

Mr. TAULBEE. Yes; the gentleman is right about that.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

EMILY B. NEWELL.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 442) granting a pension to Emily B. Newell.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is heveby, authorized and directed to place the name of Emily B. Newell, widow of Nathan F. Newell, late of Company A, Tenth Illinois Cavalry, on the pension-roll at the rate of $12 per month.

Mr. TAULBEE. Let the report in that case be read.

The report (by Mr. GALLINGER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred bill (H. R. 442) granting a pension to Emily B. Newell, having considered the same, beg leave to report:

Nathan F. Newell was a private in Company A, Tenth Illinois Cavalry, and alleged in his application for pension that on the 10th day of July, 1862, while under scouting orders and away from his company, between Jackson and Helena, Ark., in undertaking to jump his horse across a log he was violently thrown upon the pommel of his saddle, and received thereby a rupture and severe strain of back. He further alleged that he was treated by several surgeons of Iowa and Indiana regiments, whom he met on the march, and by plasters and other expedients adopted by himself.

The records show that soldier was discharged from service for disability September 10, 1862, two months after the alleged injury, the recommendation for discharge being dated August 20, 1862.

In addition to soldier's statement and the fact of his disability discharge from the service so soon after the alleged injury, there is on file a mass of testimony showing that soldier, who was a man of acknowledged integrity, immediately after discharge, and up to the time of his death, persistently claimed that the accident occurred as stated in his application, and the following medical certificate from A. H. Taft, M. D., furnishes strong presumptive evidence that he must at some time have received an injury similar to the one alleged:

"On or about July 10, 1875, I found him suffering from chronic inflammation of the bladder, cord of left testicle much elongated, the gland atrophied. For a few days used catheter to evacuate bladder. Was told by patient that while in the military service he was thrown forward upon the saddle, which was the cause of his disability. I have known and treated him to the present time (July, 1882). At present his disability is greater than when I first knew him. Urine passes involuntarily, he suffers much, and has lost flesh and strength."

The record shows that soldier was twice examined by order of the Department, and in both instances was rated for pension, the opinion being expressed by both surgeons that the disability did originate in the service.

The claim was rejected upon the ground of inability to furnish testimony of any one having personal knowledge to show origin in service of alleged injury.

Your committee are of opinion that this claim, which was in the hands of the notorious N. W. Fitzgerald, might have been allowed had it been prosecuted skillfully; at any rate, it is evident that it was rejected on purely technical grounds. Had it been allowed, the widow would have had the benefit of the pension from the date of the soldier's death to the present, as he clearly died from diseases which would naturally arise from an injury such as he claimed to have received. The widow is now in very feeble health and destitute circumstances, and your committee recommend that the bill do pass, thereby granting her some degree of relief in her advancing years.

Mr. TAULBEE. I would like to ask the gentleman of the committee who especially examined this case what evidence there is that the death of this soldier was the result of injuries received in the war.

Mr. GALLINGER. In reply to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. TAULBEE] I will say that, granting this soldier incurred the alleged disability, there would seem to be no ground of doubt from a medical standpoint that his death resulted from the injury received in the service. The only difficulty in the case was for him to prove the incurrence of the disability. At the time when it is stated to have occurred he was away on scouting orders with only one comrade, who shortly afterward died. The injury was received by this soldier, as he alleged, and as I believe, while he was away from his regiment. His statement was that he was treated by surgeons of regiments that he met on the way; but he could not show to the satisfaction of the Department that he did receive the wound as he claims, because no person who was with him at the time could testify to the fact. The committee thought the doubt was very largely in favor of the claimant, and therefore recommended the passage of the bill.

Mr. TAULBEE. The reading of the report convinced me, Mr. Chairman, that the disability spoken of had been incurred by the soldier in the service, and while in line of duty. The Pension Office, however, seems to have rejected the case by reason of some doubt on that point. I know something about the rigid rules of the Pension Office; and I would be disposed to concede that the injury was incurred as claimed.

But the question I asked was, how the disease with which the soldier died was related to the disability which appears to have been incurred. I do not believe the report states the disease of which the soldier died; nor is there any effort made in the report to connect the death of the soldier with the disability incurred, except by the expression of an opinion to that effect.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is barely possible that in drawing the report I omitted to state the cause of death, which was disease of the bladder.

Mr. TAULBEE. That is sufficient.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ought to have made that statement in the report. The testimony of Dr. Taft clearly shows the relation between the disease of which the soldier died and the injury which we believe to have been received by him in the service.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

LAURA A. WRIGHT.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 445) granting a pension to Laura A. Wright.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Laura A. Wright, widow of Charles H. Wright, late of Company B, Fourteenth Regiment New Hampshire Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. GALLINGER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 445) granting a pension to Laura A. Wright, having considered the same, respectfully report:

The claimant in this case, the widow of Charles H. Wright, who was pensioned for severe gunshot wound of the leg, presents a memorial as follows:

"To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled: Respectfully showeth that I, Laura A. Wright, of Langdon, in the county Sullivan and State of New Hampshire, am the widow of Charles H. Wright, late of Langdon, deceased; that said Wright was at the time of his decease pensioned under pension certificate No. 19983. That said Laura A. Wright applied for pension as widow of said Charles H. Wright under claim No. 329679, and said claim was rejected by the Commissioner of Pensions. She further stated that her said husband was pensioned for a gunshot wound in his leg. That early in the spring of each year (with the exception of the last year of his life) he would complain of severe pain in his limb for some one or two weeks, then a sore would break out, which would relieve the pain. The last spring of his life his limb commenced to pain him as usual, and continued to pain him to such extent that he could not sleep. The last night of his life I do not think he slept any; he complained that his limb pained him so it did not seem as though he could stand it. He got up earlier than usual, and said his limb pained him so he could not lie abed any longer, and would go out and milk; he was gone longer than usual; went out to see where he was, and found he had hung himself. This was the 25th day of June, 1884. Although a much longer time had elapsed since his limb commenced to pain him this last season, it did not break out into a sore as usual, and at the time he hung himself there was no sign of a sore. She further states that she is poor, and has a family of four children, all under fifteen years, dependent upon her for support. She therefore respectfully prays the honorable Congress will pass a special pension law granting her a pension as widow of Charles H. Wright, late of Company B, Fourteenth Regiment, New Hampshire Infantry, and your petitioner will ever pray, etc.

"Dated at Langdon, N. H., this 29th day of November, A. D. 1886.

"LAURA A. WRIGHT."

Claimant further testifies that for years the wound on soldier's leg, for which he was pensioned, had caused him much pain and suffering; that said wound was much of the time a running sore, and at other times it would heal and remain so for some months; that it usually broke out and ran in the spring of the year; that it was much more painful when healed than when it was a running sore; that last spring it did not break out, and was healed at the time of his death; that he had suffered more than usual for some months; that many a time it pained him so that he would leave the bed nights and lie on the lounge, for he would keep affiant awake by his restlessness; that he would say that the pain was almost more than he could bear; that the bone was diseased; that he did not employ a physician because they gave no relief; that his business was farming; that the day before his death he did his morning chores with the aid of his father, and he said that his leg was so bad that if said father would help him load some wood he would go to Charlestown, a few miles, with it, as he could ride and would not have to stand on his leg so much; that after his return from Charlestown in the afternoon he rode over to a neighbor's to see about a mowing-machine he was to have the next morning; that he came home and ate his supper; that his leg was paining him very badly; affiant wanted to bathe it, but he said nothing would reach the pain; that he often said that he thought the leg would have to be taken off; that the pain made him so nervous, and nothing did him any good; that during the night he had left the room where they slept, as he often did, without affiant knowing it, and in the morning he came in and stood by the bed; affiant asked him how he was; he said his leg was bad; that he took his vest and went down; that no other person saw him that morning but affiant; that her father was getting up and heard him when he went down from affiant's room. "I will go and milk," said her father. Soldier said, "No, I will," and went away to the barn, quite a distance, on what they called "the other place," where the stool was kept; no other one heard him speak; not returning in the usual time, said father went for him, and found him dead by his own hand; that his family relations were very pleasant and his financial affairs easy; that he was naturally of a cheerul disposition, but his continued constant suffering from the wound wore upon his nervous system until he sought relief, in his imagination, in death; that she can see no other cause for the act but temporary insanity from his pains; that there was no hereditary insanity.

Verified copy of the town record shows that the soldier committed suicide by hanging, June 25, 1884.

Dr. Leland G. Graves, Clermont, N. Y., testifies that he was the soldier's physician before the war, and after his discharge from the service up to about 1870, and saw him often after that up to the time of his death, and hardly ever saw him without talking with him about his troubles and advising him what to do for relief; that he suffered at times extreme pain from his wound; that a third or a quarter part of the time his wound was a running sore, and at such times the pain was less severe; that said wound was a gunshot wound of left leg below the knee, shattering the fibula and hitting the tibia; that it greatly disturbed his whole nervous system; that affiant often heard him say that his sufferings were so great that it seemed as if he could not stand them, that he should be crazy, and make use of similar expressions; knowing that his domestic relations were pleasant, that he was in easy financial circumstances, and of his great sufferings from his wounds, affiant was forced to the conclusion that temporary insanity caused him to commit suicide.

Dr. Graves further testifies that, so far as he knows, there was no hereditary insanity in his family; that he knew his mother for twenty years, but did not know any other member of his family; that in 1883, and up to his death in June, 1884, soldier's health was good, except the wound in his leg and its results; that he can not add anything further to his former affidavit.

The evidence in this case seems to be quite conclusive that soldier's death was the result of temporary insanity, induced by long-continued and excessive pain, although the Department did not recognize that fact and rejected the widow's application.

The Committee on Pensions of the Senate of the Forty-ninth Congress favorably reported this bill, and your committee are of the opinion that it deserves favorable consideration, and recommend that it do pass.

Mr. TAULBEE. I think that in this case we are going rather far in the direction of granting pensions. At any rate, I should like to know whether there is any evidence before the committee or anywhere else to the effect that the gunshot wound received by this soldier had at any time created any mental derangement. I do not claim that it is impossible for a thing of that kind to occur, but I think it improbable.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. Chairman, I am not going to undertake to-night to give a medical dissertation on the probable results of a gunshot wound affecting the nervous system, as this wound seems to have done. Dr. Graves, a distinguished surgeon who attended this man—who knew him during a long series of years, and had occasion to study his case professionally—gives it as his sworn opinion that this wound acting upon the man's nervous system, causing intense and almost unendurable pain, making his life wretched for so many years, was the cause of the temporary insanity which induced him to take his life.

I believe it is a recognized principle, at least in the courts, that no man who commits suicide is to be regarded as having been sane at the time of the act; that the fact of committing suicide is conclusive evidence of aberration of mind. Now, here was a case where a man received a very severe gun-shot wound which fractured the bones of the leg and which never healed. When the sore opened and discharged pus the man obtained some degree of relief; but when the wound temporarily closed he suffered the tortures of the Inquisition. His nervous system was seriously affected, and the attending physician gives under oath his opinion that the shock to the nervous system produced by this injury was the direct cause of insanity which induced him to take his life. I believe that to be the truth.

Perhaps it would not be proper for me to say that in a professional life covering a quarter of a century I have seen somewhat similar cases, but I think it would be the judgment of the medical profession generally, not only that such a case might happen, but that frequently it actually does happen, that an injury to the nervous system so deranges it that the sufferer loses his mind and takes his own life.

I think this case is one in which Congress can properly grant the relief asked. I believe it is a just case. I honestly believe that this man did lose his life in consequence of this wound, and that his widow ought to have the benefit of the small pension proposed. Of course this Committee of the Whole will do what it may deem proper.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ALBERT G. FIFIELD.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 443) granting an increase of pension to Albert G. Fifield.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to increase the pension of Albert G. Fifield, late a private in the Twelfth Regiment New Hampshire Volunteers, from $36 to $50 per month, from and after the passage of this act.

The report (by Mr. GALLINGER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 443) granting an increase of pension to Albert G. Fifield, having considered the same, beg leave to report as follows:

Soldier is now receiving a pension at the usual rate of $36 per month for gunshot wound of the arm, and asks that his pension be increased to the rate paid for loss of arm at the shoulder-joint, which he erroneously supposes to be $50, but which is actually $45. The medical examining board at Concord, N. H., under date of November 3, 1886, found the disability to be as follows:

"Minie-ball struck right shoulder-joint in front and lodged somewhere in the chest. The head of humerus and about 4 inches of the shaft have been removed, leaving the limb hanging by the muscles. There is no anchylosis of the other joints, and he can flex the fore-arm to a right angle. The muscles of the arm and fore-arm are not atrophied, and there is no loss of sensation, but motion and power are very much limited. He is unable to use the hand in eating. The cicatrix is 6 inches long, and its upper part adherent to glenoid cavity, and the whole is very tender. Respiratory murmur is wanting in upper third of right lung; dull on percussion at this point. His present condition is due to the gunshot wound, and as regards manual labor, total disability exists in the entire limb."

There is a mass of testimony on file showing that soldier's arm is utterly useless, and also that he is suffering from hemorrhage of the lungs, which is unquestionably due to the lodgment of the ball in the chest. On this point the following statements are submitted:

"To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives in Congress assembled, at their December session for A. D. 1887:

"Your petitioner, Albert G. Fifield, of Franklin, county of Merrimack and State of New Hampshire, respectfully represents that being a soldier of the Twelfth Regiment of the New Hampshire Volunteers in the late war of the rebellion, and while in active service of the United States Union Army, was severely wounded while engaged in the battle of Chancellorsville, in the State of Virginia. I was wounded in my right shoulder-joint and the musket-ball penetrated through the joint and followed the collar-bone into my right side, where it still remains. I lost 7 inches of the bone and the use of my right arm entirely. I now receive as a pension but $36 per month, and I consider myself entitled to receive the same amount as those pensioners who have totally lost an arm from the shoulder.

"ALBERT G. FIFIELD.

"NOVEMBER 29, 1887."

"The subscribers would respectfully state that they are well acquainted with the within-named applicant, and have full confidence and belief in the truth of his statement, and can testify to his disability and to his need of pecuniary aid, as he has a family and is unable to support them by his labor, and must rely upon the Government for material aid and assistance.

"November 29, 1887.

Marsh, Frank Proctor, Alexis Proctor, G. G. Fellows, Edward Abbott, N. W. Perkins, P. L. Kennedy, John C. Neal, J. W. Russell, J. H. Rowell, C. C. Chase, E. W. Cross, H. L. Young, C. C. Paigry, E. E. Faskett."

"TILTON, N. H., November 30, 1887.

"This is to certify that I have known Albert G. Fifield for the past six years; during that time have repeatedly treated him for cough and hemorrhage of the lungs, both of which are excited by moderate exertion. In my opinion his disability is equal to loss of arm at shoulder-joint.

"EDWARD ABBOTT, M. D."

"LACONIA, N. H., December 2, 1887.

"This is to certify that I have known Albert G. Fifield for the past ten years; that during that time I have repeatedly treated him for cough and hemorrhage from lungs. In my opinion his disability is equal to the loss of an arm at shoulder-joint.

"A. W. ABBOTT, M. D."

"TILTON, N. H., November 30, 1887.

"This is to certify that on the above date I professionally examined Albert G. Fifield for bodily ailments, as follows: That there has been a resection of the right shoulder-joint and 7 inches of the humerus removed. At present there is a shortening of 4½ inches in the length of the arm. There is extreme soreness and pain through the right lung; that on any exertion he has severe attacks of dyspnœa and spits up considerable blood, and has done so for the past ten years; that he averages those slight hemorrhages once a week. For the above reasons the aforesaid Albert G. Fifield is unable to perform any manual labor.

"JOHN J. DEARBORN, M. D."

From all the facts in the case your committee are of opinion that soldier's existing disability from the gunshot wound is practically equivalent to the loss of arm at shoulder-joint, and when it is considered that in addition the ball is lodged in the chest and gives rise to frequent hemorrhages from the lungs, the case becomes one of unusual merit.

Your committee would recommend that the bill be amended by striking out the word "fifty" and inserting instead thereof the word "forty-five," and with this amendment recommend its passage.

Mr. TAULBEE. Mr. Chairman, I must confess that I do not see why the Pension Office could not have rated the pension in this case.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am not sufficiently conversant with the rule in the Pension Office to know whether they could have taken into consideration this disability or not. Presumably the pensioner did not include it in his original application, but applied simply for a pension for the wound, although his arm unquestionably, as I know from personal knowledge, is of as little account as if amputated at the shoulder-joint. Yet he is receiving as large a pension as can be allowed by the Pension Office.

The committee considered the equities of this case, and they found this other disability directly resulted from the wound this man had received. He has suffered severely, and it was determined from all the circumstances his pension should be increased to that of a man who had his arm amputated at the shoulder-joint. The committee thought it was a strong case and so reported.

Mr. TAULBEE. I do not believe the pension laws make any discrimination between a case where the arm is amputated at the shoulder or there is disability equivalent to such amputation.

Mr. BUCHANAN. My belief is they do make a difference in practice, in such cases.

Mr. MORRILL. I wish to remind my friend from Kentucky that under the act, I think, of August 4, 1886, we did not provide for equivalents, and the Pension Office could only allow $45 where the arm was amputated at the shoulder-joint. My friend from New Hampshire said the man made no application for the difference. It would not have helped him. The Pension Office would not have considered a wound of that kind in connection with the other. If a man had half a dozen gunshot wounds in his body they might disable him much more than would amputation at the shoulder-joint, but under our law he could only receive $30 a month—the amputation at the shoulder-joint being $45, at the elbow $36, and below the elbow $30. If a man had half a dozen wounds the Pension Office could not consider them, unless they left him in a condition of total disability, requring the care of another person. That is the reason why the Pension Office could not consider this case.

Mr. TAULBEE. The disability resulting from the wound could not be considered under the general law. I am reminded by the gentleman from Kansas, in a bill passed by the last Congress increasing the rate for amputation of arms, there was no provision made for corresponding disability. I believe he is correct about that, and it satisfies me about this case. I think in the matter of determining the disability of the arm, it is perfectly legitimate and proper for us to consider the disability of the lungs in connection with it, where the general law does not provide for it.

The amendment of the Committee on Invalid Pensions was agreed to; and the bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House, with the recommendation that it do pass.

MRS. MARY JANE CASE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 85) granting a pension to Mary Jane Case.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the limitations and restrictions of the pension laws, the name of Mary Jane Case, widow of David Case, late a private in Company D, Third Regiment Connecticut Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. FRENCH) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 85) granting a pension to Mrs. Mary Jane Case, have had the same under consideration, and beg leave to submit the following report:

The claimant was a pensioner as the widow of Daniel C. Case, who was killed at the first Bull Run battle, while serving as private of Company D, Third Regiment Connecticut Volunteers. She continued to draw pension until March 15, 1868, when she again married one George W. Briggs, also a soldier, whereupon pension was granted to the child of Case, which pension terminated February 11, 1877. The marriage with Briggs was not a happy one, and upon July 6, 1877, the claimant was granted a divorce from said Briggs on the ground of cruel treatment and desertion. Briggs has since died. Under the decree of the court, now before your committee, claimant's name was changed back to Case. From the evidence filed before this committee, it appears that Mary Jane Case has no income, except that derived from keeping a few boarders, but by reason of advancing age and physical disabilities, namely bronchitis and asthma, she has become now almost incapable of procuring a subsistence in that way. She is constantly under a doctor's care, and much of the time confined to bed. Her character is of the highest.

No pension has been paid to any one on account of Case's death for more than ten years. He was one of the first who laid down his life in order that the country might live. His late widow is now needing assistance in her declining years. Others have been granted relief by Congress under similar circumstances.

Your committee believe the case under consideration equally meritorious, and therefore report favorably on the bill, and ask that it do pass.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

SQUIRE ADMIRE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4812) to grant a pension to Squire Admire.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Squire Admin, late a private in the Third Regiment Indiana State Legion.

The report (by Mr. MORRILL) was read, as follows:

The claimant in this case had not been in the military service of the United States at the time the injury for which pension is asked was received; hence no application has ever been made at the Pension Office, as the case comes under no existing law. The facts in the case, as your committee have been able to gather them from the evidence filed, are these:

Squire Admire, the beneficiary under this bill, was, in September, 1862, a citizen of Indiana, residing near the village of Yankeetown. Some time during that month the city of Owensborough, in Kentucky, was threatened with an attack by the Confederate forces. An appeal was made to the surrounding country to furnish men for its defense. Among those who responded were Capt. Peter Taylor's company, known as the Yankeetown Home Guards, in which company Squire Admire served. Upon their arrival at Owensborough they were ordered into line of battle to support a battery, and while momentarily expecting an attack they were ordered to fix bayonets. After returning to camp, in assisting a comrade to remove his bayonet, claimant's musket was discharged, the bullet striking the bayonet, and a splinter from the bullet struck claimant in the left eye, entirely destroying the sight. The testimony of Peter Taylor, captain; George N. Cornell and Daniel Briscoe, comrades in the same company; Orin Caswell, with whom Admire was then living, and J. R. Tilman, M. D., fully substantiate the statements set forth above. The precedents of favorable legislation in similar cases are so numerous that they need not be cited.

Your committee therefore recommend the passage of the bill, with the following amendments:

In the sixth line, strike out the word "Admin" and insert the word "Admire."

Amend the title so that it will read: "To grant a pension to Squire Admire."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ORRIS A. BROWNE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5859) to remove the political disabilities of Orris A. Browne, of Virginia.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all disabilities imposed upon and incurred by Orris A. Browne, of Virginia, by virtue of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution, be, and are hereby, removed.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

PAUL F. FAISON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4694) to remove the political disabilities of Paul F. Faison.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all political disabilities imposed upon and incurred by Paul F. Faison, of North Carolina, by virtue of the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution, be, and are hereby, removed.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

WILLIAM H. BROKENSHAW.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 418) granting a pension to William H. Brokenshaw.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of William H. Brokenshaw, late a private in Company H, Twenty-fourth Michigan Volunteer Infantry.

The report (by Mr. CHIPMAN) was read, as follows:

That the said Brokenshaw was a private in the Twenty-fourth Michigan Volunteer Infantry during the late war; that on the 25th day of March, 1865, just after said soldier had been mustered into service, and during the evening of said day as said Brokenshaw was retiring to his bunk, he was, as shown by medical evidence, severely injured by three soldiers whose names were unknown to him, by jumping upon him while he was climbing into his said bunk, thereby crushing or crowding his left side down upon the outer edge of his bunk in such manner as to crush in the ribs on his left side just below the heart. The proof in the case that said soldier was injured and in the manner stated is clear and seemed to have been satisfactory to the Commissioner of Pensions and to the Secretary of the Interior, but said Commissioner held that such injury was not received while the soldier was in line of duty, and his ruling was afterwards sustained by the Secretary of the Interior, and the opinion of the honorable Secretary has been carefully considered by your committee, in which opinion it is stated that claimant was examined at Detroit, Mich., October 1, 1884, by board of examining surgeons consisting of J. F. Noyes, N. W. Webber, and Charles C. Yemans, who report:

"There is a marked depression in the left chest just below the breast; ribs appear to have been bent at this point inwards; complains of pains on every effort that requires reaching upwards with arms, or on stooping over; anything that jars the body, as riding, he says, causes great distress; suffers undoubtedly with pleuritic adhesions; is undoubtedly considerably disabled for labor."

The honorable Assistant Secretary of the Interior in his opinion says:

"The origin of the disability alleged by claimant in this appeal is conceded, and the results of the injury of the left side are doubtless accurately stated by claimant, as shown by the report of the medical examination to which the disability was subjected at Detroit, October 1, 1884, but the injury having been caused by three soldiers jumping upon the claimant while he was climbing in his bunk was clearly not incurred in line of duty in the sense that would carry with it a pension."

Here, then, was a soldier severely injured without any fault or neglect on his part while in the performance of his duty; but because he happened to receive such injury from other soldiers, it is held that the injury did not occur while in the line of duty.

Your committee, after fully considering the case in question, are unable to see why claimant was not disabled in the line of duty as much as if such injury had been received by the soldier from the kick of a horse, or the breaking down of his bunk, or by any other accidental means.

Your committee therefore respectfully report the bill back to the House, and recommend that the same do pass.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MISS CAPPIE HARSH.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5766) granting a pension to Miss Cappie Harsh, daughter of Daniel Harsh.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Miss Cappie Harsh, daughter of Daniel Harsh, late of Company H, Fifty-eighth Regiment of Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension of $12 per month.

The report (by Mr. MORRILL) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5766) granting a pension to Cappie Harsh, submit the following report:

The files in the Pension Office show that Daniel Harsh, a private in Company H, Fifty-eighth Ohio Volunteers, died in hospital at Nashville November 25, 1863, of chronic diarrhea. His widow, Mary Harsh, and only child, Capitola V. Harsh, were afterwards placed on the pension-rolls as widow and minor child of said soldier. The widow afterwards remarried, and the minor child drew her pension until April 8, 1876, when she became sixteen years of age. The evidence submitted to the committee shows that said Capitola V. Harsh has been a helpless cripple from infancy. Dr. M. B. Smith testifies:

"Her lower limbs from the knees downward have not grown or developed since about the age of one or two years. She is consequently permanently crippled and entirely unable to walk or even bear any weight on her knees or feet."

Mrs. M. E. Rhoads testifies:

"She is destitute entirely and depends upon me for support. She is a cripple and entirely helpless in her lower limbs, caused by sickness when she was about two years old. Her mother, after the death of her father, married, and has since become a pauper and public charge in Franklin County, Kansas."

This soldier gave his life to his country. His only child is a helpless cripple and entirely destitute. The simple statement of the case is sufficient.

Your committee recommend the passage of the bill, with the amendment striking out the word "Cappie" and inserting the words "Capitola V."

Amend title so as to read "Capitola V. Harsh," and further amend by striking out the word "twelve," in line 7, and inserting the word "eighteen."

Mr. TAULBEE. Mr. Chairman, I think this bill is establishing a precedent different from that heretofore pursued in granting pensions. I do not understand that the theory of our pension laws authorizes the granting of a pension to the relative of a soldier on account of the disability of the relative; and I believe that the committee, if I understood the reading of the bill correctly, have proposed to increase the rate of pension from what the bill was originally presented for, $12 per month, to $18 per month.

Now I object to that kind of a precedent being established. I do not think it is a correct one. I think if it is correct in theory we should pass a general law to provide that if the next of kin, or those related to a soldier, are disabled, that we should rate them in the Pension Office according to such disability.

I will move to strike out "$18 per month," where it occurs in the bill, and insert "$12 per month."

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Do you favor the bill?

Mr. TAULBEE. I want to oppose the bill, but if it is to pass at all, I want it to pass at no greater rate than $12 a month.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. Chairman, the facts in this case are that this is a helpless daughter of a soldier who died of disease contracted in the service. This father was in the service, and the child, then two years old, was taken sick. The disease settled in her lower limbs, and they have never developed since. While she has the body of an adult, she has the limbs of an infant two years of age. She is utterly helpless, can not stand on her feet, and has to be carried from place to place. She has no way or no power of moving herself without such assistance. And further, I desire to say that the mother of this girl remarried and forfeited, of course, the pension to which she had been entitled. This mother is now a county charge in one of the counties of Kansas, utterly unable to render any assistance to this child, and has been herself for years an object of charity.

In regard to the precedent, I would say that this has been the uniform practice of the Committee on Pensions for several years past. When my friend from Kentucky [Mr. TAULBEE] was a member of the committee—and I am happy to say here that he was an able member and one of the fairest who was on the committee in the Forty-ninth Congress—he passed several bills of the same kind. The committee, after a full discussion of the matter at this session, decided that in all cases of this kind they would report uniformly a rate of $18, thinking that was as little as would support a person under these circumstances. A general bill was introduced in the Forty-ninth Congress and reported favorably to place all such persons on the pension-roll. This is simply to continue the pension paid to the child up to the age of sixteen indefinitely. The precedents are almost without number for such legislation, and I hope the gentleman from Kentucky will withdraw the amendment, because the committee after the fullest and freest discussion of the matter decided that it was right, and recommend such action in all cases of this kind.

We have already passed a bill for the distinguished chairman of this committee in the case of General Hackleman's daughter, and one for the gentleman from New Hampshire, fixing the rate at $18. It would be hardly fair to reduce the amount in this case when we have established the precedent of fixing the sum at $18.

I do not see why this girl, more helpless than the claimants in the other cases, should be reduced to $12 when others have $18. No one is now in this case drawing a pension on account of the death of a husband. He died of disease contracted in the service; he died in the hospital at Nashville, Tenn.

Mr. TAULBEE. The gentleman from Kansas does me too much honor.

Mr. MORRILL. I believe it all.

Mr. TAULBEE. You believe all I have said?

Mr. MORRILL. I believe what I said.

Mr. TAULBEE. I am much obliged to the gentleman, but I think he draws the case a little fine when he says I recommended the passage of many similar bills. I have no recollection, nor do I think the RECORD will sustain the statement, that I recommended to the committee by any report which I drew or by my advocacy of any bill on this floor to pay the daughter of a soldier the sum of $18 a month. I confess that in my deliberations with the committee my sympathy was frequently touched by the cases of distress which were from time to time brought before that committee, and I, by reason of this sympathy, was induced to acquiesce in the reporting by that committee of bills increasing the pensions above the regular rates.

But now, Mr. Chairman, I submit that it would be hardly fair to set and carry out a precedent, granting a pension of $18 a month to the daughter of a soldier on account of her afflictions and at the same time declining to pass a general law which would rate the widow of a soldier according to the afflictions with which she was smitten. Our pension laws recognize that the widows of soldiers have priority of right in the matter of pensions. But there is no well-established theory, there is no well-established precedent by which we can determine the rate of a pension by the disability of a dependent relative. We can not afford to enter into that kind of thing. Doubtless all will agree that all over this country there are widows of worthy soldiers killed in battle, soldiers who have died from wounds and injuries received in the service, which widows are totally disabled from the performance of any manual labor; yet these widows are expected and required by the general law to content themselves with a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

Now, if it is correct in theory that we should pass this bill and rate this pension according to the disability of the beneficiary, then I submit that we ought to entitle all persons similarly situated to the same benefits which this bill would extend in a similar case. I believe that my amendment is right, if we pass the bill at all. I decline to withdraw my amendment. But I want to say to my friend from Kansas, for whom I have the very highest regard, that if he will cite a single case in which I have reported a bill like this to the House, I will agree to support the bill and withdraw my amendment.

Mr. MORRILL. In reply to my friend from Kentucky [Mr. TAULBEE] I will say I can not recall any case of this nature which he specially reported; but a number of bills of this kind were reported by our committee during last Congress, and I am confident the gentleman from Kentucky never offered an objection to a bill of this nature. In fact it has been recognized by both Houses of Congress that the Government ought to care for the helpless children of those who have died in the service of their country. This soldier died in the hospital, his death being the result of his service. He gave all he had for his country; and now we ask the country to provide for this helpless child, who has no one to look to for her support.

Mr. WHITE, of Indiana. I am surprised the gentleman from Kentucky should think of trying to prevent the passage of a little claim of this kind when the object is to provide for the child of one who died for the good of his country. That gentleman, with others, this afternoon took an active part, and one that was creditable enough, in voting large amounts to parties whose claims were somewhat in doubt; some of them, it being supposed, having been in the Confederate service. One of those cases especially was a claim of $20,000 of a college in Virginia. I do not blame the gentleman from Kentucky for supporting that measure. I supported it myself, and voted for it. But I am surprised that he would come in here at this hour and try to intercept a small measure of this kind when he, a little while ago, could support such an extravagant measure as that.

As one member of this House I propose to vote for every bill that is reported by a committee who have examined the cases which they report.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Whether they report favorably or unfavorably?

Mr. WHITE, of Indiana. I will support them whether they report favorably or unfavorably unless some new light comes in between the time the bill is reported and the time when it is considered in the House. Every claim embraced in the bill which was considered this afternoon—although there might apparently be great objection to some of the claims—went to the Court of Claims and was submitted to the high-minded men who are the judges of that court. I believe they were in possession of all the facts; and so far as I am concerned I propose to vote for the propositions they have passed.

So with pension claims. I believe the Pension Committee has investigated these claims with much more care than we can do it here, and even if we do not have all the light that we think we should have on the subject, I believe that, if we err at all, we ought to err in voting a little pittance either to the soldier or his widow or his child who is in need. I hope, therefore, that the amendment will not be sustained.

Mr. TAULBEE. I think the criticism of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WHITE], if intended for me, is a little severe. I am inclined, however, to think that he has mistaken me for some one else. [Laughter.] I am sorry for the man for whom he has mistaken me.

Mr. WHITE, of Indiana. Very possibly I have mistaken the gentleman for another member. [Laughter.] He looks very much like the gentleman who voted as I did on that bill.

Mr. TAULBEE. I believe I voted with the gentleman on that occasion, but I took no active part in the matter. I trust we shall now have a vote on the amendment.

Mr. ENLOE. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WHITE] a question. He has stated, I believe, that he will vote for any proposition that is recommended by a committee of this House.

Mr. WHITE, of Indiana. No, no.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. He said that he would vote for every bill that was reported by a committee.

Mr. WHITE, of Indiana. For every bill that is reported by a committee honestly, unless some new light is thrown upon the matter between the time of the report and the time of consideration by the House.

Mr. ENLOE. I only wanted to know whether the gentleman expected to vote for the tariff bill when it is reported by the committee. [Laughter.]

Mr. WHITE, of Indiana. Oh, no; that is a different matter.

Several MEMBERS. That has not been reported by any committee yet.

Mr. WHITE, of Indiana. That has not been reported yet, and we will have new light on the subject, too. In fact, we have new light on it already. [Laughter.] That is where the difference is. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would suggest to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. TAULBEE] that in the opinion of the Chair the purpose he has in view can be accomplished by voting down the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. TAULBEE. Yes; that is right. I ask for a vote on the amendment proposed by the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Then, if there be no objection, the amendment changing the name will be considered as agreed to, and a separate vote will be taken on the amendment proposed by the committee.

Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. Before the vote is taken I want to ask the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WHITE], who says that he will vote for every measure reported from a committee, whether he includes reports from the Committee on Elections. [Laughter.]

Mr. WHITE, of Indiana. Ah! we had new light on that. [Laughter.] If there was a minority report upon this bill, as there was in that election case, then I would support the minority report, because I believe it would be right. [Renewed laughter.]

The question was taken on the amendment reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, increasing the amount of the pension from $12 to $18 per month, and it was agreed to—ayes 46, noes 4.

Mr. ENLOE. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to interpose any factious opposition to the passage of this bill, or to the recommendation of its passage by the Committee of the Whole; but I do want to say that I am opposed to the principle involved in the bill. In my view, it is immaterial whether the amount is $12 or $18 per month, and I really think that if the House were going to make provision for the disabled relatives of the soldier, $18 a month would not be too much, under the circumstances of this case. But, Mr. Chairman, I object to Congress entering upon this field at all and undertaking to provide for the dependent relatives of deceased soldiers, unless it makes the rule broad enough to embrace all the people of this country who may happen to be so unfortunate as the person who is mentioned in this bill appears to be. I shall not undertake to prevent the passage of this bill through the committee, but I shall take the liberty of voting against it and voting against every measure of the kind when it comes up for consideration there.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection this bill will be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. TAULBEE. Well, Mr. Chairman, I object to the bill, and I ask that a vote be taken. I shall not ask for a division, but I do not want the bill laid aside with the understanding that there is no objection to it.

The question was taken, and the bill was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MARY S. LOGAN.

The next business on the Calendar was a bill (H. R. 3191) granting a pension to Mary S. Logan.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mary S. Logan, widow of the late John A. Logan, a major-general of the United States Volunteers in the late war for the Union, and to pay her a pension, from the passage of this act, for and during her natural life, at the rate of $2,000 per annum.

Mr. BYNUM. Mr. Chairman, without taking up time in having the report in this case read, I wish to say that the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions could not remain here this evening on account of ill health, and he expressed a desire that this bill and the one next following it upon the Calendar should go over until another session, as he wishes to present some objections to them when they come before the House. I ask that these bills be passed over informally, retaining their places on the Calendar.

Mr. MORRILL. I hope that will be done. I should have made the request if my friend from Indiana [Mr. BYNUM] had not done so.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. I do not wish the bill which we have just reached to lose its place on the Calendar.

The CHAIRMAN. It is understood that it will not. The request is that this bill and the next succeeding bill, Senate bill No. 574, for the relief of Mrs. Apolline A. Blair, be passed over informally, retaining their places on the Calendar. If there be no objection, that order will be made.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

ELIZA J. CURRIER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 441) granting a pension to Eliza J. Currier.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Eliza J. Currier, widow of Joseph H. Currier, late a private of Company B, Third Regiment New Hampshire Volunteers, at the rate of $12 per month.

The report (by Mr. GALLINGER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred House bill 441, having given the same careful consideration, report as follows:

The claimant is the widow of Joseph H. Currier, late private in Company B, Third Regiment New Hampshire Volunteers. Soldier was twice injured while in the service, first by being thrown from a horse, and again by lifting a boat, the injury being to the back. While in hospital, under treatment for these injuries, he was attacked with chills and fever and chronic diarrhea, for which several disabilities morphia was prescribed in large quantities, the severe pain especially requiring that drug. He was discharged from the Army, suffering from irritatio spinalis (irritation of the spine), the surgeon declaring him to be wholly unfit for military service. He was pensioned for these disabilities. The evidence shows that the disabilities were continuous, and that from excessive pain and diarrhea he continued to use morphine up to the time of his death.

The widow made application for pension, but it was finally rejected on the ground that soldier's death was from disease of the kidneys, and that the fact as to whether the fatal disease was a result of disabilities incurred in the service was not susceptible of satisfactory proof.

The physician who attended soldier certified that he died from Bright's disease; but as he admits that he did not, at any time, make chemical examination of the urine, his diagnosis is certainly nothing more than a matter of pure conjecture. In his certificate he says: "The cause of death, as above stated, was, in my opinion, due to his injury in the service," adding that death was probably hastened by the use of morphia.

It may be proper to add that a member of this committee, a physician, filed the following paper in the case:

"I am a practicing physician and surgeon in Concord, N. H. I knew said Currier well, and can testify from personal knowledge that when he came home from the Army he was completely wrecked physically, having intermittent fever, chronic diarrhea, and suffering from a severe injury to the back, received in the line of duty. I was frequently called upon to prescribe for him, ordinarily for very severe pain in the back and bowels, which usually required large doses of morphia to allay. In consequence of the use of morphia to relieve pain, which commenced in the Army, under medical advice, soldier became addicted to its use to a considerable extent. I had means of seeing soldier almost every day, extending over a period of many years, and always regarded him as a man completely broken in health from his Army experience. I did not treat him during the last two or three years of his life, but do not hesitate to declare it as my unqualified belief that his death resulted, indirectly at least, from disease contracted in the Army, and that his pension should be continued to his widow.

"J. H. GALLINGER, M. D."

In the final decision of the case in the Pension Office the medical referee, Dr. John Campbell, submitted the following:

"I went all over this case with Hon. Mr. GALLINGER after his statement was filed, and believing that the claim was not susceptible of satisfactory proof my understanding was that he would introduce a special act in favor of the widow. Mr. GALLINGER is a medical man himself, and I was of the opinion that he concurred in my views of the case, and that it was a proper one for Congressional action."

It will be seen from the above that stress was laid upon the fact that the case was not susceptible of "satisfactory proof." This is unquestionably true from a purely medical standpoint, but it will be borne in mind that soldier was completely broken down in the service, that the diagnosis of his fatal attack was not skillfully made, and that there is a strong probability that his death was due to diseases contracted in the Army. The widow is very infirm and destitute, and as the medical referee of the Pension Office admits the case is "a proper one for Congressional action," your committee report the bill back and recommend that it do pass.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

EVERARD FLYNN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4835) for the relief of Everard Flynn.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioner of Pensions is hereby directed to place on the pension-rolls the name of Everard Flynn, son of George C. Flynn, and pay to the legal guardian of said Everard Flynn a pension at the rate of $8 per month.

The amendment reported by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 6 strike out "eight" and insert "eighteen;" so as to make the pension $18 per month.

The report (by Mr. GALLINGER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4835) for the relief of Everard Flynn, having considered the same, report as follows:

The subjoined documents will give a clear idea of the merits of this case:

"In the matter of the application to Congress of Everard Flynn, of Kennebunk, county of York, the State of Maine, and son of George C. Flynn, who was killed in action September 30, 1864.

"I, Adeline Faxon, of Boston, in the county of Suffolk and Commonwealth of Massachusetts, wife of Henry Faxon, of said Boston, on oath depose and say, that I am the sister of the father of said Everard Flynn. He has another aunt or sister of his mother, who is seventy-one years old and unable to assist in the support of said Everard. I am seventy-nine years old and without means to do but very little for him.

"We two are the only next of kin to him now living.

"Mrs. Hannah Allen, an aunt of said George C. Flynn, left about $300—the exact amount I can not tell—for the support of said Everard, but all that was left has been expended, the last of it being expended about four years ago. With the exception of said sum said Everard has been and now is dependent upon the charity of his relatives. A woman named Mary J. Cousens, wife of Thomas Cousens, provides him with a room, but no meals, in return for chores he does for her. For his meals he depends upon such remittances as I have sent him from time to time. His other relatives who assisted in his support have died, and I am the only person who sends him anything.

"The lady who furnished him with a room did also furnish Everard with meals, being paid by contributions from his relatives; but as I am the only giver left, and as I am unable to supply him with sufficient for his board, his meals are only obtained from such amounts as I have been able to send him from time to time, and what he can obtain by doing chores, and are necessarily uncertain and precarious.

"The reason why said Everard is so dependent is that he is non compos mentis, and was so at his father's death, and has been so all his life. He is quite inoffensive, but utterly irresponsible.

"I have a number of times endeavored to persuade Everard to consent to go to the poor-house, representing how much more comfortably cared for he would be there than getting a living by the precarious means by which he now lives, I promising to send him such things to make him comfortable that the institution would not supply, but he always refused.

"Said Everard is the only son of George C. Flynn, who enlisted on the 1st day of July, 1864, in Company C, Sixth New Hampshire Volunteers, and was killed at Poplar Grove Church, Virginia, September 30, 1864, as appears from the certificate of A. D. Ayling, adjutant-general of the State of New Hampshire, December 8, 1885, accompanying this affidavit.

"Said Everard was nearly sixteen years of age at the time his father was killed, and so not entitled by the law to a pension. At least, I am informed that the law does not reach his case. He was dependent upon his father for his support at the time his father was killed. The money left him was after his father's death, and has been wholly spent as I have stated.

"ADELINE FAXON."

"COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS, Suffolk, ss:

"Personally appeared before me said Adeline Faxon, to me known, and made oath to the truth of the above.

"BENJ. DEAN, Notary Public."

"THE STATE OF NEW HAMPSHIRE,
"ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
"Concord, December 8, 1885.

"I certify that the official records of this office show that George C. Flynn enlisted on the 1st day of July, 1864; that he was assigned to Company C, Sixth Regiment New Hampshire Volunteers, and was mustered into the service of the United States on the 1st day of July, 1864, for the period of three years.

"Said Flynn was born in the State of Maine, and was, at the time of enlistment, forty-four years of age; blue eyes, brown hair, dark complexion; 5 feet 2 inches high, and by occupation, when enrolled, a printer.

"He is officially reported as having been killed at Poplar Grove Church, Va., and on the muster-out rolls of said company and regiment is reported as killed in action September 30, 1864.

"A. D. AYLING, Adjutant-General."

"JANUARY 5, 1888.

"DEAR SIR: Thanking you for the privilege extended me of again bringing to your notice the case I had previously written to you about, that of Everard Flynn, of Kennebunk, Me., I can only urge that sufficient interest be taken to secure a final favorable result to one of the most worthy subjects that can have come before the committee or those persons who have the right to grant this pension.

"Mr. George C. Flynn, the father of Everard, had but this one motherless, simple child when he enlisted as a soldier to fight in the battles for his—for our country. He was below the required height, and was refused in Maine and Massachusetts, but so persistent was he that he went to New Hampshire, was accepted, mustered into service there for a term of three years, but was killed in battle a few months later.

"The boy, then about fourteen years, I am told, had relatives on his mother's side who were able to support him, and did for many years without aid from the Government. All have since died.

"Mrs. Faxon, of South Boston, friend and neighbor of Hon. Benjamin Dean for many years, is all that is left of his father's family, and is now upwards of eighty years. That he could be better provided for would very much lighten the anxiety and sadness she feels on his account in her few remaining years. Rev. C. C. Vinal, of Kennebunk, has been his friend for many years, dispensing small donations for his comfort as they have been bestowed for charitable purposes. He represents him as being entirely incapable of taking care of himself, neither strong in body or mind, but in every way worthy of the charity of all; necessarily a pauper, pauper food and pauper clothes, and then a pauper's grave. I understand his father was previously a good business man, and would have undoubtedly better provided for his simple child. You will, I trust, pardon me for writing at such length, but though very ignorant of the ways to go about it, and to whom to go, I have volunteered to do something for charity's sake, and my ignorance of facts and manner of doing must be attributed to a mother whose heart and hands are full of immediate family cares.

"I am, respectfully,

"MRS. A. F. BUSHNEL,
"3210 Summer Street, West Philadelphia, Pa.

"Hon. THOS. B. REED,
"House of Representatives, Washington, D. C."

There are other papers in the case fully corroborating those given, all of which go to show that the applicant is an orphan and utterly incapable of caring for himself, and unless relief comes from the Government, in whose defense his father gave up life, the son will inevitably become an inmate of an almshouse. There are numerous precedents for the passage of bills of this kind.

Your committee would recommend that the bill be amended by striking out the word "eight," in the last line, and inserting in lieu thereof the word "eighteen," and with this amendment recommend its passage.

Mr. CONGER. I notice that this bill directs the Commissioner of Pensions to place the name of the claimant on the pension-rolls. The ordinary form directs the Secretary of the Interior. I ask that the bill be so amended as to follow the usual form.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection the bill will be amended as suggested by the gentleman, so as to insert "Secretary of the Interior" instead of "Commissioner of Pensions."

There was no objection.

Mr. TAULBEE. I now ask a vote on the amendment recommended by the committee, striking out "eight" and inserting "eighteen." This amendment of the committee proposes to grant a larger pension than the original bill proposed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass.

HANNAH C. DE WITT.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 823) granting a pension to Hannah C. De Witt.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Hannah C. De Witt, mother of George E. De Witt, late a private in the Seventh Battery, Maine Artillery, who died in said service November 9, 1864.

The report (by Mr. GALLINGER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 823) granting a pension to Hannah C. De Witt, having considered the same, report as follows:

"The committees of both Houses of the Forty-ninth Congress favorably reported this bill, and it was on the Calendar at the expiration of said Congress. The facts in the case, as found in the reports alluded to, are that Hannah C. De Witt, the claimant, is the mother of George E. De Witt, late private of the Seventh Maine Battery, who enlisted November 18, 1863, and died in the service November 9, 1864, at Alexandria, Va. The mother applied for a pension, but her application was rejected on the ground of non-dependence.

A large amount of evidence was submitted in this case. It appears by the report of the examining surgeon that the father of the soldier is now, and has been for many years, in a large degree disabled for the performance of manual labor. They have lived and derived their support from a small farm, said to be worth about $1,200, largely encumbered, and had some personal property upon it. One affidavit states that about eight years ago the father of the soldier had to sell this little place, as it was so heavily mortgaged. The soldier lived with his parents until he went into the Army; they depended on him, and there is no doubt if he had not lost his life in the service of his country he would now be their main dependence and support. There seems to be no doubt as to their present need, and even if, under the technical rules laid down under the general laws by the Pension Office, the parents could not be said to be strictly dependent on the soldier at the time of his death, there is no doubt that they are in such a condition of dependence now.

The committee of the Senate of the Forty-ninth Congress expressed the opinion that this case might well have been allowed under the general law upon the proof on file in the Pension Office.

Congress has many times passed bills indorsing the principle involved in this case, that of present dependence, and, upon a consideration of all the facts, your committee report back the bill with a recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. GALLINGER. There is on the Calendar a bill identical with this, and which has already passed the Senate. I desire that the Senate bill be substituted for this.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection this bill will be reported to the House with the recommendation that it lie on the table and that Senate bill No. 451, of similar purport, be passed.

There was no objection.

MARY MORFORD.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 806) for the relief of Mary Morford.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and hereby is, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mary Morford, of Unionville, Tuscola County, State of Florida, widow of Richard A. Morford, late of Company H, One hundred and forty-fifth Regiment of Pennsylvania Volunteers.

The amendment of the committee to strike out, in line 6, the word "Florida" and insert "Michigan" was read.

The report (by Mr. GALLINGER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 806) for the relief of Mary Morford, having considered the same, report as follows:

This is another case involving a disagreement among medical men. The soldier, Richard A. Morford, was severely wounded in the hip, from which wound he suffered, more or less, until the period of his death. At the time of his death he was under medical treatment by Dr. George H. Granger, of Unionville, Mich., whose affidavit is somewhat obscure, but who certifies that the soldier had caries of the spinal column in the region of the dorsal vertebræ, complicated with asthma, and that he really died from paralysis, caused by the spinal affection.

Dr. William Gibson, of Jamestown, Pa., who had served in the medical department of the Army, testifies, under date of April 30, 1884, that soldier was an unusually healthy and robust man before enlistment; that he came home from the Army in August, 1864, after having been in the Army hospital. He was suffering from gunshot wound in the thigh. The injury to the upper portion of the thigh bone tended to inflammation, ulceration, and caries of the joint, extending to the spine, the inflammation extending from the hip to the back and affecting the organs of the chest. While at home he was under constant medical treatment, the symptoms indicating caries from the gunshot wound in pelvis.

In a subsequent affidavit Dr. Gibson testifies as follows:

"He returned home on furlough in August, 1864, an invalid. I treated him, and on account of my former position on the Sanitary Commission at Fortress Monroe and on the James River, my certificate was accredited and honored in extending the time of his furlough until he was able to return and report. He was again at home in March, 1865, and required medical treatment—general and local. In fact, at periods between 1864 and 1866 he was under my care as an invalid. His former physical vigor was shattered and broken. A valvular difficulty of the heart existed, and he was bloated and asthmatic. He was crippled by a gunshot wound in the thigh bone, which tended to exfoliation of the periosteum and the formation of matter along the muscular tissues. Before he left for Michigan in 1866 I repeatedly warned him of the tendency and danger of ulceration following from the hip and pelvis to the spine, the condition of his general health favoring this. It is said that caries of the spine caused his death. My previous diagnosis anticipated the issue. The chain of facts previously existing, contracted in the Army, was the prelude; caries, resulting in death, the sequelæ."

That certainly is a very strong affidavit, and should go far toward settling the case in behalf of the widow. The medical referee of the Pension Office, however, in the strict discharge of his duty, and acting in the interest of the Government, as he should always do, decided the case against the claimant, holding that the soldier's death was caused by disease which originated after his discharge. At least this can be but an opinion, and as there is strong presumptive and documentary evidence to the contrary, your committee give the widow the benefit of the doubt by reporting back the bill and recommending that it do pass.

The amendment reported by the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it pass.

JULIETTE STONE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 628) granting a pension to Juliette Stone.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Juliette Stone, and to pay her a pension as though she were the natural mother of Eliphas T. Stone, late of the United States Navy.

The report (by Mr. SAWYER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 628) granting a pension to Juliette Stone, submit the following report:

It appears that Mrs. Stone, in whose favor this bill is introduced, was the step-mother of Eliphas T. Stone, who, having served in the One hundred and fifth Regiment New York Volunteers, subsequently enlisted in the United States Navy, and while serving as landsman on the United States steamer Colorado, was taken sick with the yellow jaundice, taken to the hospital in Brooklyn navy-yard, where he died in December, 1863; that he never had been married, and died leaving a father, James L. Stone, and a step-mother; that a father's pension was granted to the said James L. Stone, and continued till his death, June 16, 1876.

Subsequently Mrs. Stone, the step-mother, applied for a pension, which was rejected at the Pension Office on the ground that, being a step-mother, she had no title to a pension.

The evidence shows that Mrs. Stone married said James L. Stone May 5, 1842, the said Eliphas T. Stone, the sailor, being then under two years of age, he then being a sickly, feeble, troublesome child, afflicted with chronic diarrhea. The soldier enlisted when about eighteen years old, and lived at home with his father and step-mother nearly all the time up to his enlistment; that the family were poor, the husband and father being unable alone to support his family, and that the step-mother contributed to their support by taking in sewing and by making candy, which was sold by the soldier, and by her own labor and industry.

The evidence shows that this step-mother was all that a kind and affectionate mother could have been to the soldier, and as wife and mother doing all she could for the support of the family. In his letters the soldier recognizes her as his mother and sent his love to her.

Mrs. Stone is now a resident of Brockport, Monroe County, New York, a poor, deserving widow, crippled and very infirm, and is now supported partly by private charity and partly by the town where she resides.

The committee believe her claim to be a just and meritorious one and in harmony with frequent precedents, and therefore report the bill favorably.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it pass.

HARRIET V. STOCKTON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3711) granting a pension to Harriet V. Stockton.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to place the name of Harriet V. Stockton on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws of the United States, as the widow of John S. Stockton, deceased, as a soldier in Company C, First Kentucky Cavalry, in the war of 1861 to 1865.

SEC. 2. That the name of John W. Stockton be placed on the rolls of the Army, in the War Department, as a soldier in Company C, First Kentucky Volunteer Cavalry.

The amendment reported by the committee, to strike out the second section of the bill, was read.

The report (by Mr. HUNTER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3711) granting a pension to Harriet V. Stockton, have had the same under consideration, and now submit the following report:

The papers on file in the Pension Office show the following facts:

John S. Stockton, husband of Harriet V. Stockton, enlisted in Company C, First Kentucky Cavalry, and before muster was put on duty, captured by the enemy, and died in prison at Salisbury, N. C. The widow's claim for pension was rejected on the ground that the name of John S. Stockton is not borne on the rolls of Company C, First Kentucky Cavalry Volunteers, on file in the War Department, nor is his name borne on recruit rolls or enlistment papers.

George Wallen, late a private Company C, First Kentucky Cavalry Volunteers, makes affidavit as follows:

"The alleged soldier entered the service of the United States in Company C, First Kentucky Cavalry, about October 15, 1861; that he and the affiant messed together, and drew rations, arms, and other equipage as other soldiers; that near Columbia a squad was detailed to guard the ford at Lairsville, on the Cumberland River; that affiant and the alleged soldier were of such squad, and while performing such duty the alleged soldier was captured by the rebels December 11, 1861; sent South to prison, where he died."

Emerson McFall testifies:

"That he was captured with the alleged soldier December 11, 1861, at Lairsville Ford, Cumberland River, Kentucky; that the soldier claimed to belong to Company C, First Kentucky Cavalry, and drew (or had) the United States uniform and a Sharps rifle; that he was sent with the soldier alleged to Salisbury prison, North Carolina, where alleged soldier died from exposure in October, 1862."

J. A. Morrison, late captain Company C, First Kentucky Cavalry, testifies:

"That he saw the alleged soldier with Kentucky Home Guards in September, 1861; saw him again in October, 1861, with affiant's company. He performed duty as a soldier, drew rations, had on a United States uniform, and a Sharps rifle. Do not remember of sending men to Lairsville as a guard, but may have done so; any way, George Wallen and said alleged soldier were absent, and affiant was informed that they were captured while guarding a ford on the Cumberland River and taken South, where said soldier died in prison."

The committee are of the opinion that said soldier was regularly in the employ of the Government, and that the relief asked for in the bill ought to be granted. We therefore report favorably, and recommend the passage of the bill, amended, however, by striking out all after the word "sixty-five" in line 9.

Mr. TAULBEE. I ask that this bill, as it will stand if amended, be read.

The bill as proposed to be amended was read.

Mr. TAULBEE. I did not satisfactorily catch the whole of the report as read. I would like to know whether, in this case, the soldier enlisted in the service, or what was his status.

Mr. FINLEY. Having introduced this bill, I obtained the papers from the Department, and very carefully investigated the case. The soldier was enlisted, but never mustered——

Mr. TAULBEE. That is sufficient.

The amendment reported by the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JAMES WOODY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2806) increasing the pension of James Woody.

Mr. FULLER. The gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HERMANN], who is interested in this bill, is absent this evening on account of indisposition, and at his request I move that it be passed over for the present, not to lose its place on the Calendar.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

JACOB CRAMER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 855) for the relief of the heirs of Jacob Cramer.

The CHAIRMAN. That bill is not included under the special order.

Mr. TAULBEE. There may be an amendment which may bring it within the special order. I noticed an amendment providing for placing upon the roll the name of a certain soldier.

The CHAIRMAN. The bill is clearly not within the special order, and it will be passed over, not to lose its place on the Calendar.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The CHAIRMAN. The next business under the special order is the bill (H. R. 2617) granting a pension to Mary Bailey.

Mr. WHEELER. An act (S. 455) for the relief of Andrew J. Lindsay comes before that, and I hope that bill will be acted on in its order. While the clerks are looking for the bill I do not object to its being passed over, provided it shall not lose its place.

The CHAIRMAN. It will be passed over with that understanding.

MARY BAILEY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2617) granting a pension to Mary Bailey.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to place the name of Mary Bailey, widow of Bvt. Brig. Gen. Joseph Bailey, on the pension-roll, at the rate of $50 per month, to be paid under the provisions of the pension laws.

The report (by Mr. WALKER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2617) granting a pension to Mrs. Mary Bailey, widow of General Joseph Bailey, deceased, having had the same under consideration, make the following report:

The application for pension and the letters and papers accompanying this bill show that General Joseph Bailey served in the Union Army with great distinction during the war in various positions, finally reaching that of brigadier-general, for meritorious services on the Red River. In 1864 Congress tendered him a vote of thanks, as follows:

"Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the thanks of Congress be, and they are hereby tendered to Lieut. Col. Joseph Bailey, of the Fourth Regiment of Wisconsin Volunteers, acting engineer of the Nineteenth Army Corps, for distinguished services in the recent campaign on the Red River, by which the gunboat flotilla, under Rear-Admiral David D. Porter, was rescued from imminent peril.

"Resolved further, That the President of the United States be requested to cause a copy of this resolution to be transmitted to Lieutenant-Colonel Bailey."

On the 18th of September, 1864, Rear-Admiral David D. Porter addressed him a letter in which he said:

"GENERAL: I beg leave to offer for your acceptance a sword as a mark of my esteem for the ability and energy displayed by you in building a dam up Red River when the vessels of my squadron were caught by the falling water. It affords me great pleasure at all times to acknowledge any service performed by the Army in behalf of the Navy, and I take particular pleasure in doing so on this occasion, as it is well deserved, as you saved from destruction part of the fleet in Red River Bends. This sword the naval officers of that expedition have contributed a fund for the purpose of purchasing for you as a testimonial suitable to the occasion, and certain articles are now being prepared at Tiffany & Co.'s, New York, and will be presented in due time. With sentiments of sincere regard,

"I remain, yours truly,

"DAVID D. PORTER,
"Rear-Admiral."

He was complimented by his commanding officers in general orders for meritorious services on several other occasions, and the records and papers before us leave no doubt that he was a more than ordinarily efficient and capable officer. In a recent letter, dated Washington, D. C., December 17, 1887, Admiral Porter says:

"If I remember rightly, Bailey was breveted brigadier-general for his services on Red River, and at the close of the war was mustered out of service, receiving little benefit from his increase in rank. If any widow deserves a pension from the Government, Mrs. Bailey certainly does, and I will be very glad to do anything in my power to help her to obtain one."

The affidavit of John T. Birdsey states that—

"He was personally well acquainted with the late General Joseph Bailey; that he settled in Vernon County, Missouri, as a resident in 1866, and at the time of his death was sheriff of Vernon County."

The affidavit states further that—

"On or about the 27th of March, 1867, said General Bailey went northwest of Nevada, the county seat of Vernon County, to serve certain papers put in his hands as sheriff, and while in the woods about 2½ miles from Nevada, General Bailey was foully shot, killed, and murdered by Lewis and Perry Pixley, who shot him in the back of the head from behind. General Bailey's murderers had the reputation of being bushwhackers during the war. They had been in the neighborhood for two or three months previous to the killing. They were very violent and hostile in words and actions towards any and all persons who had been in the Union Army, threatening them with death. There is no doubt in my mind, and it was the general opinion at the time, that they murdered General Bailey because he was a distinguished Union soldier and a good man."

Mrs. Mary Bailey, widow of General Bailey, is said to be "sixty-four years old and quite infirm; that she supports and cares for a daughter that is a frail, weakly person, unable to support herself, and that for the last two years Mrs. Bailey has done her own chores, winter and summer."

In view of the long and meritorious services of this officer, the circumstances of his death, and the needy condition of the applicant, your committee are of opinion that the relief asked for should be granted, and therefore report favorably on accompanying bill, and ask that it do pass, amended, however, by striking out the word "fifty" in line 6 and inserting therein instead the word "thirty."

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment of the committee is to strike out "$50" and insert "$30."

Mr. TAULBEE. I move as a substitute for the amendment of the committee the following: Strike out "at the rate of $50, to be paid under the provisions of the pension laws," and add, "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws," which will have the effect of giving her $30 a month.

Mr. MORRILL. This is the rate she would be entitled to by law.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to, and the amendment as amended was adopted, and the bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ANDREW J. LINDSAY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 455) for the relief of Andrew J. Lindsay.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc. (two-thirds of each House concurring therein), That Andrew J. Lindsay, of the State of Missouri, is hereby relieved of all political disabilities imposed upon him by the third section of the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution of the United States.

The report (by Mr. CULBERSON) was read, as follows:

The Committee on the Judiciary have considered this bill, and find it accompanied by a petition from the applicant in proper form.

The committee recommend its passage.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Chairman, this bill is for the purpose of relieving Andrew J. Lindsay of political disabilities. He was a distinguished officer in the Mexican war and belonged to the regiment, and was a distinguished officer of the regiment, which first entered the city of Mexico when the battlements of that city were assaulted. I move the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

THOMAS F. TOWNSEND.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 115) increasing the pension of Thomas F. Townsend.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to increase the pension of Thomas F. Townsend, late of Company B, Thirty-first Indiana Volunteers, to $45 per month, from and after the passage of this act.

The report (by Mr. MATSON) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 115) to increase the pension of Thomas F. Townsend, have had the same under consideration, and beg leave to submit the following report:

Claimant was a private in Company B, Thirty-first Regiment Indiana Volunteers, and is now a pensioner at the rate of $30 per month on account of gunshot wound of face, received in battle at Fort Donelson February 15, 1862.

The wound is described as follows: Ball passing from right to left through the superior maxillary bone, destroying the most of that bone and carrying away all the upper teeth, together with the alveolar processes and the anterior two-thirds of the roof of the mouth and a portion of the floor of the left orbit, together with a part of the cheek-bone on the same side. This exposes to full view the ethmoid and sphenoid cells and cavities of the nose clear up to the floor of the orbits, and enables one to easily pass two or three fingers into the opening through the roof of the mouth. He wears a silver plate, hammered out of a dime by a country doctor soon after his return from the Army, in the opening in the floor of the left orbit, to keep the eye from falling down, and an artificial palate of vulcanized rubber, without which he can neither speak nor swallow either water or food without great effort and pain.

It is impossible for him to masticate solid food, and consequently his digestion is greatly impaired and the nutrition very imperfect. He constantly suffers pain in his left eyeball, and will probably in the near future entirely lose the sight of that eye, if not of both eyes. His vision is now very imperfect, not being able at times to distinguish one object from another. He can not lie upon his back, because the secretions of the mouth and nose collect about the floor of the orbits, causing great pain and distress. The least mental excitement or warm weather causes nearly total blindness, thus much of the time requiring the aid and attendance of another person.

The pension now paid to this poor, unfortunate invalid is the highest that can be allowed under the general pension law, because he does not yet require the regular aid and attendance of another person. That the disability is much greater than that caused by the loss of a leg above the knee can not be questioned. Not only is he a constant sufferer from pain, but by reason of the great disfigurement and the attendant offensive odor from the wound is shut off from all association with his fellow-men.

The increase asked for is within the limit adopted by this committee in similar cases; and believing that relief should be granted in this case, the committee report favorably on the accompanying bill, and ask that it do pass.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MRS. DELILAH AGARD.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4516) granting a pension to Mrs. Delilah Agard.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mrs. Delilah Agard, widow of George Agard, late a private in Company B, One hundred and fourteenth Regiment New York Infantry Volunteers, and to pay her a pension from and after the passage of this act.

The report (by Mr. MORRILL) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4516) granting a pension to Mrs. Delilah Agard, submit the following report:

The evidence submitted in this case shows that claimant is the widow of George Agard, late private of Company B, One hundred and fourteenth New York Regiment; that soldier enlisted August 11, 1862, and was discharged June 8, 1865, by reason of General Orders No. 52, Headquarters Military Division, Washington, May 20, 1865, Major-General Hancock.

The regiment was taken to Elmira, N. Y., and was held there until June 17, 1865, on which day the regiment was mustered out and received their discharges. While the soldier was attempting to get on the train to return to his home he was accidentally thrown under the train and was killed. The widow is old, feeble, and very needy. She is compelled to go out to work to earn a livelihood.

These facts are fully established by the affidavits of Col. S. R. Perlee, Dr. H. H. Beecher, John Graff, Marianna Grant, John M. Mahrs, J. S. Fair, and Fannie Fair. The Pension Office can not entertain an application for pension in this case because he was killed after he had received his discharge, but in fact he was on his way home from an honorable service of three years, and his death was the direct result of such service.

Your committee recommend the passage of the bill with an amendment striking out all after the word "Volunteers" in line 8.

The amendment of the Committee on Invalid Pensions was agreed to; and the bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ISAIAH T. JOHNSON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2517) granting a pension to Isaiah T. Johnson.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Isaiah T. Johnson, late a private in Company A, Fifty-first Regiment of Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

The report (by Mr. MORRILL) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2517) granting a pension to Isaiah T. Johnson, have had the same under consideration, and beg leave to submit the following report:

Claimant enlisted August 13, 1861, in Company C, One hundred and thirty-eighth Pennsylvania Volunteers, and was discharged, on certificate of disability, April 24, 1863. He re-enlisted in Company A, Fifty-first Pennsylvania Volunteers, February 25, 1864, and was finally discharged July 19, 1865. On July 30, 1879, he filed an application for pension, setting forth disability from disease of chest, dizziness, and nervousness, due to overheating and exposure in May, 1864.

The claim has been rejected on the ground that the alleged disability is shown by the record to have existed in the first service, and, according to the medical certificate, prior to his enlistment. The certificate in question contains the following statements made by the captain and the surgeon of the post hospital from which soldier was discharged.

The captain says:

"Johnson has been a good soldier and always ready for duty until within the last sixty days. When enlisted he had the appearance of being perfectly sound."

The surgeon, however, states "soldier is incapable of performing duty because of valvular disease of heart, not incident to service."

The claimant's attention having been called to this apparent discrepancy between his allegation and the record, with reference to the time of the incurrence of the disability, he states that he took a severe cold in the first service, from the effects of which he was very sick, but thought himself sufficiently recovered to re-enlist, and did not again suffer from any trouble, until he received the sunstroke in May, 1864.

There is an abundance of testimony of neighbors showing that claimant was sound at first enlistment. Comrades, who are shown to be credible, testify to the sunstroke, while the record shows treatment for anæmia and palpitation of heart within a few days after the alleged sunstroke. Claimant has been a constant sufferer from the alleged disease ever since discharge, as disclosed by lay and medical evidence.

Your committee are of opinion that the evidence shows conclusively that claimant was sound at first enlistment, contracted the disability, but had sufficiently recovered to permit him to re-enlist, and that subsequent exposure resulted in permanent disability, which necessitated his transfer to the Veteran Reserve Corps.

It may be proper to add that the certificate of disability for discharge from said corps sets forth that soldier is suffering from disease of heart and anæmia contracted in service.

For the reasons above set forth, this committee returns the accompanying bill, and respectfully asks that it do pass.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MOSES F. JACKSON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3850 granting a pension to Moses F. Jackson.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Moses F. Jackson, late a landsman in the United States Navy, and at present confined in the State Insane Asylum at Concord, N. H.

The report (by Mr. GALLINGER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3850) granting a pension to Moses F. Jackson, submit the following report:

The substantial facts in this case are that soldier was honorably discharged from the naval service in August, 1864. Immediately after reaching home he was observed to be very nervous and irritable, which he claimed was due to a sunstroke received while in the service.

His brother, George W. Jackson, of Concord, N. H., testifies that soldier was an unusually healthy man when he enlisted, and that the unsoundness of mind was noticeable shortly after his return home, which he believes to have been contracted in the naval service.

The secretary of state of New Hampshire certifies to the reliability and good character of George W. Jackson, saying that any statements made by him concerning his brother can be relied upon.

Lucretia F. Shute makes affidavit that she has known soldier from infancy, having lived in the same house with him during his entire lifetime; that he was a very healthy boy and man; that shortly after his return from the Navy she began to notice that he was not well, being nervous and irritable, and complaining of trouble in his head; that he was very excitable and did many strange things, showing that he was not in his right mind; that he said then that he was suffering from the effects of a sunstroke which he had while in the service; that his symptoms became gradually worse, so that his confinement at home became necessary; that he was thus kept under restraint for a time, and that for several years he has been an inmate of the New Hampshire Asylum for the Insane, and is regarded as absolutely incurable. On the latter point the certificate of Dr. Charles P. Bancroft, superintendent of the asylum, is filed, showing that soldier is an incurable maniac.

This case was not submitted to the Pension Office for the reason that soldier had no hospital service, and his shipmates could not have been found to testify in his behalf. So long as there was hope of recovery his friends willingly cared for him and opposed applying for a pension, but now that his disease has assumed an incurable form, relief is sought from the Government. You committee desire to put on record their opposition to the principle of granting pensions for diseases not contracted in the service, but this case clearly establishes a presumption that soldier did suffer a disability to the brain while in the Navy, which presumption is strengthened by the fact that insanity is not hereditary in his family. For this reason, and not for the reason that he is now hopelessly insane, we believe that the petition should be allowed.

Your committee would recommend that the bill be amended by striking out the words "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws," and also all after the word "Navy," in the seventh line, and add to the bill the words "at the rate of $18 per month, payable to his legally-constituted guardian."

The amendments of the Committee on Invalid Pensions were agreed to; and the bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

LAURA D. PIERCE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4107) granting a pension to Laura D. Pierce.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be hereby authorized and directed to put on the pension-roll the name of Laura D. Pierce, widow of Artemus Pierce, of Company E, Fifteenth Vermont Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. GALLINGER) was read, as follows:

The papers on file in the Pension Department establish the fact that the soldier, Artemus Pierce, of Company E, Fifteenth Vermont Volunteers, was a sound man at enlistment. It further appears that he injured his knee in the service, and subsequently, from carrying lumber, produced umbilical hernia. For these disabilities he was pensioned, the injury to the knee having resulted in a severe form of chronic inflammatory rheumatism, involving the joint. Soldier died April 19, 1884, from general debility and disease of heart. The widow applied for a pension, but her claim was rejected on the ground that the disease of heart could not be accepted as a result of the diseases for which soldier was pensioned.

To get a clear idea of this case it is necessary to trace the disease from its beginning to its termination. It is conceded that soldier had a persistent rheumatic trouble, which followed him without intermission for more than twenty years, during which time his health was being gradually undermined. Repeated medical examinations show this fact. It is true that the existence of organic heart disease was not discovered until February, 1884, at which time he was examined by the board of pension examiners at Lancaster, N. H. It, however, by no means follows that the heart disease did not exist, in a modified form, anterior to this date; indeed, the conclusion is irresistible that the development of the disease was progressive. The findings of the Lancaster board were as follows:

"Right knee, inner side and front injured; swelled and puffed out by synovial fluid; deposit in joint grating, felt on movement of leg; very tender to touch under knee-cap and over condyles; inflammation of ends of tibia, femur, etc., inside the ligaments, which are weakened; can not flex the leg, but swings it in walking and drags it after the other in going up stairs; slight blow on heel will cause pain in joint. Extra amount of labor on left knee weakens that also.

"Umbilical hernia, opening nearly as large as silver half dollar, directly above umbilicus in median line; very tender upon pressure; reducible, but protrudes upon coughing; wears truss continually.

"Hypertrophy of heart, valvular insufficiency, continual blowing, regurgitation, mitral disease, apex beat almost lost in murmurs; applicant describes dizziness, nightmares, suffocating feelings, shortness of breath, pulse intermittent, losing seven or eight beats."

The board gave it as their opinion that the disabilities were incurred in the service, and rated soldier on each of them.

Dr. George F. Adams, of Lunenburgh, Vt., certifies as follows:

"I attended Artemus Pierce, late of Company E, Fifteenth Vermont Regiment, in his last sickness. He died from disease of heart and general debility, resulting, as I believe, from his army service. About a week before his final sickness commenced I saw him at his home in a debilitated condition, being quite feeble, without any acute disease. His lameness had much increased, and his stomach and bowels were troubling him. About one week later, or in March, 1884, he came to my office and wished me to give him some medicine, as he felt very weak and feeble. He was hardly able to walk about. While in my office he was taken worse, with a pain apparently through the apex of the heart and the sternum; also in left side and stomach. I carried him home and attended him until his death, which resulted from the diseases described, causing hypertrophy of the heart."

Dr. Joseph L. Patten, a distinguished physician of Whitefield, N. H., deposes as follows:

"Was called to see said soldier with Dr. G. F. Adams, of Lunenburgh, Vt., on April 1, 1884. Found him suffering from enlargement of the heart, with valvular disease; also from large umbilical hernia. The prognosis was that he could live only a few days, which proved correct, as he died in about three weeks. Having previously examined soldier in my capacity as examining surgeon for the Pension Department, it is my opinion that his sickness and death were caused by the rapid increase of the disabilities for which he was pensioned."

Every medical man of experience fully understands the intimate relationship between inflammatory rheumatism and organic heart disease—a relationship so close that it is a rare circumstance to find a healthy heart in a person who has had two or more attacks of so-called rheumatic fever. This soldier, it is conceded, had inflammatory rheumatism, circumscribed, it is true, extending over a period of more than twenty years, and so severe that it induced a calcareous deposit in the knee-joint. Who will venture to absolutely say that the rheumatic diathesis was not the cause of the heart disease? On the contrary, there is a reasonable probability, as the two physicians who attended soldier in his last illness unqualifiedly assert, that the rheumatic trouble, gradually undermining the system, and ultimately affecting the muscular structure of the heart, was the cause of soldier's death, a conclusion, however, that the medical officers of the Pension Department, whose decisions can only safely be made upon absolute proof, could not properly reach, but which Congress, taking into consideration the equities of the case, can safely indorse.

Your committee recommend that the bill be amended by adding, after the word "pension-roll," in the fourth line, the words "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws," and with this amendment recommend its passage.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the gentleman from Kansas to suggest the striking out, in the fourth line, of the word "put" and inserting the word "place." Without objection that change will be made.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. CASWELL. I ask the gentleman from Kansas to yield to me for a moment.

Mr. MORRILL. Certainly.

Mr. CASWELL. Mr. Chairman, my colleague [Mr. CLARK] has four bills upon this Calendar which he hoped to have reached this evening. He can not be present at the next meeting on Friday, being obliged to be absent from the city. I ask, in his behalf, unanimous consent, therefore, that he be permitted to call up one of his four cases and put it upon its passage.

Mr. MORRILL. There is no objection to that.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

Mr. TAULBEE. Let the bill be read, subject to objection.

CLARISSA HARVEY.

Mr. CASWELL. I send to the desk the bill (H. R. 7237) granting a pension to Clarissa Harvey, and move that the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar be discharged from its further consideration, and that the same be put upon its passage.

Mr. TAULBEE. Let it be read, subject to objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Clarissa Harvey, widow of Henry B. Harvey, late a private in Company C, Tenth Regiment Wisconsin Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. SAWYER) was read, as follows:

Clarissa Harvey is the widow of Henry B. Harvey, who served as a private in Company C, Tenth Wisconsin Volunteers, from October 5, 1861, to June 30, 1862, when discharged upon surgeon's certificate of disability. He died February 5, 1885. The soldier filed an application for pension February 20, 1878, on account of injury to right knee, alleged to have been incurred in the spring of 1862, by being struck by a log or plank of a bridge, while assisting in extricating a team and wagon which went down in the stream with said bridge. This application was rejected by the Pension Office, because of the certificate of disability, which sets forth that soldier is unfit for military duty by reason of "disease of the thigh-bone, accompanied with discharge of matter. Disease originated anterior to his enlistment." It is admitted by the parties at interest that at the age of ten years he did receive an injury, but denied that said injury was at the location of the subsequent army injury, or had any connection with the amputation of the limb in after years, and the death cause of the soldier, or that he was in any way disabled therefrom at enlistment.

Dr. Thomas P. Russell, of Oshkosh, Wis., testifies that in May, 1878, soldier consulted him in regard to disease of knee, which, on examination, was found to be so much diseased as to be entirely useless, and affiant advised the amputation of the leg above the knee, which he performed shortly thereafter. On examination of the leg, after its removal, there was found caries of the articular surfaces of the femur and tibia, with necrosis of the lower end of the shaft of the femur, and to the best of affiant's judgment the disease was of long standing. The amputated limb passed in the hands of Dr. La Count, who assisted in the amputation.

The latter states before a special examiner that the leg was very much atrophied throughout its entire length, with a bony anchylosis of the knee-joint. There were two or more fistulæ communicating with the lower third of the femur and condyles, just above the condyles on the inside of knee-joint, just above the popliteal space. He dissected the amputated leg, and found the shaft of the femur very much enlarged and was not entirely sound at point of amputation, which was about 5 or 6 inches above the knee-joint. The medullary canal was entirely obliterated, the bone being perfectly solid through the entire diameter, and it appeared that the old sore had been entirely absorbed and discharged as pus through an opening between the condyles above popliteal space, and new bone had formed entirely around it.

The sequestrum had disappeared or broken down and discharged through the fistulous openings, which must have taken years to accomplish. There was no indication that the disease of the tibia ever extended to the knee-joint, because above the enlargement of the tibia the bone is of usual normal diameter. The enlargement marks the full extent of the injury to the tibia. The patella and portion of the femur affiant gave to Dr. Senn, of Milwaukee.

Dr. Senn, professor of surgery at College of Physicians and Surgeons, Chicago, Ill., testifies:

"I have in my possession the bones of the right leg of a man, which I received from Dr. La Count, of Chilton, Wis., and which he stated to me were amputated by him from Henry B. Harvey. The bones are used by me in demonstrating to my class the effects of disease of bone. With the said bone now before me I state it as my opinion that the tibia, at about the junction of the middle with the upper third, presents evidence of previous inflammatory disease, in the shape of an enlargement with an irregular surface, but with no indication of a repetition of the same disease at a later date. The lower end of the femur of the same side I find enormously enlarged, with a round opening on the posterior surface of the same, leading down to a cavity in the interior of the bone, which contained a piece of loose detached dead bone (sequestrum). The knee-joint presents no evidence of disease, which would indicate that the process in the tibia had extended to the femur by continuity. I am of opinion that the disease of the tibia preceded that of the femur by several years. If this is the case, I am unable to trace a causative relation between the diseases of the two bones, and it is my opinion that the two diseases are due to separate and distinct causes at different times."

The invalid claim was rejected because of the adverse record and the claimant's inability to furnish the testimony of eye-witnesses to the injury. The case having been appealed to the Secretary of the Interior, that officer returned the papers to the medical referee for opinion as to the connection of the two disabilities, who, under date of November 15, 1887, rendered the following opinion:

"Upon the evidence in the case, judged from a medical standpoint, we may accept the disease of knee which existed in service and up to the time of amputation as a separate disability from the disease of tibia which existed prior to enlistment. Inflammation of bone following injuries as shown in this case would indicate that claimant had some constitutional taint, scrofula probably, which caused serious results to follow on not very serious injuries. * * * If it be admitted as proven that claimant's disease prior to service was limited to the tibia, and that disease of the knee was first shown in service, then, accepting the statement of Dr. Senn (an eminent surgeon) that the disease of tibia was limited to the middle third and the disease of femur to that bone, I think the case should be admitted."

In the face of this medical opinion, the rejection of the invalid claim was again affirmed by the Department on January 26 last, on the grounds heretofore stated, and the additional ground that anchylosis of the knee was due to the necrosis existing in the thigh-bone, and aside from the disability produced in this way the knee was free from disease.

While it is true that no eye-witnesses to the injury in service have testified, yet from the testimony in the case, including that obtained through special examination, there is no doubt that the soldier was injured under the circumstances alleged. Drs. Olmsted and Brett, who attended the soldier more or less from time of the operation until death, give it as their opinion that the death cause was the direct cause of the amputation of the limb. He became a constant sufferer from vertigo, accompanied by flushing of face, frequently followed by hemorrhage from the nose, the last one about six weeks before death. This condition continued until soldier was stricken with apoplexy, which caused death.

Your committee are of opinion that the claim of the soldier was a valid one, and would not hesitate to recommend favorable action in his case should such action after the death of the claimant be permissible under the rules of the House. But as this can not be done, the committee are fully impressed with the justness of his widow's claim, and, being left penniless, believe that whatever doubts may exist should be solved in her favor, and therefore return accompanying bill, with the recommendation that it do pass.

Before the reading of the above report was concluded——

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, this seems to be a very lengthy report, and I ask unanimous consent that it be printed in the RECORD, and the reading be suspended at this point.

Mr. TAULBEE. There is one point of doubt that I have in the case, which can probably be explained more briefly than by the reading of the report. That is as to the death of this soldier resulting from a disability incurred in the service.

Mr. CASWELL. A careful reading of the report will disclose the fact that the Commissioner of Pensions in rejecting the application was misled. It was supposed at the office that the death resulted from a disease of the bone of the leg, which commenced when he was a boy ten years old, but afterwards it was discovered that the true cause of his death was as stated in the report. This soldier died, never having received a pension.

Mr. TAULBEE. I understood from that portion of the report which was read that the application of this soldier for a pension was rejected in the Pension Office on the ground that the disability was not incurred in the service.

Mr. CASWELL. That was shown afterwards to have been a mistake.

Mr. TAULBEE. But that his death resulted from other causes. If, however, there is medical authority in support of the claim that his death was the result of injury received in the service, or if there is reasonable presumption that such was the case, I shall not object.

Mr. CASWELL. That is the conclusion of the committee, reached after a very careful consideration of the testimony.

There being no objection, the further reading of the report was dispensed with, and was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as above.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

FREDERICK AUGUSTIN.

Mr. GUENTHER. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Private Calendar the bill (H. R. 5499) granting an increase of pension to Frederick Augustin and put it upon its passage.

Mr. TAULBEE. Let the bill be read, subject to objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Frederick Augustin, late a private in Company I, Twenty-first Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, who was pensioned by certificate numbered 45622, and to pay him a pension at the rate of $45 per month, in lieu of the pension he is now receiving.

The report (by Mr. SAWYER) was read, as follows:

Augustin is now in receipt of pension at the rate of $30 per month for loss of left leg below the knee, incurred in battle at Resaca, Ga., May 14, 1864. In addition thereto he is suffering from hyperæmic erythema of the right foot, which, according to the evidence on file, was contracted while in hospital, after the amputation of left leg. The Bureau of Pensions can not grant an increase of pension on account of this additional disability, because both disabilities combined do not render the pensioner so totally helpless as to require the regular aid and attendance of another person in order to entitle him to the next highest rate provided by the general pension laws.

This additional disability, in connection with the loss of the other leg, interferes greatly with the soldier's ability to perform manual labor or exercise, and believing that he is entitled to favorable consideration at the hands of Congress, your committee return the accompanying bill, with the recommendation that it do pass, amended, however, by striking out the word "forty-five," in line 10, and inserting therein instead the word "thirty-six."

Mr. TAULBEE. I believe this bill provides that the pension thereby granted is to be in lieu of the pension now received. He seems, therefore, to be already on the pension-roll. I think a preferable phraseology would be that the pension be increased; but as this is already in the bill I shall not make objection, but let it stand as here suggested: "in lieu of the pension he is now receiving."

Mr. GUENTHER. He could not draw two pensions, any way.

Mr. TAULBEE. Of course not.

The amendment proposed by the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. STONE, of Kentucky, having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. DOCKERY reported that the Committee of the Whole House, having had under consideration the special order, had directed him to report sundry bills with various recommendations.

Mr. NELSON. I suggest that, unless objected to, all the bills reported be read and passed at once.

Mr. DOCKERY. Except those that have been amended and those for the removal of political disabilities, which can be acted upon separately.

Mr. TAULBEE. I suggest that the bills reported without amendment be read by their titles.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In the absence of objection that will be done.

BILLS PASSED.

The following bills, reported from the Committee of the Whole without amendment, were ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, were accordingly read the third time, and passed:

A bill (H. R. 2218) to increase the pension of James A. Buck;
A bill (H. R. 863) granting a pension to Malinda Vest;
A bill (H. R. 442) granting a pension to Emily B. Newell;
A bill (H. R. 445) granting a pension to Laura A. Wright;
A bill (H. R. 85) granting a pension to Mrs. Mary Jane Case;
A bill (H. R. 418) granting a pension to William H. Brokenshaw;
A bill (H. R. 441) granting a pension to Eliza J. Currier;
A bill (H. R. 628) granting a pension to Juliette Stone;
A bill (H. R. 115) to increase the pension of Thomas F. Townsend;
A bill (H. R. 2517) granting a pension to Isaiah T. Johnson; and
A bill (H. R. 7237) granting a pension to Clarissa Harvey.

The following bills were reported with amendments, the amendments were agreed to, and the bills as amended were ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed were accordingly read the third time, and passed:

A bill (H. R. 443) granting an increase of pension to Albert G. Fifield;
A bill (H. R. 4835) for the relief of Everard Flynn;
A bill (H. R. 806) for the relief of Mary Morford;
A bill (H. R. 3711) granting a pension to Harriet V. Stockton;
A bill (H. R. 2617) granting a pension to Mary Bailey:
A bill (H. R. 4516) granting a pension to Mrs. Delilah Agard;
A bill (H. R. 3850) granting a pension to Moses F. Jackson;
A bill (H. R. 4107) granting a pension to Laura D. Pierce; and
A bill (H. R. 5499) granting an increase of pension to Frederick Augustin.

The following bills were reported with amendments, which were adopted, and the bills as amended were ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed were accordingly read the third time, and passed:

A bill (H. R. 4812) to grant a pension to Squire Admin; the title being amended so as to read: "A bill to grant a pension to Squire Admire;" and

A bill (H. R. 5766) granting a pension to Miss Cappie Harsh; the title being amended so as to read: "A bill granting a pension to Miss Capitola V. Harsh."

The following House bills reported from the Committee of the Whole, for the removal of political disabilities, were ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, they were accordingly read the third time, and passed (two-thirds voting in favor thereof):

A bill (H. R. 5859) to remove the political disabilities of Horace A. Browne, of Virginia; and

A bill (H. R. 4694) to remove the political disabilities of Paul F. Faison.

The bill (H. R. 823) granting a pension to Hannah C. De Witt, reported from the Committee of the Whole, was laid upon the table.

The bill (S. 451) granting a pension to Hannah C. De Witt, reported from the Committee of the Whole, was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

The bill (S. 455) for the relief of Andrew J. Lindsay, reported from the Committee of the Whole, was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed (two-thirds voting therefor).

RECONSIDERATION.

Mr. MORRILL moved to reconsider the several votes by which bills had been passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JAMES H. REEVE.

Mr. BACON. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Private Calendar for consideration at this time the bill which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 3898) granting increase of pension to James H. Reeve.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to place on the pension-roll the name of James H. Reeve, late a captain of Company H, and a brevet major of the Third New York Volunteers (infantry), at the rate of $45 per month in lieu of the amount per month he is now receiving.

Mr. TAULBEE. Let the report be read, subject to objection.

Mr. BACON. Perhaps I can make a brief explanation which may obviate the necessity of reading the report. Mr. Reeve was wounded, and his leg was amputated in the field. The amputation, by mistake, was made below the knee. The leg never healed, and he has been subjected to three amputations still below the knee. He never has been able to wear an artificial leg.

The rate proposed in the bill is the same as is paid to all soldiers suffering from amputation of the leg where the amputation is of such a character that the person can not wear an artificial leg.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BACON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MRS. LEORA GEAR.

Mr. CONGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Private Calendar House bill 6732 and put it upon its passage.

There was no objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-rolls the name of Mrs. Leora Gear, widow of Richard Gear, late a private in Company G, Twentieth Regiment Iowa Volunteers, and pay her a pension, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws. The pension to commence from the date of her husband's death, February, 1887.

Mr. TAULBEE. Mr. Speaker, there seems to be a departure from the general rule in fixing the date of the commencement of the pension in this case.

Mr. CONGER. This is the case of the widow of a poor soldier who was placed on the pension-roll by special act last Congress and who died eight months after the pension was granted. The committee have reported certain amendments, which will probably make the bill meet the gentleman's objection.

The following amendments, reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, were agreed to:

Line 5, after the word "Leora," insert "E."

Lines 8, 9, and 10, strike out the words: "The pension to commence from the date of her husband's death, February, 1887."

Mr. TAULBEE. Mr. Speaker, let the report be printed in the RECORD in connection with the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In the absence of objection, that order will be made.

The report (by Mr. SPOONER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6732) granting a pension to Mrs. Leora Gear, respectfully report:

That Leora E. Gear is the widow of Richard Gear, late a private in Company G, Twentieth Regiment Iowa Volunteers, who was pensioned under general law for disease of eyes resulting from fever contracted in the service, and was subsequently pensioned by special act of Congress for total blindness.

Said Richard Gear died March 18, 1887, and his said widow's application for pension was rejected by the Pension Office on the ground that soldier died of shock or anæmia of the brain.

Dr. E. F. Linton, who was the soldier's family physician, and treated the soldier from 1870 to the time of his death, and attended him in his final illness, testifies at length and in detail to the steady and continuous progress of his disease from year to year with increasing disability, and says:

"I am satisfied that I understood his disease well, and can truly say that his disease was but one and the same for which he was pensioned, except in degree, which became more serious from year to year until it caused death."

It was practically determined by the granting of the special pension for total blindness that such blindness was the result of ataxia (as determined by the examination and report of an oculist, Dr. F. E. Crittenden, in January, 1885), and that ataxia was the result of the fever while in the service; and from all the testimony in the case your committee are of the opinion that the disease of the eyes, the failure of sight, and the total blindness were the successive symptoms and evidences of the progress of the disease and its results, and that the death of the soldier from shock or anæmia of the brain was the termination and result of ataxia with which, as the testimony clearly shows, he was afflicted.

Your committee therefore recommend the passage of the bill, first amending same as follows:

Insert "E." between the words "Leora" and "Gear," in the fifth line, and strike out all after the word "laws," in the eighth line.

Also amend title of bill so as to read: "Granting a pension to Mrs. Leora E. Gear."

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

The title of the bill was amended so as to read: "Granting a pension to Mrs. Leora E. Gear."

Mr. CONGER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. BYNUM. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly the House (at 10 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, March 3, 1888.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by Rev. T. L. FLOOD, editor of the Chautauquan, Meadville, Pa.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

ACCOUNTS UNDER THE EIGHT-HOUR LAW.

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the House, reports of the First Comptroller and of the Commissioner of Customs upon claims arising under the bill for the adjustment of accounts under the eight-hour law; which was referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. TAULBEE. Mr. Speaker, I ask that that report be read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This is not a report from a committee.

Mr. TAULBEE. I understand that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If the gentleman insists upon it, the communication will be read.

Mr. TAULBEE. I will be content to have it printed in the RECORD.

Mr. RANDALL. What is the subject of the communication?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting reports of the First Comptroller and the Commissioner of Customs upon claims arising under the bill for the adjustment of accounts under the eight-hour law.

Mr. RANDALL. That ought to be printed in the RECORD. Of course it will also be printed as a document.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the printing of this communication in the RECORD?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The communication is as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, Washington, D. C., March 2, 1888.

SIR: In compliance with the resolution of the House of Representatives of the 16th ultimo, "That the Secretary of the Treasury * * * be, and they are hereby, requested to inform the House what amounts are deemed necessary to pay the claims arising in their respective Departments, under the provisions of a bill now pending in the House entitled H. R. 1322, providing for the adjustment of the accounts of laborers and mechanics arising under the eight-hour law, should said bill become a law," I have the honor to transmit herewith a copy of the report of the First Comptroller, of the 18th ultimo, and the report of the Commissioner of Customs, of the 23d ultimo, upon the subject of said resolution.

Respectfully, yours,

HUGH S. THOMPSON,
Acting Secretary.

The SPEAKER of the House of Representatives.

[Indorsement.]

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, FIRST COMPTROLLER'S OFFICE,
February 18, 1888.

Respectfully returned to the honorable Secretary of the Treasury with the remark that there is no claim pending in this office of the character referred to in this resolution; nor has this office any means of ascertaining what amounts would be required for the purposes indicated in the resolution.

M. J. DURHAM, Comptroller.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF COMMISSIONER OF CUSTOMS,
Washington City, D. C., February 23, 1888.

SIR: In reply to your reference of H. R. bill 1322, and the resolution of the House of Representatives of February 16, 1888, requesting information as to the amounts deemed necessary to pay the claims arising under the provisions of said bill should it become a law, I have the honor to report—

That there are no claims now pending in this office for work performed in excess of that required by the act of June 25, 1868.

There have been laborers employed in the custom-house at New York, and other custom-houses, who were paid at a certain rate per hour for more than eight hours of a day; say, for example, ten hours at 40 cents per hour.

Whether it is intended by the framer of bill 1322 that these laborers shall be allowed $4 per day for every eight hours of work, notwithstanding their contracts and receipts, is perhaps a question. If such be the intent, it will take some time to look over all the accounts and vouchers of laborers so employed since June 25, 1868. But I do not think the bill fairly admits of such interpretation. As to any other laborers, there would be nothing in the accounts here to show how many hours they worked per day.

That information might possibly be obtained from the collectors of customs, but it would involve, I think, considerable extra labor in the clerical force of the offices, and at best would be very uncertain.

I do not think that the collectors could give the requisite data upon which to estimate with any degree of accuracy the amounts necessary to pay the claims, for the reason that they could not specify any claims except such as might have been casually recorded.

Respectfully, yours,

JOHN S. McCALMONT,
Commissioner of Customs.

The Hon. SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY.

OFFICES FOR FISH COMMISSION.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an amended estimate from the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries of a provision for rent of offices for the Fish Commission for the ensuing fiscal year; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

REPAIRS OF PUBLIC BUILDING, LEAVENWORTH, KANS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an estimate from the Supervising Architect of a provision for substituting iron for wooden stairs in the public building at Leavenworth, Kans.; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

PRESERVATION OF COURT RECORDS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an estimate from the Attorney-General of an appropriation for preservation of court records; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

ERECTION OF PUBLIC BUILDINGS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a letter from the Supervising Architect recommending legislation in regard to contingent expenses for superintendence of public buildings during the process of erection; which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

R. A. HURLEY, ADMINISTRATOR, VS. THE UNITED STATES.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House a letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings of fact in the case of Reuben A. Hurley, administrator, vs. The United States; which was referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

QUALIFICATION OF A MEMBER-ELECT.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege. Hon. HENRY W. SEYMOUR, successor to the late Hon. Seth C. Moffatt as a member of this House from the State of Michigan, is present and prepared to take the oath of office, and I ask that the oath be now administered to him.

Mr. SEYMOUR accordingly presented himself, and was duly qualified by taking the prescribed oath.

S. D. BARCLAY AND OTHERS.

Mr. MILLS. I ask unanimous consent that Senate bill No. 147, for the relief of S. D. Barclay, G. D. Adams, and William H. Kimbrew, be taken up and put on its passage. It has been favorably reported by the Committee on Claims of this House, and is now on the Private Calendar.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That S. D. Barclay, G. D. Adams, and William H. Kimbrew, sureties on the bond of Samuel A. Blaine, late Indian agent, against whom a judgment was rendered in the United States court for the northern district of Texas, at Waco, Tex., for the sum of $5,000, on the 22d of November, 1886, be, and are hereby, released and acquitted of all liability for or on account of said judgment, or of the bond on which it was founded; and said judgment as to said sureties is hereby canceled and annulled.

Mr. HOLMAN. I trust that some explanation of this bill will be made.

Mr. MILLS. Let the report of the Senate Committee on Claims be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

This bill was reported favorably in both the Senate and House in the Forty-ninth Congress, and this committee readopt the Senate report at last session, as follows:

This bill is for the relief of S. D. Barclay, G. D. Adams, and William H. Kimbrew, who were sureties on the bond of Samuel A. Blaine, late Indian agent at Wichita agency, and against whom, as such sureties, judgment was rendered in the United States court for the northern district of Texas, at Waco, for the sum of $5,000, on the 25th day of November, A. D. 1886.

Said Blaine was appointed Indian agent at Wichita agency, and gave bond as such agent on February 8, 1859, and his service ran up to June 30, 1860, when he resigned and filed his final account-current, which showed the Government to be in his debt in the sum of $92.83.

Blaine died in 1856. No notice of any claim of the Government against Blaine was ever given him in his lifetime, and none was given his sureties until the year 1883, more than twenty-three years after his resignation and final account-current, and more than sixteen years after his death.

Congress has repeatedly relieved parties in similar cases of long delay on the part of the Government, and for reasons that must strongly impress all fair-minded men. The Senate of the United States has recognized the equity and justice of thus relieving persons during the present Congress. But in addition to this strong ground for relief, the parties in this case have other facts in their favor.

Except in two or three items of comparatively small amounts, the alleged deficiency of Blaine is in his property account. He is charged with large quantities of goods for which the papers now in the Second Auditor's Office do not show that he has satisfactorily accounted. The Second Auditor, having been requested by this committee to furnish all the facts and information in his possession in this case, forwarded copies of accounts, all of which are printed herewith for the information of the Senate, and accompanied them with a letter, which is also printed, and from which we make the following extracts:

"It is well known, however, that under the superintendency system it was the frequent practice for the superintendent to send invoices in advance of delivery, requiring the agent to receipt for the goods which were supposed to be en route for the agency, and the accounting officers are satisfied that in many cases the goods never actually passed into the agent's hands, though in the evidence furnished he was chargeable with the value thereof. This office is strongly inclined to think this a case of that kind, the more so as an examination of the first property returns of Blaine's successor, M. Leeper, shows that the latter entered as received from Superintendent Rector a large quantity of goods of like description with those in question, and the paucity and incompleteness of the records as then kept prevent certainty on this point. The papers furnish strong probability of the identity in many cases of the goods charged to Blaine with those taken up by Leeper.

"It is quite possible that in the disturbed state of the country the supplies invoiced to Blaine and receipted for by him did not arrive till his successor had taken charge. One other remark may be justifiable in this connection. It is well known that the Indian Office has stored away, waiting the slow action of an insufficient force of assorting clerks, a large number of accounts, documents, and other evidence relating to the service before the war, the fires to which that office has been subject having compelled those records to be stored in chaotic condition. It is possible, therefore, that the evidence which might throw light on the transaction involved in this case may be concealed in that mass of papers."

In addition to all this, it appears that the records, papers, etc., at the Wichita agency were destroyed during the war by Quantrell's band.

Mr. Blaine is shown to have been a man of correct habits and good character. He left the agency on horseback and lived and died a poor man.

Under all these circumstances this committee believe it to be very much more likely that Blaine either receipted for these goods, not having received them, or that he accounted for them and his accounts have been lost or mislaid, than that he should have misappropriated them.

The parties asking relief say that they were in comfortable circumstances when they executed the bond, but that they can not now pay this judgment without waiving their exemptions under the law and selling their homesteads and leaving their families homeless.

Under all the circumstances of this case your committee believe these parties entitled fairly to the relief they ask, and they report the bill back to the Senate and recommend its passage.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill; which was ordered to a third reading, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MILLS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

EXPENSES OF INVESTIGATION OF "TRUSTS," ETC.

Mr. BACON. I desire to present a privileged resolution, which I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That a sum not to exceed $5,000 to pay the expenses of the Committee on Manufactures in conducting the investigation ordered by the House into certain alleged combinations, and their methods and effect upon the prices of the necessaries of life, and for other purposes, by resolution adopted January 25, 1888, shall be immediately available and payable out of the contingent fund of the House, on order of the chairman and one member of the said committee, in sums not exceeding $1,000 at one time; and all vouchers for any such expenditures shall be likewise certified to by the chairman and one member of the committee.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. BACON moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

WILLIAM PFAENDER.

Mr. LIND. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill which I send to the desk—House bill 3766, for the relief of William Pfaender.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, this day has been set apart for consideration of a bill of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads; but I am willing to yield a few moments for requests for unanimous consent provided the propositions so brought in excite no discussion. If they elicit debate I shall at once call the regular order.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $883.50 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the reimbursement of William Pfaender, late lieutenant-colonel of the Second Regiment Minnesota Cavalry Volunteers, for the loss of property destroyed by the burning of Government buildings at Fort Ridgely, Minn., on the 19th day of January, 1865.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Let us have the report read.

The report (by Mr. THOMAS, of Wisconsin) was read, as follows:

The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3766) for the relief of William Pfaender, late lieutenant-colonel of the Second Regiment Cavalry Volunteers, in command of the post of Fort Ridgely, in the second subdistrict of Minnesota, from the spring of 1851 until December, 1865, and to reimburse him for the loss of wearing apparel, household goods, and provisions by the fire at said post, which occurred on the night of January 19, 1865, while Colonel Pfaender was in command of said post, have had the same under consideration, and report as follows:

The said headquarters building was discovered to be on fire in consequence of a defective chimney. As it was of light material and there was no apparatus for extinguishing fires at hand, the building burned to the ground in a very short time. That after giving the alarm the claimant used every effort to extinguish the fire, but finding it impossible, he directed his whole attention and energy to the saving of the Government property and the records in his custody, and to prevent the spreading of the fire to the adjoining row of officers' quarters, which was in imminent danger of being destroyed, but which he, by his well-directed efforts, succeeded in saving. That after Colonel Pfaender had succeeded in getting control over the fire and saving the most valuable of the Government property and records, he turned over the command of the force at work to Capt. John Jones, of the Third Minnesota Battery, the next ranking officer, for the purpose of devoting his personal attention to the saving of his private property in the building. For this, however, he was too late, as the fire had made such progress that it was impossible to reach the central and rear parts of the building, and the result was that without any fault or neglect of Colonel Pfaender almost his entire personal effects, wearing apparel, household goods, and provisions were totally destroyed. It is evident that if he had been less zealous in his efforts to save the Government property under his charge and to prevent the spreading of the conflagration he might readily have saved his own.

The bill he presents, which is itemized, is fair and reasonable, and the amount claimed is less than the cash value of the goods at the time of the loss. Under the general act of March 3, 1885, which provides for compensation to officers for loss of property under similar circumstances, Colonel Pfaender made an application to the War Department for allowance of his claim, but the Department decided that his claim having occurred "in time of war" was excluded from the provisions of that act. Dr. Alfred Muller, assistant surgeon at said post, was allowed compensation for the loss sustained by him by the same fire (see chapter 152, volume 20, Statutes at Large, and House Report 490, second session Forty-fifth Congress).

Under these circumstances the committee, in view of all the surrounding facts in this case, and in consideration of the noble and successful efforts of Colonel Pfaender to save great loss to the Government when his personal property was in peril and was lost thereby, recommend the passage of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. BLAND. This seems to be a very singular bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. BLAND. I am not objecting, but I hope the House will give this bill due consideration before passing it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. LIND] asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of this bill. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The question is on ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. BLAND. This seems to be a very remarkable bill, and I hope we shall have some explanation of it.

Mr. LIND. I will gladly explain it.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, if I understand this bill, it provides simply that the Government shall make payment for the destruction of private property with which the Government had nothing to do; or if it had, the claim for it has been rejected at the proper Department. This Congress seems, in the judgment of many people, to have been constituted a board of appeal for all the rejected and trumped-up claims that may be sent here from various parts of the country. Every member's desk is flooded with them every day. We are proceeding here to dispose of the surplus by the passage of bills of every character that can be imagined. The public mind has become corrupted and debauched by the class of bills which are being passed daily by this Congress, and it is time that a halt should be called.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, is this debate proceeding by unanimous consent?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair asked for unanimous consent, and no objection was made to considering the bill. The gentleman from Missouri then took the floor to debate the bill, as he had a right to do.

Mr. DOCKERY. I desired to call the regular order if the debate were proceeding by unanimous consent.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, the regular order ought to be called a little more frequently, and my colleague [Mr. DOCKERY] ought to have called it before this bill came up.

It is time for some one to call the attention of the House and the country to the character of the bills which are constantly passing through Congress—not cases where claims have been examined by the Court of Claims and certified to be just, but cases of claims rejected by the Departments. Our Calendars are full of them. I say it is about time that the House should adopt a rule that when a claim has had fair consideration before one of the Departments of this Government the action had upon it shall be accepted as a finality. Otherwise there is no use of referring claims to the Quartermaster-General, the Court of Claims, the Commissioner of Pensions, or any other tribunal. Unless such decisions are to be final we may as well have the whole business here, and resolve ourselves into a committee of claim agents, doing nothing else than considering these matters; for we have done but little else thus far during this Congress.

Mr. LIND. Mr. Speaker, I merely wish to call the attention of the gentleman from Missouri to the facts in this case, for he is entirely mistaken in regard to them.

While Colonel Pfaender, the claimant, was in command of the post at Fort Ridgely a fire occurred by which he lost all his property. This occurred, Mr. Speaker, in my district and within 20 miles of my own town, so that I am familiar with the facts. This post was constructed like all the old frontier posts, and consisted in part of a long row of wooden buildings. This officer, the claimant, first discovered the fire, and instead of making an effort to save his own property, he at once proceeded to alarm the post and succeeded in getting the men out and saving the records of the Government and the other wooden buildings, thus securing a saving to the Government of about $15,000 worth of property. When this was secured he turned his attention to the saving of his own property, consisting of household goods, clothing, and provisions for his family, but all that he had had been destroyed.

There is a general law providing that in cases of that kind, where officers sustain losses when they are in good faith engaged in saving public property, they may apply to the Treasury Department for reimbursement; but unfortunately the provisions of that act do not apply to losses that occurred during the war; hence this claim is not covered by the statute. It is not barred, though, on the merits of the case, but simply because it did not come within the jurisdiction of the Department to allow it. The committee unanimously report that this claim is just and reasonable and should be allowed; and I think, after Colonel Pfaender has gone almost twenty-five years without reimbursement for his loss, that there ought to be no hesitancy in paying it now.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. What is the amount involved?

Mr. LIND. Eight hundred and sixty-three dollars.

Mr. DOCKERY. Call the previous question.

Mr. LIND. I demand the previous question.

Mr. BLAND. The report shows that this claim had been rejected in the Department twenty-odd years ago. Now, if we are to open up all these old and rejected cases at this late date, why then let us do it in a body and know what we are about.

Mr. LIND. If it was rejected then, is that any good reason why we should rob him now?

Mr. GUENTHER. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. LIND. I will.

Mr. GUENTHER. Is this Colonel Pfaender, of New Ulm?

Mr. LIND. The same gentleman.

Mr. GUENTHER. Then I wish to say to the House that I personally know him, and can vouch for the fact that no more honorable and upright gentleman can be found; and I am certain that if Colonel Pfaender had not a just claim he would never come here and present one.

Mr. DOCKERY. Will the gentleman demand the previous question?

Mr. LIND. I demand the previous question.

Mr. TAULBEE. I ask unanimous consent that the previous question be considered as ordered.

There was no objection, and the previous question was ordered, under the operation of which the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

The question recurred on the passage of the bill.

Mr. BLAND. On that I demand a division. I want to see if this House is going to pass these bills.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 142, noes 24.

So the bill was passed.

Mr. LIND moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

COUNTY OF SAN JUAN, NEW MEXICO.

Mr. JOSEPH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the House Calendar and put upon its passage the bill (H. R. 1983) to ratify an act entitled "An act creating the county of San Juan," in the Territory of New Mexico.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act of the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of New Mexico, passed February 24, 1887, entitled "An act creating the county of San Juan," be, and the same is hereby, ratified and confirmed.

SEC. 2. That the action of the governor of said Territory, in appointing the several county officers of said county, is hereby ratified and approved; and that the said several officers shall hold their respective offices until their successors are elected and qualified.

SEC. 3. That at the next general election of officers in said Territory the qualified voters of said county of San Juan may, and they are hereby, authorized to vote, by a separate ballot, for some place within said county for the county seat; and the place receiving the largest number of votes shall thereafter be the permanent county seat of said county of San Juan.

The committee recommended the insertion after the word "approved," in line 3 of section 2, of the words, "all acts done or performed by said officers of said county in their official capacity are hereby validated."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. STEELE. I want to inquire of the gentleman first whether this bill has been reported by any committee of this Congress?

Mr. JOSEPH. Yes, sir; by the Committee on the Territories.

Mr. WARNER. It is the unanimous report.

Mr. STEELE. Then I have no objection.

Mr. BLAND. Let us have the report read.

The report (by Mr. JOSEPH) was read, as follows:

The Committee on the Territories, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1983) to ratify an act entitled "An act creating the county of San Juan," in the Territory of New Mexico, having had the same under consideration, beg leave to submit the following report, and recommend the passage of the bill as amended.

The Territorial Assembly of the Territory of New Mexico in 1887, and on the 24th day of February in said year, created the county of San Juan, in said Territory, taking the same from the western portion of the county Rio Arriba, for the reason that the people in that portion of the then county of Rio Arriba were separated from the county seat of said county by an impassable mountain barrier for nearly six months in each year, making it almost impossible for the citizens of that portion of the county to attend the Territorial courts and county business, being often compelled to travel 150 miles to reach the county seat of Rio Arriba County. The said county of San Juan was immediately organized after the passage of the act creating it. The governor of the Territory of New Mexico, under the provisions of the act, appointed all county officers, and since then the entire county machinery has been in successful operation, and the Territorial district courts have been held in said county, by order of the supreme court of the Territory of New Mexico. The county of San Juan has been in existence for one year, and in that time its population has doubled itself, and the county is generally prosperous; but it is feared that the act of Congress passed July 30, 1886, prohibiting the passage of local or special laws in the Territories of the United States, to limit Territorial indebtedness, and for other purposes, may impair the legality of the act creating the aforesaid county, and it is deemed necessary that Congress should ratify the same.

There being no objection, the bill was considered, the amendment agreed to, and the bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WARNER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. DOCKERY. I wish to give notice that after one more recognition on that side of the House I shall demand the regular order.

Mr. TAULBEE. I hope the gentleman will not issue such a threat as that after we have been so amiable this morning. [Laughter.] I have been attempting to get on that list for at least two months past, and I am not going to complain of not having been recognized; but I think that there ought to be some recognition to such bills as that which has just been passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that the Chair has no list extending back for two months. The Chair arranges the order of recognition day by day.

Mr. TAULBEE. I did not mean, Mr. Speaker, to intimate that the Chair had any such list. I only spoke of my own efforts to try to get recognition for a most worthy claimant from my State for that length of time.

NANCY RAINS.

Mr. BUTLER. I ask unanimous consent to take up from the Private Calendar for present consideration the bill (H. R. 6343) to increase the pension of Namy Roins, the oldest Revolutionary pensioner on the rolls, she being nearly ninety-six years of age.

The bill was reported with amendments from the Committee on Pensions. As proposed to be amended it reads as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to increase the pension of Nancy Rains, widow of John Rains, deceased, late a Revolutionary soldier, to $30 per month, she being the oldest pensioner on the Revolutionary rolls, to wit, ninety-six years next June. She now is drawing $8 per month, she being poor and dependent entirely on her pension for her support and care; that the same commence from and after the passage of this bill.

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill to increase the pension of Nancy Rains, the oldest Revolutionary pensioner on the rolls, she being nearly ninety-six years of age."

The amendments reported by the committee were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BUTLER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The title was amended as recommended by the committee.

REVENUE-CUTTER FOR CHARLESTON, S. C.

Mr. DIBBLE. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Union Calendar for present consideration the bill (H. R. 1818) for construction of a revenue-cutter for Charleston, S. C., in maintenance of the service, to replace the United States revenue-cutter McCulloch.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $75,000, if so much be necessary, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purpose of building a new revenue-cutter to be stationed at Charleston, S. C., for service on the South Atlantic coast, in the place of the United States revenue-cutter McCulloch, now in so dilapidated a condition as to be unequal to the requirements of the service.

Mr. BLAND. Let the report be read, subject to objection.

The report (by Mr. PHELAN) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1818) for the construction of a revenue-cutter for Charleston, S. C., in maintenance of the service, to replace the United States revenue-cutter McCulloch, have had same under consideration, and believing that there is urgent necessity for the construction of this new cutter, they beg leave to report the bill to the House and recommend its passage.

The communication of the Secretary of the Treasury in answer to a reference of the bill for his views, appended hereto, contains his recommendations for the building of the cutter.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, January 23, 1888.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of letter of the Committee on Commerce, House of Representatives, of the 18th instant, inclosing, for the views of this Department, House bill No. 1818, "for construction of a revenue-cutter for Charleston, S. C., in maintenance of the service, to replace the United States revenue-cutter McCulloch."

In reply, you are respectfully informed that the McCulloch patrols the coast of South Carolina, from Georgetown to Beaufort, for the assistance of commerce and the protection of the revenue. She was purchased from the War Department in December, 1866, and had been known as the Mosswood in that district.

This vessel was recently examined by the superintendent of construction and consulting engineer, United States revenue marine, who found her hull very badly decayed and boiler almost worn out, the engine being the only part capable of being repaired at moderate cost for continued service; they therefore report that she is "in such general bad condition or so illy adapted to the service they are of the opinion she is not worthy of having any large sum of money expended on her for repairs, and recommend that she be replaced by a new vessel of modern type in every respect at the earliest practicable date."

It is believed that this vessel can be replaced by a new one of suitable form of construction for the sum of $75,000.

The bill submitted is herewith returned for such action as may be deemed proper in the premises.

Respectfully, yours,

C. S. FAIRCHILD, Secretary.

Hon. MARTIN F. CLARDY,
Chairman Committee on Commerce, House of Representatives.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. DIBBLE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BRIDGES ACROSS RED RIVER.

Mr. GIFFORD. I ask unanimous consent to call up from the Private Calendar for consideration at this time the bill (H. R. 7348) granting to the city of Grand Forks, Dak., the right to build two free bridges across Red River.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the city of Grand Forks, a municipal corporation organized under the laws of the Territory of Dakota, be, and the same is hereby, authorized by its proper officers to construct and maintain two bridges, and approaches thereto, over the Red River of the North, at the most accessible points within said city, across said river to the most convenient point or points in the State of Minnesota. Said bridge or bridges shall be constructed to provide for the free passage of wagons and vehicles of all kinds, for the transit of animals, for foot-passengers, and for all street railways as may desire the use of said bridge.

SEC. 2. That any bridge built under this act and subject to its limitations shall be a lawful structure, and shall be recognized as a post-route and shall enjoy the rights and privileges of other post-roads in the United States; and equal privileges in the use of said bridges shall be granted to all telegraph companies, and the United States shall have the right of way across said bridges and its approaches for said postal-telegraph purposes.

SEC. 3. That any bridge built under this act shall be constructed as a pivot draw-bridge, with a draw over the main channel at an accessible and the best navigable point, and with draw-spans giving a clear water-way, measured at the lowest stage of water known at the locality, of not less than 80 feet in the clear on each side of the central or pivot pier, and the clear width as herein provided for shall not be reduced by deposits of riprap or by other material about the piers and abutments, and the spans shall not be of less elevation than 3 feet above extreme high-water mark, as known at the point of location measured to the lowest part of the superstructure of said bridge; and provision shall be made in the location and construction of the abutments and approaches to allow for the free passage of flood water, and the piers of said bridge shall be parallel to, and the bridge itself at right angles to, the direction of the current of said stream: Provided, That the said draw or draws shall be opened promptly by said corporation upon reasonable signal for the passage of boats, and said city shall maintain, at its own expense, such lights or other signals thereon as the Light-House Board may prescribe, and said city shall provide, at its own expense, such sheer-booms, guide-piers, or other device as may be at any time deemed necessary by the Secretary of War to facilitate the safe passage of boats or other water craft through the spans of said bridge. No bridge shall be erected or maintained under authority of this act which shall at any time substantially or materially obstruct the free navigation of said river; and if any bridge erected under such authority shall, in the opinion of the Secretary of War, obstruct said navigation, he is hereby authorized to cause such change or alteration of said bridge to be made as will effectually obviate such obstruction, at the expense of said city of Grand Forks, and in case of any litigation arising from any obstruction or alleged obstruction to the free navigation of said river caused or alleged to be caused by said bridges, or either, the case may be brought in the circuit court of the United States of the district in which said obstruction or bridges are located: Provided further, That nothing in this act shall be so construed as to repeal or modify any of the provisions of law now existing in reference to the protection of the navigation of rivers, or to exempt any bridge or bridges constructed by virtue hereof from the operations of the same.

SEC. 4. That any bridge or bridges authorized to be constructed under this act shall be built and located under and subject to such regulations for the security of navigation of said river as the Secretary of War shall prescribe; and to secure that object the said corporation shall submit to the Secretary of War, for his examination and approval, designs and drawings of the proposed bridges and a map of the location, giving for the space of one mile above and one mile below the proposed locations the topography of the banks of the river, the shore-lines at high and low water, the direction and strength of the currents at all stages, and the soundings, accurately showing the bed of the stream, the location of any other bridges, and shall furnish such other information as may be required for a full and satisfactory understanding of the subject; and until the said plans and locations, or either of them, are approved by the Secretary of War there shall not be any bridge built at said point; and should any change be made in the plan of said bridge or bridges during the progress of construction, such change shall be subject to the approval of the Secretary of War.

SEC. 5. That this act shall be null and void if actual construction of the bridge authorized by this act be not commenced within one year and completed within two years from the date of this act.

SEC. 6. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved, and the right to require any changes in said structure or structures, or the entire removal thereof, at the expense of the owners, whenever Congress shall decide that the public interest requires it, is also expressly reserved.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WARNER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

DAVID MERIWETHER.

Mr. TAULBEE. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Private Calendar for present consideration the bill (H. R. 331) for the relief of David Meriwether.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to David Meriwether, of Louisville, Ky., out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, $1,929.40, being arrears of his salary as governor of the Territory of New Mexico; also $3,632.38, being the amount due him as disbursing agent of public moneys; also $525 for loss of public moneys sustained without fault on his part; amounting in all to the sum of $6,086.68, all as found and set forth by the Court of Claims in its findings of fact dated the 14th day of December, 1885.

Mr. RYAN. Let the report be read.

Mr. BLAND. Is that bill based on the findings of the Court of Claims?

Mr. TAULBEE. It is. The report is quite lengthy, and I have agreed with the gentleman who has in charge the special order for to-day that I will withdraw the request for the passage of this bill rather than consume time in the reading of the report. But certainly I will not hesitate to make a brief statement of the facts.

Mr. RANDALL. Let the report be read.

Mr. DOCKERY. If the report is to be read, I demand the regular order. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania insist on having the report read.

Mr. RANDALL. I think the House is entitled to at least some statement in explanation of the bill.

Mr. TAULBEE. I will make a statement. I ask in the first place, in order that whatever I may say in this matter may be substantiated by the report, that it be printed in the RECORD in connection with the bill.

This is a claim of David Meriwether, of Kentucky, who was at one time governor of the Territory of New Mexico. A portion of this claim is for arrears of salary as Indian agent in connection with his gubernatorial office. This amounts to $1,929. He was clearly entitled to this, but there was no appropriation available to pay him the amount claimed by him.

There is another amount in the bill, a little over $500, for moneys lost. It became necessary in his capacity as disbursing agent for the erection of certain public buildings in the Territory of New Mexico——

Mr. WILLIAMS. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry. I ask if this bill is now pending? I understood that it was withdrawn.

Mr. TAULBEE. I simply said that rather than the time of the House should be occupied by the reading of the report I had agreed with the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] to withdraw the request for unanimous consent.

It became necessary for Governor Meriwether to provide himself with small sums of money to pay work-hands on the public buildings in the Territory of New Mexico as disbursing agent—a position he occupied while he was governor.

In order to do that, it became necessary that he should carry overland the change to pay these hands, and this money was taken from him. The amount is only about $500, and the facts in connection with the loss of the money are unquestioned. The Government did not lose the money. It was charged up to him and he paid it, and the record shows that if he had been disposed to take money out of the Treasury improperly he could readily have done it, because he had at that time many thousand dollars subject to his check. He is a gentleman of unquestionable integrity. He is eighty-two years old, but he came to Washington during the present session of Congress, appeared before our committee, and made a statement, which, I believe, was printed by direction of the committee, and which was highly creditable to him as an intelligent gentleman and a man of integrity. The payment of this amount has been recommended by the Court of Claims. This bill has been pending for a number of years.

Mr. MCMILLIN. When was he governor? When were the moneys lost?

Mr. TAULBEE. These moneys were lost before the war.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Before the war?

Mr. TAULBEE. Yes, sir; but the papers relating to the case were lost for many years, as is shown by the records.

Mr. MCMILLIN. The gentleman spoke of the claimant as having been also an Indian agent.

Mr. TAULBEE. Yes, sir.

Mr. MCMILLIN. At what time was he an Indian agent?

Mr. TAULBEE. At the same time that he was governor of the Territory.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Governor and Indian agent at the same time?

Mr. TAULBEE. Yes, sir. The law provided for his compensation as Indian agent in addition to his salary as governor, and that compensation was paid regularly until a special act of Congress was passed increasing his compensation as governor. The Comptroller had doubt as to the effect which that special legislation should have on his salary as Indian agent; but after the appropriation for the then current year had been exhausted it was decided by the Comptroller, and subsequently by the Court of Claims, that he was entitled to his compensation as Indian agent notwithstanding the increase of his salary as governor. This case is in the line of numerous decisions which are cited in the report.

Mr. STEELE. What year was this? How long ago was it?

Mr. TAULBEE. This was before the war; but, as I have already stated, the papers relating to the case were lost for twenty years, and were not found until Mr. Willis, I believe, the predecessor of Mr. CARUTH, in whose district Governor Meriwether lives, succeeded in finding the papers upon which this claim is based.

The other item mentioned in this bill is for a percentage on the amount of money disbursed, and the court has decided that Governor Meriwether was entitled to that. All these matters are set forth fully in the finding of the Court of Claims, as shown in the report upon this case.

I now demand the previous question upon ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. How was this money lost?

Mr. TAULBEE. He was robbed of it. That amount is only about $500.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. But how, where, when?

Mr. TAULBEE. In transporting this small amount of silver money to the seat of government in the Territory of New Mexico.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. TAULBEE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The report (by Mr. SHAW) is as follows:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 331) for the relief of David Meriwether, respectfully report as follows:

This claim is for several sums of money claimed to be due Mr. Meriwether for services performed and losses sustained by him while governor of the Territory of New Mexico. This case was referred by the Committee on Claims in the Forty-eighth Congress to the Court of Claims, under act of March 3, 1883, for a finding of facts, and that court has found the facts, and its findings are annexed to and made a part of this report. This case consists of three branches, which we will consider in their order:

1. The claimant, David Meriwether, was appointed governor of the Territory of New Mexico May 6, 1853, and held that office till October 30, 1857. An act of Congress in force at the beginning of Governor Meriwether's term, that of September 9, 1850, (9 Statutes at Large, page 446), provided, in section 3, page 447—

"That the executive power and authority in and over said Territory of New Mexico shall be vested in a governor who shall hold his office for four years, and until his successor shall be appointed and qualified, unless sooner removed by the President of the United States. The governor shall reside within said Territory, shall be commander-in-chief of the militia thereof, shall perform the duties and receive the emoluments of superintendent of Indian affairs, and shall approve all laws passed by the Legislative Assembly before they shall take effect."

And in section 12 of the same act, page 451, it was provided:

"The governor shall receive an annual salary of $1,500 as governor, and $1,000 as superintendent of Indian affairs."

This act continued in force until July, 1854, when Congress enacted (10 Statutes at Large, page 311), "that the salary of the governor of New Mexico be, and the same is hereby, increased to the sum of $3,000." Inasmuch as the act previously in force had given Mr. Meriwether a salary of $1,000 as superintendent of Indian affairs, separate and apart from his salary as governor, it would seem to follow that the increase of his salary as governor did not affect his right to his salary as superintendent of Indian affairs, he being still required to perform the duties of that position, and entitled by the very words of the law to receive its emoluments. This fact would seem so clear, from the very terms of the law itself, as hardly to require illustration or argument in its support. Yet, if the purpose of the law were doubtful in itself, all doubt would be removed by reference to the law regulating the officers of the Territory of Oregon and their salaries, which will be found in 10 Statutes at Large, page 437, by which the salary of the governor of that Territory was fixed at $3,000, and a superintendent of Indian affairs, separate from the governor, was provided for, who was to receive an annual salary of $2,500.

It is hardly reasonable to suppose that Congress, in imposing upon the person filling the office of governor of New Mexico the double duties of governor and superintendent of Indian affairs, meant to require him to perform those double duties for the same compensation allowed to the governor of another and much smaller Territory who was not required to perform any duties but those strictly appertaining to his office of governor. This view was taken by the Secretary of the Treasury and the First Comptroller at the time, for the Secretary of the Treasury, Hon. James Guthrie, then filling that office, says, in a letter set forth in the findings of the Court of Claims:

"Upon application of the governor of New Mexico, the First Comptroller of the Treasury examined the question of the rate of compensation to which he was entitled, and reported to me his opinion, from which I am unable to dissent, that under the foregoing provisions he is entitled to $3,000 as governor and $1,000 as superintendent, making together $4,000, but no more than $3,000 has been paid for want of a sufficient appropriation."

The findings of the Court of Claims show that the amount thus recommended has never been paid to the claimant, nor any part thereof. The only obstacle to such a payment has been the want of an appropriation, and upon this point it is very clear that the want of an appropriation constitutes no legal obstacle in the way of payment.

The rule that public obligations can not be discharged by insufficient appropriations has been frequently upheld by the United States Court of Claims in well-considered cases, notably among them those of Graham vs. United States, 1 Court of Claims Reports, page 380; Patton vs. United States, 7 Court of Claims Reports, page 362; Collins vs. United States, 15 Court of Claims Reports, page 22; Briggs vs. United States, 15 Court of Claims Reports, page 48; Freedman's Bank vs. United States, 16 Court of Claims Reports, page 29; French vs. United States, 16 Court of Claims Reports, 419; and Langston vs. United States, 21 Court of Claims Reports, page 10, in which the general conclusion reached by the court as a result from all previous adjudications is summed up in the following words, which have a special bearing on this case:

"Public officers in accepting their positions have a right to rely upon the salary fixed by permanent general laws, and are not to be cut off by insufficient annual appropriations unless accompanied by a repeal of the permanent law, either expressly or by the clearest implication."

This case was affirmed by the Supreme Court under the name of United States vs. Langston, 118 United States Reports, page 389. This principle requires us to report in favor of the claimant in the present case for his salary as superintendent of Indian affairs, in addition to that already received as governor, being at the rate of $1,000 a year from July 27, 1854, to June 30, 1856, amounting to $1,929.30.

2. The Secretary of the Treasury requested Governor Meriwether to act as commissioner and disbursing agent for the work of building the public buildings in the Territory of New Mexico. Although the work was no part of his duties as governor, he undertook it at the special request of the Secretary of the Treasury, and performed the work not only to the complete satisfaction of the officers of the Treasury Department, but in such a manner as to elicit expressions of gratitude on their part for the interest which he had manifested in the performance of the services. As the work was done by hired labor and not by contract, and the workmen were paid weekly, the payments were numerous and the responsibility great.

The Court of Claims finds that Governor Meriwether disbursed in this matter $72,647.53, and that a reasonable commission for his services in so doing would be 5 per cent. of that amount, being $3,632.38. The duties imposed by law upon the governor of New Mexico have been set forth in an extract in a law contained in a previous part of this report, in which it will be seen that the disbursement of money for the construction of public buildings forms no part of the legal duties of the office, and the language of the Secretary's letter asking Governor Meriwether to undertake that work is the language of request, not of direction or requirement.

The United States Supreme Court has twice decided upon the right of an officer of the United States disbursing public moneys to a reasonable compensation for his services in so doing over and above the salary of the office held by him, when such office did not in itself involve the disbursement of money, but the disbursement was additional to the regular duties of the office. We refer to the case of Converse vs. United States, 21 Howard, page 463, and United States vs. Brindle, 110 United States Reports, page 688. In the former of these cases the officer in question was a collector of customs, and was requested by the Secretary of the Treasury to disburse the money to be used in the Light-House Service. The court held that as the services were not required by law of a collector of customs, but were additional to the legal duties of the office, the collector was entitled to recover a reasonable commission.

In the other case mentioned, that of United States vs. Brindle, the officer was a receiver of public moneys and was appointed to sell Indian trust lands. It was held that he was not limited to the salary or emoluments of a receiver of public moneys, but had the right to a reasonable compensation for his services in selling the Indian lands and receiving the money therefor. The same point came up before the United States Court of Claims in Meigs vs. United States, 19 Court of Claims Reports, page 497, in which General Meigs, the retired Quartermaster-General of the Army, claimed compensation for his services as superintendent of the construction of the Pension building in the city of Washington, and it was held by the court that he was entitled to such compensation upon the authority of the two cases above set forth. These authorities are conclusive in favor of a reasonable compensation to Governor Meriwether for his services as superintendent and disbursing officer of the public buildings in New Mexico, and the Court of Claims having found that such reasonable compensation would amount to $3,632.38, your committee report in favor of the allowance to him of that amount.

3. The next and last item of the claim is for the sum of $525, lost by Governor Meriwether under the following circumstances:

Having occasion to use a great amount of small coin in paying off the laborers employed on the public buildings, and having a great difficulty in obtaining it in the Territory, he procured from two banks in Louisville, Ky., the sum of $525 in small gold and silver coins. This was done at the suggestion of the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, and was obtained with the claimant's own private funds, but exclusively for the purpose of paying the Government laborers in the Territory. He left Louisville on his return to New Mexico in March, 1856, with this coin contained in two bags, which he packed in his trunk in his state-room in the steam-boat on which he was going to St. Louis. He arrived at St. Louis in the morning, and had his trunk removed to another steam-boat that was to start up the Missouri River the same evening, and his trunk was placed in his state-room on board that boat.

When dinner was announced he bolted from the inside the door of the state-room that led out on the guards, locked the door leading into the cabin, put the key into his pocket, and took his seat at the dining table immediately opposite the last-named door. Immediately after finishing his dinner he returned to the state-room, found that the door leading out on the guards had been broken open; his trunk broken open, and the money which he had obtained as aforesaid for Government purposes, as well as his own money, was gone. He immediately went to the office of the chief of police in St. Louis and offered him one-half the money if he could recover it. He suggested that claimant should remain in St. Louis that night and see what could be done. He did so, but finding that nothing had been accomplished by the next day, took the railroad to Jefferson City, where he overtook the steam-boat, boarded it, and went to Independence, Mo., where he had to borrow $300 to enable himself and three mechanics, whom he was taking out to New Mexico to work on the public buildings, to get to Santa Fé. He never recovered any part of this money or received any credit for the same at the Treasury.

The loss was not caused by any fault or negligence on the part of the claimant, but was entirely accidental on his part, he having taken all due precautions against loss, and after the loss used all due diligence to recover the stolen money.

Upon this state of facts, the findings of the Court of Claims relieving the claimant entirely from all imputation of fault or negligence, it is very clear that Governor Meriwether ought to be reimbursed for this loss. Possibly he might have applied to the Court of Claims for relief from responsibility under the act of May 9, 1866 (14 Statutes at Large, page 44), which now forms a part of sections 1059 and 1062 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

It was, however, for a long time supposed from the language of this act that it applied only to paymasters, quartermasters, commissaries, and other officers of the Army, and it was not until this decision of the Court of Claims in the case of Hobbs vs. United States, 17 Court of Claims Reports, page 189, that it was settled that the act had any application whatever to civil officers. Indeed, prior to that case there does not seem to have been any application ever made by any civil officer of the United States under the act. Probably it was for this reason that Governor Meriwether failed to file any claim in that court within the six years allowed by law. But whatever may have been the reason for his failure to present a claim, it is abundantly clear now that he is entitled to be reimbursed upon this branch of the claim also.

The facts and the law require a report in favor of the claim. The entire claim in its three branches aggregates $6,086.68.

Your committee, therefore, report back the bill H. R. 331, and recommend that the same do pass.

Court of Claims. David Meriwether vs. The United States. Congressional case No. 148.

FINDINGS OF FACT.

This case, referred by the Committee on Claims of the House of Representatives, under the provisions of the act of March 3, 1883, chapter 116 (22 Statutes at Large, page 485), having been heard by the court, the Attorney-General by his assistants appearing for the defense and protection of the interests of the United States, the court upon the evidence finds the facts to be as follows:

I.

The claimant, David Meriwether, was appointed governor of the Territory of New Mexico May 6, 1853, and held that office until October 30, 1857. From July 1, 1854, to June 30, 1857, he was paid at the rate of $3,000 a year and no more, being his salary as governor provided by the act of July 27, 1854. (9 Stat. L., p. 311.) He claimed that he was entitled to $1,000 a year additional for his services as superintendent of Indian affairs, under the act of September 9, 1850. (9 Stat. L., p. 447.) The Secretary of the Treasury, as well as the First Comptroller, concurred in this view, as appears by the following letter:

"TREASURY DEPARTMENT, February 14, 1856.

"SIR: The third section of the act of 9th September, 1850 (Little and Brown, 9, p. 447), provides that the governor of New Mexico shall perform the duties and receive the emoluments of superintendent of Indian affairs, and the twelfth section that he shall receive an annual salary of $1,500 as governor and $1,000 as superintendent of Indian affairs.

"By the act of the 27th July, 1854, volume 9, page 311, to increase the salaries of executive and judiciary officers in Oregon, New Mexico, Washington, Utah, and Minnesota, it is provided 'that the salary of the governor of New Mexico be, and the same is hereby, increased to the sum of $3,000.'

"Upon application of the governor of New Mexico, the Comptroller of the Treasury examined the question of rate of compensation to which he was entitled, and reported to me his opinion, from which I am unable to dissent, that under the foregoing provisions he is entitled to $3,000 as governor and $1,000 as superintendent, making together $4,000, but no more than $3,000 has been paid for want of sufficient appropriation.

"If the committee take the same view of the subject an additional appropriation will be required, as follows:

Say from 27th July, 1854, to 30th June, 1855	$929.30
For the year to end 30th June, 1856	1,000.00
For the year to end 30th June, 1857	1,000.00
Making	2,929.30

"I have the honor to be, very respectfully,

"JAMES GUTHRIE,
"Secretary of the Treasury."

"Hon. R. M. T. HUNTER,
"Chairman Committee on Finance, United States Senate."

The amount recommended in the above letter has never been paid the claimant, nor any part thereof.

II.

While the claimant was governor the Secretary of the Treasury requested him to act as commissioner and disbursing agent for the work of building the public buildings, as appears by the following letters:

"TREASURY DEPARTMENT, May 24, 1851.

"SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 16th instant, asking that such steps be taken as may be deemed necessary for the selection of a suitable site for the penitentiary in New Mexico, and that measures be adopted for commencing the erection of the same.

"The honorable Secretary of War has transferred a site near Santa Fé, which, it is believed, possesses all the requisites for the purpose.

"Should this site meet your views, after a careful examination on your return to New Mexico, you are authorized to make the location there.

"To save the time which would necessarily be required to advertise for proposals if the work is executed by contract, the Department has decided to build it by hired labor. I have to request that you will act as commissioner and disbursing agent for the work. By appointing a competent superintendent to see that the work is faithfully executed and to procure suitable materials, it is hoped that the supervision in a general way and making the disbursements will not materially trespass upon your time, while such service will be of great importance in the economical and faithful execution of the work. Among the superintendent's duties will be those of a clerical nature, such as keeping the accounts and making out the reports and returns; and his certificate should form part of the vouchers taken by you for payments made.

"You have already been furnished with the plan and specifications for the penitentiary of Utah, which have been approved by this Department, and, with the exception of the materials to be used, may be adopted for the one in question. It is understood that building-stones of good quality abound in the immediate vicinity of the proposed site, which will be used instead of adobes. The first thing to be completed is the wall; after this, the cells and the rooms above. If there still remain funds enough to erect the keeper's house and the corral, they will be applied first in the completion of the former and what remains to the latter.

"As there is now no secure place for confining prisoners in New Mexico, it is important that the wall and cells should be finished with as little delay as practicable, so that it may be used even before the whole is completed, and the services of the convicts applied usefully in finishing the rest of the establishment.

"The deed of the site is in the possession of Capt. Langdon C. Easton, quartermaster at Albuquerque, N. Mex., who will be instructed to deliver it to you. After the title has been examined by the United States district attorney in New Mexico you will please forward it to this Department, with an abstract of title from that officer, to be submitted to the Attorney-General for final action; and as the Department by law can make no expenditure or advance until the title is approved by the Attorney-General, you will see the expediency of sending the deed and abstract as soon as may be after your return; you will, however, before sending them, have copies taken of the deed and abstract for reference in your office.

"Funds to meet the disbursements will be placed to your credit from time to time as they may be required, and at any point that will best suit you. You will also be supplied with the 'Regulations of the office of the construction of buildings under the Treasury Department,' and with blank forms for your accounts; these you will use, and you will please render your accounts quarterly, as therein directed.

"You will receive herewith a copy of the letter of the honorable Secretary of War of the 22d instant, stating that the site proposed would be transferred to this Department.

"I have the honor to be, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

"JAMES GUTHRIE,
"Secretary of the Treasury.

"His Excellency D. MERIWETHER,
"Governor of New Mexico."

"TREASURY DEPARTMENT, June 30, 1854.

"SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of 29th ultimo, and in reply beg leave to state that your proceedings in removing the commissioners, superintendent, and clerk of the state-house being erected in New Mexico are approved. I do not consider the appointment of salaried commissioners as at all necessary, but shall be pleased if you will exercise a general supervision of the work during its progress. If this building and the penitentiary are not distant from each other, one superintendent and one clerk, it is believed, would be able to attend to both.

"The Department does not consider that the salaries of the individuals removed can properly be paid out of the appropriation made on the 31st May past, or out of any hereafter made for the completion of the building.

"The appropriation above referred to is $50,000, and 'to complete the public building in New Mexico.'

"If you will, as the Department wishes, assume the general superintendence of this work, funds to meet the disbursements will be placed to your credit from time to time as they may be required, and at any point that will best suit your convenience.

"Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

"JAMES GUTHRIE,
"Secretary of the Treasury.

"His Excellency D. MERIWETHER,
"Governor of New Mexico, Santa Fé."

This work was no part of the claimant's duties as governor, and was undertaken by him at the special request of the Secretary of the Treasury as above set forth. The claimant was required to give a bond, with approved sureties, in the sum of $10,000, before disbursing any of this money. The work was done by hired labor and not by contract, and the workmen were paid weekly. The payments were therefore numerous and the responsibility great. The claimant settled his accounts to the complete satisfaction of the accounting officers of the Treasury and received their thanks for the interest he had taken in the matter. He disbursed in the matter of these buildings $72,647.53. A reasonable commission for his services in so doing would be 5 per cent. of the amount, being $3,632.38.

III.

The claimant having occasion to use a great amount of small coin in paying off the laborers employed on the public buildings, and having great difficulty in obtaining it in the Territory, procured from two banks in Louisville, Ky., the sum of $525 in small gold and silver coins. This was done at the suggestion of the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, and was obtained with the claimant's own private funds, but exclusively for the purpose of paying the Government laborers in the Territory. He left Louisville on his return to New Mexico in March, 1856, with this coin contained in two bags, which he packed in his trunk in his state-room on the steam-boat on which he was going to St. Louis. He arrived at St. Louis in the morning and had his trunk removed to another steamboat that was to start up the Missouri River the same evening, and his trunk was placed in his state-room on board that boat.

When dinner was announced he bolted from the inside the door of the state-room that led out on the guards, locked the door leading into the cabin, put the key into his pocket, and took his seat at the dining-table immediately opposite the last-named door. Immediately after finishing his dinner he returned to the state-room, found that the door leading out on the guards had been broken open, his trunk broken open, and the money which he had obtained as aforesaid for Government purposes, as well as his own money, was gone. He immediately went to the office of the chief of police in St. Louis and offered him one-half the money if he could recover it. He suggested that claimant should remain in St. Louis that night and see what could be done. He did so, but finding that nothing had been accomplished by the next day, took the railroad to Jefferson City, where he overtook the steam-boat, boarded it, and went on to Independence, Mo., where he had to borrow $300 to enable himself and three mechanics, whom he was taking out to New Mexico to work on the public buildings, to get to Santa Fé. He never recovered any part of this money or received any credit for the same at the Treasury.

The loss was not caused by any fault or negligence on the part of the claimant, but was entirely accidental on his part, he having taken all due precautions against loss, and after the loss used all diligence to recover the stolen money.

The clerk will transmit a certified copy of these findings to the honorable the Committee on Claims of the House of Representatives.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. MCMILLIN. Regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is demanded. The regular order is the call of committees for reports.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, there is a special order assigning this day for a bill reported from the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Mr. LAIRD. I ask the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] to yield to me in order that I may present two reports.

Mr. DOCKERY. I will yield to the gentleman for that purpose.

PRESIDIO, SAN FRANCISCO.

Mr. LAIRD, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 6098) authorizing the construction and repair of the roads from the entrance to the reservation of the Presidio at San Francisco, Cal., to the national cemetery on the same, and the fencing and protection of the said reservation and the cemetery thereon; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

THOMAS F. FOLEY.

Mr. LAIRD also, from the Committee on Millitary Affairs, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 5376) for the relief of Thomas Fletcher Foley, alias Thomas Fletcher; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

BUSINESS REPORTED FROM THE COMMITTEE ON LABOR.

By unanimous consent, on motion of Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri, the resolution setting apart Tuesday, March 13, and Wednesday, March 14, for the consideration of business reported from the Committee on Labor was taken from the House Calendar, and referred to the Committee on Labor.

MAJ. DANIEL N. BASH.

Mr. STEELE, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 2066) for the relief of Maj. Daniel N. Bash; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

EFFICIENCY OF LINE OF THE ARMY.

Mr. STEELE also, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 1347) to increase the efficiency of the line of the Army, and for other purposes; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

NATIONAL CEMETERY, BATON ROUGE, LA.

Mr. ROBERTSON, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back with amendment the bill (H. R. 5064) to construct a road to the national cemetery at Baton Rouge, La.; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

TELEGRAPH OPERATORS DURING THE WAR.

Mr. ROBERTSON also, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported, as a substitute for House bills 1607 and 3331, a bill (H. R. 8003) for the relief of telegraph operators during the war; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

By unanimous consent, House bills 1607 and 3331 were laid on the table.

FRACTIONAL SILVER CERTIFICATES.

Mr. DARGAN, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, reported, as a substitute for H. R. 6140, a bill (H. R. 8004) authorizing the issue of fractional silver certificates; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

By unanimous consent, House bill 6140 was laid on the table.

Mr. BACON, by unanimous consent, submitted the views of a minority of the Committee on Banking and Currency upon the bill just reported by Mr. DARGAN; which were ordered to be printed with the report of the committee.

POLLY H. SMITH.

Mr. THOMPSON, of California, by unanimous consent, reported back favorably from the Committee on Invalid Pensions the bill (S. 43) granting a pension to Polly H. Smith; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

JACOB KINTZ.

Mr. THOMPSON, of California, also, by unanimous consent, reported back favorably from the Committee on Invalid Pensions the bill (S. 1086) granting a pension to Jacob Kintz, alias John Walters; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

TRESPASSERS ON INDIAN LANDS.

Mr. COBB, by unanimous consent, reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs a bill (H. R. 8005) to amend section 2148 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, in relation to trespassers on Indian lands; which was read a first and second time, referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

TIMBER DEPREDATIONS.

Mr. COBB also, by unanimous consent, reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs a bill (H. R. 8006) to amend section 5388 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, in relation to timber depredations; which was read a first and second time, referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

CONRAD CLAYCOMB.

Mr. FINLEY. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 6243) for the relief of Conrad Claycomb.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States be, and he is hereby, directed and requested, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, to pay Conrad Claycomb the sum of $300, on account of commutation money paid by him under act of Congress of March 3, 1863.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill, which was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. FINLEY moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PRESIDENTIAL AND CONGRESSIONAL TERMS.

Mr. CRAIN, from the Committee on the Election of President, Vice-President, and Representatives, reported back favorably the joint resolution (H. Res. 120) proposing amendments to the Constitution changing the time for the commencement and limitation of the terms of the President, Vice-President, and members of Congress, and altering the date of the annual meeting of Congress; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

RELIEF OF OFFICERS AND ENLISTED MEN.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 6260) for the relief of certain officers and enlisted men of the Army for services actually performed during the rebellion; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

LOTTERY ADVERTISEMENTS.

Mr. LIND, in pursuance of leave heretofore granted, submitted the views of a minority of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads upon the bill (H. R. 3324) to prohibit the mailing of newspapers and other publications containing lottery advertisements, and prescribing a penalty for violation of the same; which were ordered to be printed.

MILITARY AND POSTAL TELEGRAPH.

Mr. DOCKERY. I must now insist on the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the order of business for to-day.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Saturday, the 3d day of March, 1888, immediately after the reading of the Journal, be set apart for the further consideration of H. R. 1426, with amendments.

The title of the bill H. R. 1426 was read, as follows:

A bill supplementary to the act of July 1, 1862, entitled "An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes," and also of the act of July 2, 1864, and other acts amendatory of said first-named act reported by Mr. DOCKERY from the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Mr. DOCKERY. I ask by unanimous consent that all general debate on this bill shall close in two hours—one hour and fifteen minutes to be controlled by the gentleman from New York [Mr. WHITE] and the remainder by the committee.

Mr. RANDALL. Let the gentleman from Missouri indicate when the final vote is likely to be taken.

Mr. RAYNER. I object to that.

Mr. DOCKERY. I would like to accommodate the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. RANDALL. Say three hours.

Mr. DOCKERY. I will suggest that debate be closed in two and a half hours.

Mr. RAYNER. How much time do you propose to give to the gentleman from New York [Mr. WHITE]?

Mr. DOCKERY. An hour and fifteen minutes. I think we will be able to accommodate the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER].

Mr. RAYNER. I do not wish to be heard, but I do wish there shall be full discussion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection, and the proposition of the gentleman from Missouri is agreed to—that the general debate shall be closed in two hours and a half.

Mr. DOCKERY. I wish to give notice to the House, Mr. Speaker, that it is my purpose to press the conclusion of this debate so as to reach a vote this afternoon, and to ask for a yea-and-nay vote on the passage of the bill. The gentleman from New York [Mr. WHITE] is first entitled to the floor.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair desires to state the agreement to close general debate in two hours and a half does not give any power to close debate in that time. No such power under the rules can be given, except by ordering the previous question, and at that hour the gentleman from Missouri can demand the previous question; and when it is ordered it will absolutely close the debate on the bill.

Mr. DOCKERY. At the close of the two hours and a half it is proposed, then, to consider the bill by sections.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill is not in the Committee of the Whole, but in the House.

Mr. DOCKERY. One hour and fifteen minutes is to be controlled by the other side and the remainder of the time by the committee.

Mr. WHITE, of New York. Mr. Speaker, the object of remedial legislation should in all cases be to do what the king in the opera bouffe designated as making "the punishment fit the crime." Assuming a wrong exists which it is desired to remedy, it should be the first duty of the legislator in determining upon a line of legislation to assure himself, and to be able to assure his constituents, that the law proposed will at least tend to cure the defect before piling up statutory enactments in terms which too often only encumber the statute-books.

Before entering upon a discussion of certain affirmatively pernicious features of this bill, against which I feel bound to raise my voice in protest, I ask this House, and especially those who believe that some legislation is necessary, to consider with me for a few moments the question of what we will be able to accomplish if we pass the bill.

Cui bono, gentlemen? What is the good? What new remedy does your voluminous enactment afford? The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANDERSON], who has the honor of introducing this bill, in the somewhat impassioned presentation which he made of this case said—and I quote his exact words—"There is no new legislation in it." I am glad upon some one point its promoter and myself can agree. There is bluster in it; there is buncombe in it; but in the words of the man who introduced it "there is no new legislation in it." So far as preventing the alleged abuse which the bill is aimed at, if such abuse exists, the existing laws afford a complete, an adequate, and a speedy remedy. Suppose in violation of corporate powers these subsidized roads have given up to the Western Union their telegraph line—I am speaking to lawyers now, and I call on every lawyer in the House to verify my statement that it is an elemental principle of law that the writ of quo warranto is a writ of right issuable on the application of any person interested, for either the mis-user or the non-user of any corporate franchise, and that such writ is issuable by any proper State court; and inasmuch as in this case it calls in question the acts of Congress of 1862 and the acts of 1864, a writ of error lies directly to the Supreme Court of the United States for final revision under the judiciary act of 1789, and the whole matter can be settled, and there will be no longer any ground for dispute.

But an inspection of the provisions of this bill shows the framer of it looks to the mandamus to be brought by that overloaded and overworked institution, the interstate-commerce law, as the cure for all the defects and errors which are alleged to exist.

And I desire to say to the gentlemen from Kansas [Mr. ANDERSON and Mr. PETERS] that so far as their own special enemy is concerned—the Union Pacific Railroad Company—there is already on the statute-book a provision which gives them such remedy without the necessity for the passage of this bill. That will be found in section 5262 of the Statutes, which provides:

The proper circuit court of the United States shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine all cases of mandamus, to compel said Union Pacific Railroad Company to operate its road as required by law.

The Supreme Court of the United States has held, in the case of the Union Pacific Railroad Company vs. Hall, reported in 91 United States, that this is not a provision that is limited to a Government officer in prosecuting public rights, but that private persons may, without the intervention of the Government law officer, move for a mandamus to enforce a public duty not due to the Government as such.

Now, so far as the Union Pacific Railroad is concerned, this much-desired mandamus provision is already given, not only to the Interstate Commerce Commission, but to any person who finds they are not operating their road and telegraph lines according to the provisions of the law.

The minority of the committee, when they expressed their views upon this subject, committed themselves to this system and the object which is claimed by the promoters of this bill, as will be found by noting the expression of the minority, in these words:

They are thoroughly in sympathy with the avowed purpose of the majority of the committee, to wit, the prevention of any unjust discrimination by any of the subsidized land-grant railroads, incorporated under act of July 1, 1862, and acts amendatory thereof, against any person or corporations desiring to use the telegraph facilities of said railroad companies, but they differ from the majority of said committee in that they believe that the legislation proposed would not be wise, if it were competent, and that the bill with its amendments is unconstitutional, as seeking to interfere with vested rights.

And now, sir, in order that the minority may not pose in the character of what they are not—simply as objectors to the bill that is proposed—but that they may bring forward a measure which will speedily and readily accomplish the objects that the committee by their report have in view, I give notice now that at the proper time I shall offer a substitute for the pending bill which I now read for the information of the House.

After striking out all after the enacting clause I propose to insert:

The circuit court of the United States within and for any district in which is situated any portion of any railroad or telegraph line belonging to or operated by a railroad or telegraph company which has received any subsidy of land or bonds from the United States under the act of Congress approved July 1, 1862, entitled "An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes," and the acts amendatory thereof, shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine all cases of mandamus to compel said railroad or telegraph company to operate its road or telegraph line as required by law; and further, to hear and determine all informations and proceedings in quo warranto which may be brought for the alleged mis-user or non-user of any of the franchises of said railroad or telegraph lines; and any person alleging himself to be aggrieved by the action of said railroad or telegraph company shall have the right to file the relation for such writ of mandamus or the information for such writ of quo warranto: Provided, however, That this act shall not be construed as preventing the Attorney-General of the United States from proceeding upon his own motion by mandamus or quo warranto against any of the said railroad or telegraph companies whenever in his opinion the public interests will be subserved thereby; and he is hereby directed to examine forthwith all contracts between the Western Union Telegraph Company and the respective railroad and telegraph companies organized and operating under the provisions of the said act of July 1, 1862, and all amendments thereto; and if he believes them to be illegal, he is directed to bring suit for their cancellation and annulment.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that with that provision we are proceeding, perhaps not according to the old Kansas method, but certainly according to a very simple and logical method to get at the merits of this case. There can be no escaping the Socratic syllogism that either these companies have violated their telegraph franchises or they have not; that the contracts which they have made with the Western Union Telegraph Company are void or they are binding. Then why not proceed to test the question in advance, and find out whether these franchises have been misused or have ceased to be used, and whether th contract which was made was valid or void under the law?

The word "Jayhawk" fell in the course of this discussion from the impetuous orator from Kansas, and it recalled to my mind a word that was familiar to me some twenty-five to thirty-five years ago, when I was living in a State contiguous to that much-respected State of Kansas, and when that name characterized certain people who were in the habit of dealing out so-called justice, the essential principle of which was to hang their victim first and discuss elaborately the question of his guilt or innocence afterwards. On going further away from the Shawnee and the Arapaho reservation I found that there were methods which, if not equally efficacious are at least, it seems to me, much more safe—that is, to reverse the order and try the question first and punish the accused afterwards, if he be found guilty. Does anybody pretend to say that the writ of quo warranto applied to this case will not determine whether or not these companies have misused their franchises? Does anybody pretend to determine that the writ of quo warranto will not establish the fact whether there is or has been a mis-user or a non-user of the franchise?

Does anybody pretend to claim that the writ of mandamus issued upon the application of a man who is aggrieved will not determine whether or not it is the duty of these telegraph lines to pursue a different policy from what they are pursuing; bringing about that result quite as efficiently as though three men had moved in the question upon whom rest the movements of all the railroads, of all the network of commerce in this country?

We either have such a speedy and plain and adequate remedy or we can have it by the enactment of this law, with which I am in hearty accord; and I hope the gentleman will be as ready to adopt it as he has been to adopt that which I have been called upon to characterize as bluster in the bill under consideration.

I can not see what is the necessity of encumbering the statute-book with pages on pages of legislation when we can accomplish it by a single section. I do not see any efficacy in loading a columbiad to shoot a canvas-back. It is as simple a proposition as possible that this will determine the question without interference with the rights of either of these coporations, if they have rights, and bring them before the bar of the country for condign punishment as quickly as it can be determined that they have committed wrong.

I do not intend to discuss the question which I discussed the other day as to the bad policy of this Government, with an indebtedness amounting to millions of dollars owing to it from the subsidized railroads, to cripple their resources. That is unnecessary. If a man ceases to deal with economical questions in consideration of this bill, and if there is a question of delivering a square blow between the eyes of the Western Union Telegraph Company, and if there is a question of delivering a square blow at that large debtor of the United States in order that the debt instead of growing smaller shall grow larger, then this bill will probably effect those objects. But if it is a question of proceeding to collect the money that is due us, this report shows that the receipts under the new arrangement have grown from $38,000 per year net profit, to $110,000 or $112,000 per year net profit.

A MEMBER. To what is the gentleman referring?

Mr. WHITE, of New York. The money due us from the Union Pacific Railroad Company alone. I propose, however, to go into the question of the facts in this case to show what is the real complaint and to make a slight allusion to the law which is applicable in the premises.

In 1862, when the Pacific Railroad bills were passed, there was already an overland telegraph across the continent. When these bills were passed there was incorporated into the bill authorizing the subsidized roads section 19, which permitted the telegraph company already operating across the continent to move from the stage-road which it then followed to the railroad as fast as it should be completed; giving it the right of way upon the road, and authorizing it to operate in harmony and in conjunction with it; and absolving the respective railroads from the duties of building a telegraph line in case such a harmonious arrangement was made. And I would say that that act remains unrepealed to-day. That took in the Overland line from Omaha to San Francisco. On the same day that the act of 1864 was passed, July 2, 1864, there was passed a second bill in aid of the construction of a telegraph line to Idaho, to the outlying Territories in the far Northwest, which gave to another company, the United States Telegraph Line, the right to build to Kansas City, and as there was a branch of this railroad expected to be built (and it was finally built to Denver, being known as the Kansas Pacific road) it gave the United States Telegraph Company the right to make the same arrangement as fast as the roads were built and the lines of telegraph were removed from the old stage-roads on to the newly constructed railroad.

The subsidized roads, however, seeing that they had plenty of money, built their own lines of telegraph as they went across. In point of fact, while there was harmony of arrangement at the time, there was no contract entered into; and after the railroads were completed across the country competition very active and injurious to the interests of both companies, viewed from their standpoint, sprung up between these two companies.

I would say in this connection that there never was an overland telegraph company operated by the railroad companies as a continuous line. The Central Pacific Company owned its line; the Union Pacific Company owned its line, and the two formed a string across from Omaha to San Francisco. There was a movement attempted by those roads at one time to get up a connection with the rival telegraph company, the Atlantic and Pacific. And that connection having been made there has been very disastrous competition, viewed from their standpoint. A question sprung up between these two respective companies, which went to the extent of the Union Pacific Company cutting off the wires from the bridge at Council Bluffs and being about to take down the wires along the line of the road of the Kansas Pacific Railroad from Kansas City to Denver.

While this condition of affairs existed the Western Union Telegraph Company brought its suit for an injunction in the probate court of one of the counties of Kansas. That suit was removed to the circuit court of the United States for the district of Kansas, and it came up first before Mr. Justice McCrary, the circuit judge of that circuit, and afterwards before Mr. Justice Miller, of the Supreme Court of the United States, and in that suit Mr. Justice Miller—I call the attention of every lawyer here to what I am about to say, and I shall read from the record to prove it—in that suit Mr. Justice Miller, he who was most of all familiar with the enactments in regard to these enterprises; he who was assigned to the circuit in which the eastern portion of these enterprises was located; he, the senior justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, outranking in that respect by many years the Chief-Justice; he who stands, and who then stood, the peer of any man that has graced the bench in the history of that august tribunal, the Supreme Court of the United States—Mr. Justice Miller passed upon the question, and decided that the Western Union Telegraph Company had the right to make the contract, and that such a contract having been made with the Kansas Pacific Railway Company it was sustained. I shall not read at great length from his opinion, but I will read enough to show that I have not misstated what that learned judge did decide.

And here I wish to correct a statement which I was not able, from want of carrying the details in my mind, to correct at the time it was made by my friend from Kansas, Judge PETERS. He stated that this question came up upon demurrer. In fact, there was no question of demurrer in it. The case was heard upon bill and answer, supported by affidavits pro and con, which the report of the committee affirmatively shows. In order to fail to dissolve the injunction upon a motion for which dissolution the decision was made, it was absolutely necessary that the judge should hold, and the judge did hold without any equivocation, that the right existed to make the contract. This was in the Kansas Pacific case, depending for its strength upon the Idaho act of the 2d of July, 1864, and after passing upon sundry questions before that and referring to and setting out the two sections which have been already set out in the course of this discussion, and which will be found on page 215 of the report in this case, Judge Miller said:

> The allegation of the amended bill is that the Western Union Telegraph Company was, at the time it made the contract for the erection of the telegraph line now in question with the Kansas branch of the Pacific Railroad Company, the successor in right and in power of the United States Telegraph Company mentioned in this act. And that by virtue of the fourth section of the act the railroad company had the right to make the contract which was made, and was by that section relieved from the obligation to construct and operate a line of telegraph for the public use. It does not admit, in my opinion, of any reasonable doubt that if the United States Telegraph Company, mentioned in that statute, or any company which had the same rights and authorities on that subject that that company had, entered into an agreement with the Pacific Railroad Company, or any of its branches built under the authority of the original act of 1862, which secures the proper construction and operation of a line of telegraph along its road for the benefit of the public, that it is absolved from the obligation imposed upon it by the act of 1862 to construct and to operate such a telegraph line.
> It was manifestly the design of this act of 1864 to enable the United States Telegraph Company to become substituted by a proper arrangement with the Pacific Railroad Company and its branches, to the right to build a telegraph line along the track and right of way of those railroad companies, and thereby to relieve those companies from the obligation to build and operate such a line. If, therefore, the contract is one which provides for the erection of a telegraph line to answer both the purposes of the public and of the railroad company, it is one which is authorized by this statute, and which relieved the railroad company from the obligation to construct and to build another line or any line. That such is the proper construction of the fourth section of this act of 1864 is obvious from an examination of section 19 of the original act of 1862. That section provided "that the several railroad companies herein named are authorized to enter into an arrangement with the Pacific Telegraph Company, the Overland Telegraph Company, and the California Telegraph Company, so that the present line of telegraph between the Missouri River and San Francisco may be moved upon or along the line of said railroad and branches as fast as said road and branches are built; and if said arrangement be entered into, and the transfer to said telegraph line be made in accordance therewith, to the line of said railroad and branches, such transfer shall, for all the purposes of this act, be held and considered a fulfillment on the part of said railroad companies of the provisions of this act in regard to the construction of said line of telegraph."
> The three telegraph companies here spoken of together constituted, at the time this statute was passed, a continuous line of telegraph from the Missouri River to San Francisco; and it was obvious that the building of another line parallel to that, and not far distant from it, would have a very injurious effect upon the value of the property of those telegraph companies; and it was to protect those companies and to prevent the injury which would follow from the construction of another line between the same points over an uninhabited region of country that Congress provided that by an arrangement with the railroad company, if those companies should remove their wires along the line of that road so they could be used both for railroad purposes and the use of the general public, then the obligation of the railroad company under the act of Congress to build another line should no longer exist. The act of 1864, which we have just referred to, concerning the United States Telegraph Company, was clearly designed to give it a similar privilege, and if the arrangement was made and that company should build or transfer its line to the line of the railroad company, the railroad company in like manner was released from the obligation to construct and build another line. I hold it, therefore, to be very clear that if the present telegraph line as it is now operated and run by the Western Union Telegraph Company can be traced to the authority of that act of 1864, and the Western Union Telegraph Company in making that contract exercised rightfully the powers conferred upon the United States Telegraph Company, the contract is valid, although it forbids the railroad company to convey commercial messages over the single wire which it has the right to control for its own business.

Now, I ask gentlemen not to overlook the distinction between these two cases. The learned judge concedes that the right existed by the act of July 1, 1862, so far as the overland telegraph line was concerned, from Omaha to San Francisco. In that case there was no question of fact raised as to whether the Western Union Telegraph Company was the successor of the three lines constituting the Overland Telegraph Company. It was conceded that the Western Union Telegraph Company was the successor of the three lines which constituted the overland line; and the judge says that in view of the act in regard to Idaho, passed July 2, 1864, as to that line, the right existed to make a contract by which they should debar themselves from doing any commercial business, which is not the case in the contract with the Union Pacific and Central Pacific.

Now the question recurs, what is the duty and what have become of the rights of these corporations under that contract which Mr. Justice Miller decided was legally made?

I regret that my learned and esteemed friend from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS] is absent to-day, because I had desired to comment upon his proposition that the case of Dartmouth College against Woodward is no longer considered law in this country. He said that certain statements of mine were startling propositions of law. In reply to that remark, I desire to say that I do not think the gentleman was as much startled at my propositions of law as the country at large would be startled if his statements made on the floor of Congress were true in regard to the revered foundation-stone of our judicial rulings upon constitutional law—a decision which has been unquestioned for seventy years save one, having been announced that long ago by the great Chief-Justice Marshall, who is gratefully remembered by the whole country as having been the "author and finisher" of the early expositions of constitutional law in this country. The opinion delivered in that case by Chief-Justice Marshall was supported by a concurrent and exhaustive opinion from the erudite and scholastic Story; and if the statement should go out unquestioned from this House that the decision of the Supreme Court in that case, which has never been questioned in sixty-nine years, but has been supported by the rulings of the Supreme Court of the United States during that time, is overruled, the people of this country would be more startled than the gentleman was at the proposition which I advanced.

As the gentleman from Illinois is not here to-day, I think it fair to read what he said in the second instance, qualifying his previous declaration. I read from page 1302 of the RECORD:

> In listening to the debate I felt constrained to take issue with the statement of law announced by the gentleman from New York, the champion of the minority report in this case. I had occasion during the debate to state that the Dartmouth College case, cited by him, did not, in my judgment, apply to this class of cases; that the people of this country are supreme upon all questions of this kind, and their rights can not be legislated away. I found, Mr. Speaker, that my position was criticised by men for whose good opinion I care much; and this has caused me to examine more carefully not only the report of the committee, but the evidence before the committee in the Forty-ninth Congress and the law which governs the case. This investigation has not only confirmed me in the view which I took of the law while the debate was in progress, but has caused me to dissent from the statement of facts as given by the gentleman from New York on behalf of the minority of the committee. I take issue with him as to the rights of the Western Union Telegraph Company—not only as to the facts upon which he claims there is a valid contract between that company and these railroad companies, but as to the law itself.

I do not wish to make further comment on this point. I have read this second explanation in order not to misrepresent, but to do entire justice to a gentleman whom I esteem personally and for whose judgment in matters of law I have great respect. But if any one has any question as to the fact that the decision of the Supreme Court in the Dartmouth College case has been uniformly cited and followed with approval, I will refer in the first instance to the action of the Supreme Court in 1823 (four years after the Dartmouth College decision) in the great case of Green vs. Biddle, in which the young statesman of Kentucky, then known as the "gallant Harry of the West," came here as the champion of his State to aid, if he could, the settler whose rights were sought to be protected under a statute which was in violation of the Constitution of the United States; but his great eloquence and legal ability failed to cause the Supreme Court to change their former ruling. On the contrary, they cited it with approval and confirmed it.

Coming down to the present era, that decision was cited in 1870, in the Pennsylvania College cases, 13 Wallace. It was cited in 1872 in the case of Miller vs. The State, 15 Wallace. It was cited in 1884 in the Virginia

Coupon cases, 114 United States Reports; and I risk the prediction that when the judgment in the California cases, recently under consideration in that court, shall be pronounced, the Dartmouth College decision will be again cited with approval. So much for the credit which is to be given to that decision.

But I do not ask this House to take that into account at all. I refer to a case in which the Union Pacific Railroad Company sought to shield itself from the provisions of the sinking-fund act, and I cite the opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States, covering fully all the questions which can arise in this case. I will read but a few sentences from a very voluminous opinion:

I read first from page 718 of 99 United States the opinion of the Chief-Justice:

It is our duty, when required in the regular course of judicial proceedings, to declare an act of Congress void if not within the legislative power of the United States; but this declaration should never be made except in a clear case. Every possible presumption is in favor of the validity of a statute, and this continues until the contrary is shown beyond a rational doubt. One branch of the Government can not encroach on the domain of another without danger. The safety of our institutions depends in no small degree on a strict observance of this salutary rule.

The United States can not, any more than a State, interfere with private rights except for legitimate governmental purposes. They are not included within the constitutional prohibition which prevents States from passing laws impairing the obligation of contracts, but equally with the States they are prohibited from depriving persons or corporations of property without due process of law. They can not legislate back to themselves, without making compensation, the lands they have given this corporation to aid in the construction of its railroad. Neither can they, by legislation, compel the corporation to discharge its obligations in respect to the subsidy bonds otherwise than according to the contract already made in that connection. The United States are as much bound by their contracts as are individuals.

And I commend to my friend from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER], who spoke on another question a day or two since, that and the following sentence:

If they repudiate their obligations, it is as much repudiation, with all the wrong and reproach that term implies, as it would be if the repudiator had been a State or a municipality or a citizen.

Then he goes on to say, and I will only read a sentence from page 721:

Giving full effect to the principles which have thus been authoritatively stated, we think it safe to say that whatever rules Congress might have prescribed in the original charter for the government of the corporation in the administration of its affairs, it retained the power to establish by amendment. In so doing it can not undo what has already been done, and it can not unmake contracts that have already been made, but it may provide for what shall be done in the future, and may direct what preparation shall be made for the due performance of contracts already entered into. It might have originally prohibited the borrowing of money on mortgage, or it might have said that no bonded debt should be created without ample provision by sinking fund to meet it at maturity. Not having done so at first, it can not now by direct legislation vacate mortgages already made under the powers originally granted nor release debt already contracted. A prohibition now against contracting debts will not avoid debts already incurred.

An amendment making it unlawful to issue bonds payable at a distant day, without at the same time establishing a fund for their ultimate redemption, will not invalidate a bond already out. All such legislation will be confined in its operation to the future.

Now let us apply the rule as laid down there to this case. I neglected to state in my statement of the facts that this position of Judge Miller was pronounced in 1880, and that in the subsequent year a contract was entered into by the Western Union Telegraph Company and the subsidized railroad companies whereby the Union Pacific Railroad Company surrendered its lines, expressly reserving the right to keep up its franchises. They agreed to work those lines in harmony. They agreed they would divide the expenses of the labor. They agreed they would mutually lease to each other their respective lines for use one by the other, and that lease was carried out and they went into operation. The Union Pacific came into possession of the lines of telegraph belonging to the Western Union along its line, and the Western Union Telegraph came into possession in connection with the Union Pacific of the lines belonging to that road. Their rights under this lease became vested rights, and are as absolutely perfect as if under a proper statute authorizing it they had paid for and delivered the property one to the other.

In this case the contract is for twenty-five years. One of the considerations paid by the Western Union Telegraph line, which is being paid from day to day, is the provision of $25,000 of telegraphing each year in the business of the railroad company so that it can control freight in Boston, in New York, in Philadelphia, and all the cities of the country with direct communication with its freight agents in these cities—receiving $25,000 of telegraphing without the payment of a cent. It built a line of wire along the Missouri River between Kansas City and Omaha, and it gives that exclusively to the Union Pacific for the uses of that road.

Now, sir, I come to the discussion of the proposition made by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. LANE] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS]. It was insisted this was a police regulation and was therefore excepted from the provisions. And the leading case on police regulations is the one known as the sinking-fund case of the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy Railroad Company against the State of Iowa (94 United States, page 115).

The Chicago, Burlington and Quincy Railroad Company, at the time this writ was brought, was made up by the union of the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy Railroad Company, of Illinois, and the Mississippi and Missouri Railroad Company, of Iowa. The question was whether they had the right to regulate the tolls that may be charged by that road by legislative enactments in Iowa; and the Supreme Court held they could, because it was a proper regulation of interstate commerce, or commerce that would benefit the citizens of that State. But if the Legislature had gone back one step further and had undertaken to pass upon the question of whether or not the Mississippi and Missouri Railroad Company of Iowa could form such a union with the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy of Illinois, then it would have presented a parallel case with this case, and then the courts would have interposed and said, "No; that is a matter beyond legislative control."

Mr. Speaker, apply the same reasoning to this case, and the transmission of messages by telegraph being a great commercial measure, there can be no doubt that the Congress of the United States can control, by interstate regulation similar to the Interstate Railroad Commission, the tairffs and the methods under which the business can be done. But they can not go back, any more than the Legislature of Iowa could have gone back in the case to which I have alluded, in the consolidation of the Mississippi and Missouri and the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy Railroads; they can not go back and take the union of these two companies for a period of twenty-five years which they made, whereby they became mutually interested in each other's lines and undertook to operate them in harmony under a contract properly made by authority of law.

I have, I believe, said all I desired to say upon the question of fact and upon the question of constitutional law presented by this bill; but so much has been said in regard to this great ogre—and I can not remember the terms which have been used to denounce it—and upon which the light of God's eternal justice was to be let in by this law, that I propose to give a few statistics for the information of gentlemen in regard to what this ogre is and what it has done; and I call attention of gentlemen to what this scriptural beast, with its seven heads and ten horns, this Octopus giganticus, this devil-fish extraordinary, which has been brought before the bar of this House for condemnation as having preyed upon the substance of this country for years and sapped its vitals to the very foundation, has done. I am prepared here with some statistics which will make interesting reading, and which I will not take the time to read now in detail, but pass to the Reporters and ask to have them incorporated as a part of my remarks.

Table exhibiting the mileage of lines operated by the Western Union Telegraph Company, number of offices, number of messages sent, receipts, expenses, profits, and average tolls and cost per message, for each year since 1866.

The details of the Western Union telegraph business which I hold in my hand run through a period of twenty years, from 1867 to 1887, inclusive. In 1867 they had wires enough in this country to go three times around the globe, and they transmitted messages for which they charged on the average $1.04\frac{7}{10}$ to every person sending messages over the lines. In 1869 this octopus had thrown another coil around the world, and had sufficient wires to go four times around the globe. That year they charged 69 cents for every message sent during the year on the average. In 1871 they had taken another coil, and then had wire enough to go five times around the globe, and the price was down to 62 cents on the average for each message. Further enumeration I will not give, not wishing to weary the House by calling attention to these details, but will content myself with stating that in 1887 they had in operation in this country 524,641 miles of wires, enough to go twenty-one times around this globe measured at the equator, and that they charged for messages sent during that time an average of only $30\frac{1}{2}$ cents per message, which cost them 23 cents per message to transmit, leaving a profit of $7\frac{1}{2}$ each.

Let us see now what they have been doing in another direction. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] who has charge of this bill asked me the other day, in this discussion, as to when the reductions were made and under what circumstances, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DUNHAM] was particularly anxious to know whether they had been made at the time when the company was coerced by aggressive competition. I am here with statistics which I will ask to have incorporated as a part of my remarks, showing when each reduction was made. This Western Union Company in that region west of the Missouri River, that imperium in imperio spoken of by the gentleman from Kansas who introduced the bill as having more than half the territory of the United States, and more than 8,000,000 people—the Western Union Company west of the Missouri River has made in general reduction of rates as follows: In 1871 all rates above $5 were reduced to $5. In 1873, all rates above $2.50 were reduced to $2.50. In 1879, all rates above $2 were reduced to $2. In 1882, a year after this consolidation, or this agreement for the joint operation of these roads, all rates above $1.50 were reduced to $1.50, and in March, 1884, when there was no competition on these lines, all rates above $1 throughout the length and breadth of the United States were reduced to $1.

None of these general changes were prompted or forced by competition. They covered the whole territory occupied by the lines of the Western Union Company. During competition in 1877 the $2.50 rate, New York to San Francisco and intermediate competing places west of Omaha, was reduced to $2. This rate was not disturbed after the consolidation with the Atlantic and Pacific Company, and in 1879, as related above, $2 was made the maximum rate at every Western Union office, and then reduced as noted to $1.50 in 1882 and $1 in 1884.

Between offices west of the Missouri River the record shows that in 1872 the tariff between Omaha and San Francisco was $2.35, and the tariff of offices east of Ogden with offices west was found by adding the local rates east and west from that point together, subject to the limitations of the maximum rates above given. Within the State of Nebraska the maximum has fallen from $1.25 in 1879 to 40 cents at present; in Kansas, from $1 in 1879 to 40 cents at present; in Wyoming, from $1 in 1879 to 40 cents at present; in Colorado, from $1 in 1879 to 40 cents at present. Similar changes were made in other States and Territories west of Omaha.

I call the attention of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DUNHAM] to the fact that in every State and Territory west of the Mississippi River, in the State of Kansas, in the State of Nebraska, in Minnesota, in the Territory of Wyoming, in the Territory of Dakota, and in all the States and Territories on this side of the mountains, the present local rate is 40 cents for any point within the State or Territory from which it is sent, and that reduction was made after the last settlement with the Baltimore and Ohio Telegraph Company, which company brought this measure before Congress during the last term.

There is at present no rate between any two offices in any of the Western States or Territories higher than 50 cents. In 1877 the rates between California offices ran from 25 cents to $1.50. In that year the highest rate between Western Union offices along the Pacific coast was $2. At present the highest rate is 60 cents for a day and 50 cents for a night message.

Now, I desire to make a statement as to what kind of service the public has in this matter. I have a statement here showing the number of Western Union offices open in the States and Territories west of the Mississippi River during 1879 and at present.

In Minnesota the number was 225 in 1879 and 441 in 1888. In Iowa the number then was 448; is now 833. In Missouri the number then was 312; is now 580. In Arkansas the number then was 40; it is now 143. In Louisiana the number then was 40; it is now 106. In Dakota the number then was 15; it is now 311. In Nebraska it was then 55; now 442; in Kansas, then 175, now 626; in the Indian Territory, then 11, now 33; in Texas, then 117, now 360; in Montana, then 3, now 87; in Wyoming, then 15, now 49; in Colorado, then 57, now 210; in New Mexico, then 5, now 61; in Idaho, then 5, now 35; in Utah, then 5, now 46; in Arizona, then 1, now 33; in Nevada, then 36, now 39; in Washington Territory, then 20, now 78; in Oregon, then 34, now 78; in California, then 266, now 379—a total for the Western States and Territories, including all west of the Mississippi River, of 1,885 offices in 1879 and 4,970 in 1888.

I will also have printed, with the leave of the House, as part of my remarks, a comparative statement showing what was the highest interstate charge in 1879 and what is the highest at the present time. I will not detain the House by reading it.

* Maximum to San Francisco, 1888, 40 cents.

Now, sir, I have said that the average rates of this octopus were 30.4 cents for each message during the year. We have often been cited to the cheap telegraphy they have in Europe, in England and France. I have here and will read to the House a comparative statement by which I think, perhaps, some gentlemen may be startled to find that, considering the distances that messages are sent in this country, there is no country on the globe that enjoys such facilities for telegraphy as those enjoyed here. It is true the normal number of words to be sent as a message in England is twenty, and here it is ten. But there they provide for counting the words composing the address and the signature; while here any address to the care of anybody at the corner of any street and avenue, embracing ten or fifteen words, can go in free.

I have here a comparison of London and Washington rates for a message of 22 words, i. e., 9 words of address and signature and 13 words in the body of the message. (Twenty-two words was the average found in a large number of New York messages—9 words in address and signature, 13 in the body.) The distances given are air line.

FROM LONDON.

250 miles, 22 words, 88 cents to $1.32, Belgium, Holland, France.
500 miles, 22 words, $1.10 to $1.54, France, Germany, Switzerland.
750 miles, 22 words, $1.32 to $1.98, Germany, Austria, Italy.
1,000 miles, 22 words, $1.98 to $2.86, Austria, Italy, Spain, Russia.
1,250 miles, 22 words, $1.98 to $3.08, Austria, Turkey.
1,500 miles, 22 words, $2.86 to $3.20, Russia, Turkey, Greece.

FROM WASHINGTON.

250 miles, 22 words, 23 to 59 cents, day; 23 to 36 cents, night.
500 miles, 22 words, 49 to 59 cents, day; 23 to 36 cents, night.
750 miles, 22 words, 59 to 72 cents, day; 36 to 49 cents, night.
1,000 miles, 22 words, 59 to 90 cents, day; 36 to 59 cents, night.
1,250 miles, 22 words, 72 to 90 cents, day; 59 to 72 cents, night.
1,500 miles, 22 words, 90 cents, day; 72 cents, night.
1,750 miles, 22 words, 90 cents, day; 72 cents, night.
2,000 miles, 22 words, 90 cents to $1.21, day; 72 to 90 cents, night.
2,250 miles, 22 words, $1.21.
2,500 miles, 22 words, $1.21.

Rates from Paris for a 22-word message are given below (air line):

250 miles, 22 cents to $1.32; France, England, Belgium, Germany.
500 miles, 72 cents to $1.05; Germany, Switzerland, Hungary.
750 miles, 88 cents to $1.25; Italy, Austria, Denmark, Spain.
1,000 miles, $1.05 to $2.33; Austria, Sweden, Russia, Turkey.
1,250 miles, $2.11 to $2.35; Russia, Turkey, Greece.

I want to call the attention of the House to the fact that the rates I have given for this country are not limited to points within our interterritorial limits. In the figures which I have given Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Ontario, Quebec, all those provinces, are included; and the following are the rates from New York to different places, including those provinces:

250 miles, from 22 to 49 cents.
500 miles, from 28 to 59 cents.
750 miles, from 28 to 72 cents.
1,000 miles, from 59 to 90 cents.
1,250 miles, from 72 to 90 cents.
1,500 miles, 90 cents.

To the Pacific coast, from 90 cents to $1.21. Anywhere over the broad domain, from Jacksonville, Fla., to the remotest point in Washington Territory, $1.21, and no more, being a rate of $1 for 10 words and 7 cents for each additional word.

Mr. BREWER. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. WHITE, of New York. Yes, sir.

Mr. BREWER. As the gentleman has given this matter a great deal of investigation, I want to ask him how the average rates for messages in this country compare with those in the countries of Europe, in England, France, and Germany, taking distance into consideration?

Mr. WHITE, of New York. You mean England within England, Germany within Germany, and France within France?

Mr. BREWER. Yes.

Mr. WHITE, of New York. As to Germany I am not able to answer; I have not the data; but assuming the distances that are embraced in England an answer will be found in this statement. The minimum rate for 250 miles, which I suppose would be the maximum distance from London to any point in England, is 88 cents for 22 words. Upon examination, however, I find those tables are for business in Belgium, Holland, and France only, so I cannot answer.

Mr. LIND. Will the gentleman permit me a question?

Mr. WHITE, of New York. Yes, sir.

Mr. LIND. In the State of Minnesota, where I reside, at New Ulm, the county seat of Brown County, we have to pay 45 cents for a message to another county seat only 45 miles distant, on the same line of railroad, and over the same wire—45 cents for 45 miles.

Mr. WHITE, of New York. I desire to say to the gentleman that he is giving us ancient history. The answer to his question is simply that he is mistaken, and that since this consolidation was made the rate is 40 cents anywhere within the State of Minnesota. I "speak by the card, lest equivocation should undo me."

Mr. LIND. I state on my honor that the rates I have mentioned were the rates charged not over three months ago. I paid them myself.

Mr. WHITE, of New York. I am not talking about three months ago. I am talking about existing facts to-day, and at the close of December, 1887.

Mr. BELDEN. Can the gentleman tell us why they charge more for a message from Washington to Cortland, N. Y., than they do for a message to Syracuse, which is more than 20 miles farther? Also, why they have raised the price within the last ten days?

Mr. WHITE, of New York. That is an interstate-commerce question, and I do not pass upon it.

Mr. BELDEN. But you said the gentleman from Minnesota was talking of ancient history and that you were talking about to-day; so I am asking about to-day.

Mr. WHITE, of New York. I say that the regular rate between any two points inside the State of New York is 40 cents.

Mr. BELDEN. And more from here for a short distance than for a long one?

Mr. WHITE, of New York. That should be regulated by the interstate law, which I am in favor of.

Mr. HOLMES. Is it not true that the great cities and the Eastern seaboard get the benefit of the low rates, and that in the West and South we have to pay excessive rates?

Mr. WHITE, of New York. No, sir.

Mr. BELDEN. I want to say distinctly to the gentleman that I know positively that wherever there is not an opposition line they have raised rates within a week.

Mr. WHITE, of New York. I know nothing of the particular instances alluded to by my colleague. I repeat that I believe in a competent, salutary, fair interstate regulation, where such abuses may be properly corrected if they occur.

I am giving statistics, and no man will be able successfully to contradict them. I do not come here to risk my reputation upon statements of fact without being sure of my premises.

As my time is nearly out I wish, in closing, to say one word to some of my "protection" friends here; and I wish it understood that I am with them on that question. But they are demanding in this country decreased rates for telegraph service where the rates are already lower than those charged in Europe, although the service there is conducted by underpaid foreign labor. I have the statistics here to sustain what I say.

EXECUTIVE OFFICE, WESTERN UNION TELEGRAPH COMPANY,
New York, February 11, 1888.

DEAR SIR: Examination of the pay-rolls of the general or main operating department at New York City, of the Western Union Telegraph Company, for the month of December, 1887 (the most recent month readily available therefor), shows the operators employed (exclusive of manager, assistant managers, and chief operators) to have been as follows:

471 males, at monthly pay aggregating	$33,705.00
193 females, at monthly pay aggregating	7,095.00
Total 664, at monthly pay aggregating	40,800.00

The average per month being—

Males	$71.56
Females	36.75
Males and females	61.45

Yours, respectfully,

J. B. VAN EVERY, Auditor.

Hon. S. V. WHITE.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have already occupied more time than I had expected to occupy. I desire to sum up.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Illinois. I understood the gentleman to concede that the acts of 1862 and 1864 require these land-grant railroad companies to operate telegraph lines in connection with their railroads, for public use, without discrimination as to the persons for whom the service is rendered.

Mr. WHITE, of New York. Yes, sir.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Illinois. Now I ask the gentleman whether these railroads, or persons representing them, do at the present time make, or have in the past made, such discriminations?

Mr. WHITE, of New York. According to my belief, yes; but I do not know. The report in this case shows that when a dispatch comes from Washington with a date, a charge is made for sending the Washington date, because the dispatch is dated again at Omaha when it is sent over.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. WHITE, of New York. I ask only three minutes, in order that I may make one statement in conclusion.

Mr. DOCKERY. I hope that will be granted.

There was no objection.

Mr. WHITE, of New York. I have this only to say: I have submitted these statements and statistics in regard to the charges of the Western Union Telegraph Company in order that members of this House, as well as the public, may be advised of the amount of misunderstanding there is in regard to the business done by these companies. I am not here defending them. I believe in putting them under the interstate-commerce law, where we can regulate them and make the charges as much for the "long haul" as for the "short haul."

Mr. BELDEN. But you do not do it, all the same.

Mr. WHITE, of New York. I do not do it because no bill has been presented for that purpose, but when such bill is presented I stand prepared to support the measure. I simply come here to claim for these different corporations the rights which have accrued to them under contracts lawfully made, and to raise my protest against anarchy or communism in legislation which will undertake to legislate from any man the property which he has acquired honestly and honorably under the guaranties of the law.

THE PROVISIONS OF THE BILL.

Mr. SYMES. Mr. Speaker, what are the provisions of this bill? Section 1 simply requires the subsidy railroad and telegraph companies to comply in part with the provisions and conditions of the statutes and grants creating them. In other words, having accepted the grant of these franchises and received from the Government an amount in money and land subsidies sufficient to construct these lines of railroad and telegraph, it requires them to maintain and operate them in pursuance of the acts and laws bestowing upon them the greatest and most liberal franchises, gifts, and donations ever bestowed by a generous Government and people on quasi-private corporations.

The act of July 24, 1866, incorporated in Title LXV of the Revised Statutes, expressly prohibits any telegraph company which has received any grant, franchise, right of way, or aid from the United States from transferring any of its rights therein granted and accepted to any other corporation, association, or person. Language could not be plainer. This bill only proposes to enforce the express provisions of these acts which have been accepted by these telegraph companies. No forfeiture or interference with any vested rights is in any way attempted in this bill. The bill does not attempt to forfeit the legal or other rights of the Western Union Company, of the Central or Union Pacific Telegraph Company, or of any individuals or corporations. It expressly gives to persons or corporations who claim or assert any rights, vested or other, in connection with these telegraph companies or contracts, an opportunity to appear before the Interstate Commerce Commission and adjudicate those rights, whatever they may be. Are their rights not safe before that high tribunal? Are they afraid to trust them to its judgment? That commission is composed of distinguished men of national reputation. What lawyer who is familiar with the works and decisions of Judge Cooley on Constitutional Limitations is afraid to trust a tribunal of which he is at the head when vested rights is the subject at issue? Does a bill which provides a remedy before so exalted a tribunal interfere with vested rights?

Mr. Speaker, these contracts between the Union and Central Pacific Railroad and Telegraph Companies and the Western Union Telegraph Company are void ab initio. They were, at the time they were made, and are still, in direct violation of the express provisions of the statutes and grants creating the Union and Central Pacific Railroad and Telegraph Companies, and they are in violation of public policy and against public law. Vested rights can never accrue or arise under void contracts, or, in other words, under contracts that are made or attempted to be made in violation of law. It makes no difference whether such contracts are in violation of a statute creating a corporation and granting franchise privileges and property to such corporation, or in violation of that branch of unwritten or common law called "public policy." It would not be necessary to discuss or show why these contracts are in violation of public policy, and hence void, did not the gentleman from New York [Mr. WHITE] and others seem to ignore the principle of law and the fact that public policy as applied to the construction and validity of contracts is as much a rule of law as any express provisions of a statute governing the particular subject-matter or contract in question.

If the statutes creating these railroad and telegraph companies and granting these franchises and subsidies did not in effect make these contracts void, they would be void because against the public policy of the common law of the land. The principle is that a contract can not be enforced if its conditions are against the general good. Lord Coke regarded the conditions of a contract which were repugnant to the good of the state, as he expressed it, void. Lord Ellenborough said that whenever the tolerating of any species of contract has a tendency to produce a public mischief or inconvenience such a contract has been held void. The American law in point on the question arising on these contracts is found in that class of decisions holding that contracts between railroad companies not to compete for business are void as against public policy, and that all pooling contracts, with certain limitations, are void for the same reason. It is not necessary to multiply the authorities. There are no adverse opinions in the long line of decisions upon the subject.

These decisions, for many reasons, we can not at this time elaborate. They in effect hold that these contracts between the Union and Central Pacific Railroad and Telegraph Companies and the Western Union Telegraph Company are void and of no force and effect. If so, how could vested rights arise under these contracts which gentlemen seem to be afraid this bill will interfere with?

THE CONTRACTS.

Mr. Speaker, if these contracts were in the nature of lease contracts and provided for and required the Western Union Company to operate these telegraph lines in accordance with the provisions of these grants and franchises, it would present a very different case. While such contracts would be illegal, still there might be some ground for saying that it made no difference to the Government or the people if the object and intention of the statutes and franchises were carried out in good faith. In that state of the case it might be said that if the Western Union Company, acting in the nature of the successor or assign of these Union and Central Pacific Railroad and Telegraph Companies, had given to the people equal facilities in telegraphic communication at reasonable rates without any unjust discrimination; if it had received and transmitted the dispatches and messages presented to it by any other telegraph company, or by other corporations or individuals at any points on these lines, at the same rates as if they had been presented by other connecting lines belonging to the Western Union Company, there might be some justification for the positions assumed in the minority report and by the gentleman from New York and others who support it and attempt to justify the conduct of the Western Union Company.

But what are the facts? These contracts do not require or provide for the Western Union Company to do the things or perform the acts necessary to operate these telegraph lines so as to effect the objects and purposes expressly provided for in these statutes, grants, and franchises. The evidence taken before the committee shows that these contracts were made with the object and intention of defeating every substantial requirement of these statutes, grants, and conditions upon which they were made, and these contracts have been executed so as to defeat almost every provision, object, and intention of these statutes, grants, and franchises.

The rates charged and collected by the Western Union Company have in many instances been outrageously discriminating and extortionate. It cost, for some time, 25 cents to send a dispatch from New York or Washington to Chicago; 25 cents to Omaha or Kansas City from New York by the Baltimore and Ohio Telegraph Company; and it cost 75 cents to have these same dispatches forwarded from these points to Denver, Salt Lake City, San Francisco, and other important points west of the Missouri River.

It costs 25 cents to send a dispatch over 1,500 miles, from New York to Omaha or Kansas City, and it costs 50 cents in the State of Colorado to send a dispatch from Denver to Leadville, a distance of 150 miles, and 40 cents to Pueblo and other leading towns in Colorado at a distance of from 50 to 120 miles.

These extortionate and discriminating charges have been attempted to be justified on the ground of the large expense of keeping up lines and paying operators where the offices were a long distance apart and there was but a small amount of business. Mr. Speaker, there never was so much telegraph business in any ordinary-sized cities as in Denver and Leadville, especially during the period of these highest rates. The offices in Denver and Leadville were literally overrun with business and the receipts were something wonderful. This was during the period of the great mining boom and speculation in Leadville, and the wires between Leadville and Denver, and between Leadville and Chicago and New York, and Denver and Chicago and New York, were fairly kept hot in sending dispatches during this time.

The Western Union Company, acting under these contracts, has violated every rule of law, equity, and public policy. They have refused to allow any other telegraph companies to send messages over these Union and Central Pacific lines at the same proportionate rates the Western Union Company charges for through business when sent over its own connecting lines east of the Missouri River. Acting under and, as they claim, in pursuance of these contracts, it has violated the provisions of section 1 of the act of June 16, 1860, which provides that said Union and Central Pacific lines—

> Shall be open to the use of all citizens of the United States * * * on the payment of the regular charges for the transmission of dispatches.

It has violated the provisions of section 3 of said act, which requires that—

> All messages received from any individual, company, or corporation, or from any telegraph lines connecting with this line at either of its termini, shall be impartially transmitted in the order of their reception, excepting that the dispatches of the Government shall have priority.

It has violated the provisions of section 12 of the act of July 1, 1862, which requires that—

> The whole lines of said railroad and branches and telegraph shall be operated and used for all purposes of communication, travel, and transportation, so far as the public and Government are concerned, as one connected, continuous line. * * *

It has violated section 15 of said last-named act, which provides that—

> Any other railroad or telegraph companies now incorporated or hereafter to be incorporated shall have the right to connect their road with the road and branches provided for by this act at such place and upon such just and equitable terms as the President of the United States may prescribe. * * *

It has violated and ignored the provisions of section 15 of the act of July 2, 1864, amendatory of the act of July 1, 1862, which again requires:

> In such operation (of said telegraph lines) and use to afford and secure to each equal advantages and facilities as to rates, time, and transportation, without any discrimination of any kind in favor of the road or business of any or either of said companies or adverse to the road or business of any or either of the others; and it shall not be lawful for the proprietors of any line of telegraph authorized by this act or the act amended by this act to refuse or fail to convey for all persons requiring the transmission of news and messages of like character on pain of forfeiting to the person injured for each offense the sum of $100, and such other damage as he may have suffered on account of such refusal or failure, to be sued for and recovered in any court of the United States or of any State or Territory of competent jurisdiction.

It has violated the spirit and letter of many other provisions of said acts which it is not necessary to refer to in this connection.

The Union and Central Pacific Railroad and telegraph companies, by making these contracts and allowing the Western Union Company to take possession of and operate these lines in the manner stated, have violated the provisions of the said statutes and grants above shown to have been violated by the Western Union Telegraph Company. These are the statutes; these are the acts; these are the grants, franchises, and subsidies which brought these corporations into existence and created and constructed these great lines of railroad and telegraph. They have, in addition, by making these contracts, violated the other provisions of the said acts requiring them to maintain, keep in repair, and operate these lines, which were the very conditions upon which the Government granted the franchises, money, and land subsidies to build them.

These Union and Central Pacific Railroad and telegraph companies have not only violated these statutes, franchises, and grants, but they have violated the well-known principle which has formed an important branch of the law governing the grants of franchises and subsidies to corporations since the beginning of such grants and franchises by sovereigns or governments, which is that grants of franchises or subsidies can only be for public use. The majority report of the committee shows that grants of property in the way of subsidies can only be for public use.

Mr. Speaker, the committee might have gone further and shown that such grants of franchises without subsidies or donations of money or property can only be for public use, and can only be legally used for the public good. This rule of law seems often to be ignored in discussions upon this subject.

I state. sir, as a legal proposition, and I defy successful contradiction, that a grant by the government or a sovereign of a franchise right to organize a corporation and build a railroad or telegraph line and to exercise the right of eminent domain, and collect charges for traffic, called tolls, is as much a grant of public property as the land and money subsidies given to the Union and Central Pacific Railroad and telegraph lines. Such franchises are public property granted in trust to quasi-private corporations for the benefit of the public or people. The franchise of eminent domain and the franchise of the right to collect charges on traffic, called the right take tolls, do not become private property because granted by the sovereign to quasi-private corporations in trust for the public and for the public use. The sovereign has no power to grant the right to take private property for private use. It can only authorize it to be taken for the use of the public; and it remains public property in so far as the power remains in the sovereign or government granting it for public use to regulate and control it within the reasonable and well-known limitations of the law. It follows as a legal corollary and consequence from this that a franchise right, such as the right of eminent domain and the right to take tolls, which require a grant from the sovereign to vest in the grantees the authority and right to exercise it, remains public property and subject to the control and regulation of the same sovereign power that granted them in trust for public use. The common and vulgar error which ignores or forgets these principles has caused much confusion in the numerous discussions of this subject. These corporation gentlemen and lawyers should remember that the Government has no constitutional power whatever to grant the sovereign rights of eminent domain or of collecting tolls so as to make these franchises the property of any private individual or corporation, or so as to divest the sovereign of the power to regulate the puhlic use of these public rights of property.

These elementary principles formed the fundamentals of the common law on this subject ages before railroads or telegraphs were thought of. I defy gentlemen to cite a respectable authority or a decision of a high court against these principles or against their application to railroads and telegraph companies or like corporations of the present day. So I say that outside of these statutes granting these franchises and subsidies to the Union and Central Pacific railroad and telegraph lines this Congress would have the right to regulate the mode and way in which the Union and Central Pacific railroad and telegraph lines shall execute these public trusts and use these public franchises.

As I have shown in another connection, these contracts are illegal and void as against public law and public policy. Certainly no illegal or void contracts can stand in the way of this legal and constitutional power and duty of Congress to properly regulate the exercise of these public franchises and trusts.

This part of my argument is not necessary to establish the right, power, or duty of this Congress to pass this bill, because the right is so plain under the express provisions of the grants and under the conditions, reservations, and requirements contained in the very letter of these statutes; but it seems very pertinent to some parts of the discussion that has been had on this bill.

Mr. Speaker, in saying what I have in this connection I have not ignored or forgotten those rules of law which protect the rights and interests of the grantees of such franchises or the legal and vested rights of the officers, members, or stockholders of quasi-private corporations in such cases. It is important that their property and their rights should be protected for the public good. I am one of the last who will advocate the violation of any of those vested rights which form one of the important constitutional safeguards thrown around private property.

Those who have invested their means in good faith in great enterprises, some of which have resulted in great material advantages and benefit to the Government and to the people, and have taken their chances of success or failure, are as much entitled to protection and to the legitimate results of such investments as any other class of people or property. And the officers, members, and stockholders of quasi-private corporations have vested rights in the property and franchises of such corporations which are as sacred as the vested rights or ownership in any property. That these vested rights arise out of the grants on the part of the Government and the acceptance of them on the part of the grantees, which are in the nature of contracts, is a principle of American constitutional law that can not be denied.

OBJECTS OF THE GRANTS AND FRANCHISES.

Mr. Speaker, what was the object of these extraordinary grants and subsidies in money, credit, and lands by the Government? Was not the paramount object that the people of these United States should have equal facilities and benefits of railroad and telegraphic communication between the Missouri River and the Pacific Ocean? These greatest and most lavish donations of the people's credit, land, and money can not be justified upon any other hypothesis or in any other way. Attempts to justify them on any other ground would be a sad reflection—nay, sir, a slander—on the character and memory of some of the most distinguished patriots and statesmen of the past generation who advocated and voted for these extraordinary subsidies. I, sir, believed then and believe now that if these remarkable grants and donations were necessary to cause the speedy building of the Union and Central Pacific railroad and telegraph lines across the continent, they were justifiable and proper on the ground of public policy. Railroad and telegraph communication had become very general east of the Missouri River, but throughout that great and wonderful region for 2,000 miles, from the shores of the Pacific to the Missouri, there were no railroads or telegraphs. The United States were struggling in the throes of revolution to maintain the national authority. The commercial, conservative, and patriotic people and statesmen of this country indorsed the action of Congress in making these grants and donations.

They believed then and believe now that the direct and indirect benefits to the Government and people would more than compensate for these lavish gifts, donations, and grants of franchises to the Union and Central Pacific railroad and telegraph lines.

Mr. Speaker, I have not much patience with those hypercritical fault-finders who spend their time in criticising those patriotic statesmen and those acts, for party purposes, because the Republican party was responsible for this legislation. Understand, sir, I am only speaking of the original acts and the necessary amendments thereto, and the grants made for the purpose of bringing about the construction, as soon as practicable, of these great continental highways when they were needed and demanded by the Government and the people. I do not propose at this time to say anything about subsequent acts of legislation in this connection. Some of that subsequent legislation, I think, is subject to criticism.

But, sir, the Republican party and the statesmen of that party at that time, whose every pulse of brain, heart, and nerve beat honestly and solely for the life of this Union and its future material and political greatness, passed these acts and brought about the construction of these great national highways between the civilization of the eastern and western portions of our country; and I, for one, feel proud of that party record and have only praise and eulogy for their action.

But, Mr. Speaker, if many of these patriots and statesmen who passed these acts for great and good purposes could be permitted "to commune with anything still chained by the trammels of mortality," and should come here now and review the history of the abuses of these corporate franchises and willful violation of the trusts arising from these grants; should read the recital of the undisputed facts that show the acts and conduct of the Gould and other rings when they managed and controlled the affairs, franchises, and property of these corporations; how these pools and rings levied tens of millions of discriminating tribute from the people on the one hand, and prevented the Government from collecting tens of millions of its just dues on the other hand, and then took all the proceeds of the money legally due the Government and all the proceeds of the available assets and property of these corporations, including their telegraph lines, and appropriated them to their own use and left these companies bankrupt; and, stranger than all, if they could hear all these illegal and outrageous acts and conduct attempted to be justified and defended when a partial remedy is proposed therefor by invoking that revered and almost sacred rule of constitutional law known as vested rights for the protection of private property, those patriots and statesmen would turn over in their graves and wonder what on earth would take place next; what claims would next be made against the Government in the name of the franchises given and granted and the donations made by this Government of the people to quasi-public or quasi-private corporations in trust to be executed and used for the benefit of all the people.

CORRESPONDENCE WITH GREEN.

Mr. Speaker, I had a correspondence with Norvin Green, the president of the Western Union Telegraph Company, two years ago this winter upon the subject of excessive charges for telegraph service west of the Missouri River, particularly applicable to Colorado. This was at the time the committee were investigating this subject, which, I believe, resulted in favorably reporting this bill. The Chamber of Commerce in Denver represented the discriminating and extortionate charges imposed upon the people of Colorado and of the States and Territories west of the Missouri River by the Western Union Company. I will ask leave to print herewith the correspondence with President Green.

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 13, 1886.

MY DEAR SIR: Mr. PETERS, of Kansas, gave me the particulars of your testimony before the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads regarding the rates for telegraph service in Kansas. As your examination upon this subject bears about the same relation to the State of Colorado that it does to Kansas, I desire to respectfully call your attention to it in its application to Colorado. The rates for telegraphing in Colorado are so high, when compared with the rates in the East, that they appear like extortion to our people.

You stated in your testimony that you had been informed the rates in Kansas were high and you would see that the complaint was corrected. You stated that the matter had not been particularly called to your attention before.

The rates to Colorado from the East are about the same as they are to California. The rate from Denver to the East on a day message of ten words is $1. When this is contrasted with the rate in other parts of this country and in other countries it may fairly be called extortion. The rate between Chicago and New York is from 15 to 25 cents for a message of ten words. I understand that the rate from New York to Denver is the same as that from New York to California. This is certainly unjust and unwarrantable discrimination.

I shall be very much obliged for a frank answer to this letter. Our people ought to have relief from this unjust discrimination.

Most respectfully,

G. G. SYMES.

NORVIN GREEN, Esq.,
President Western Union Telegraph Company, New York City.

[Executive office Western Union Telegraph Company. Norvin Green, president.]

NEW YORK, April 24, 1886.

DEAR SIR: Yours of April 13 was referred to our tariff bureau to ascertain precisely what had been done in the way of reductions and what further could be properly done.

In compliance with my promise to Mr. PETERS, to which you refer, I immediately on my return home procured an order for immediate reductions to the following extent: To and from points in Kansas with New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Delaware, Maryland, District of Columbia, Virginia, New Mexico, and Utah, all rates of $1 reduced to 75 cents; rates of 75 to 60; rates of 60 to 50. Nearly the same reductions were made to and from Nebraska.

On business with points in Colorado to and from Illinois, Dakota, Idaho, Arizona, and Nevada the dollar rate was reduced to 75 cents. To and from Nebraska, Kansas, Wyoming, New Mexico, and Utah, 75, reduced to 60. Rates of 60 and 75, between points within the State, reduced to 50.

It is impracticable to make reductions in detail or otherwise than by such general order as above without revising our tariff books, which furnish to each office the rates in detail with 14,600 offices. We are now preparing a new tariff book, which is a work of some months, and have before a subcommittee schedules prepared by the tariff bureau for further reductions. The rates within the State will range from a minimum of 25 cents to a maximum of 50 cents.

Referring to some of the points made in your letter, I beg to say that lines could not be maintained and operated throughout Colorado except at a loss on the basis of tolls prevailing in some of the thickly populated Eastern States. The country is rough, making it expensive to maintain lines, and the population sparse, affording so light a business as to give little employment to the operators. At many of the smaller offices it costs as much or more for an operator who handles from 10 to 25 messages a day as it does in most of the Eastern towns handling 200 or 300 messages a day. Most of the Eastern and Middle States have a maximum of 25 cents. That maximum in Colorado would oblige the closing of a large number of offices that would not yield sufficient to pay the expense of maintaining them.

Our maximum rate between all points in the United States is $1 per message of ten words, with date, address, and signature free. But we charge that maximum whenever the distance exceeds about 2,000 miles. There may be a few exceptions to this on the east and west trunk lines; and there is not another place in the world where messages may be transmitted that distance for $1 except between France and Algiers, the latter being a dependency of France, and over the government lines.

It is true the rate from Colorado to San Francisco is the same as it is from New York to San Francisco, but it costs us less work and less money to transmit messages between New York and San Francisco than from and to any point in Colorado, for the reason that our circuits are always made up and afford constant employment to the operators. The same is true as between points in Colorado and the Eastern and Middle States. Distance is not the only thing that increases the cost of handling messages. It depends more upon how often they have to be relayed or rewritten. On the through eastern and western circuits having sufficient business, circuits are compounded, and instead of relaying, requiring one operator to receive and another to send, the same work is accomplished by an automatic repeater, requiring the attendance of but one man.

In 1866 the rate from Colorado to San Francisco was $7. In 1869 it was reduced to $5, in 1873 to $2.50, in 1878 to $2, in 1880 to $1.50, and since 1882, $1. The rate is lower than any long-distance rates in Europe with the single exception before referred to. We are considering, however, some reduction in long-distance rates as applied especially to Denver, which yields a considerable business.

Very respectfully, yours,

NORVIN GREEN, President.

Hon. G. G. SYMES,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MAY 13, 1886.

MY DEAR SIR: I formally acknowledged the receipt of your letter of April 24 on receiving the same. I have since considered particularly the reduction in telegraph rates brought about in our States, as explained in your letter. On examination they do not furnish the relief to our people to which they are entitled.

There is no good reason why Colorado is not entitled to practically the same rates on messages going to and from points outside of the State as Kansas and Nebraska. You say you have reduced the rates "to and from all points in Kansas with New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Delaware, Maryland, District of Columbia, Virginia, New Mexico, and Utah—all rates at $1 reduced to 75 cents; rates of 75 to 60; rates of 60 to 50." You also say that "nearly the same reductions were made to and from Nebraska," and that "on business with points in Colorado to and from Illinois, Dakota, Idaho, Arizona, and Nevada the dollar rate was reduced to 75 cents; to and from Nebraska, Kansas, Wyoming, New Mexico, and Utah, 75 reduced to 50; rates of 60 and 75 between points within the State reduced to 50 cents." So that no reduction is made between points in Colorado to the east and west, which is the very relief the people of Denver and other large Colorado towns ought to have.

The reason you advance why rates between points in Colorado and other Western States and Territories can not be so low as they are in the thickly settled Eastern States has some justice in it, but this does not apply to telegraph service between Denver and the other large towns in Colorado to points east and west outside of the State.

Denver is a very large, important, and paying office, particularly in business transacted between Denver and leading points to the East, Southeast, and West. In fact, the office has paid an unusually large profit. The Leadville office was also for some years an unusually large paying office, and still pays well.

I therefore respectfully insist that at least the same reductions should be made between Denver, Leadville, and other large towns in Colorado to and from points in New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, and other Eastern States, and California and the District of Columbia, as you have made in Kansas and Nebraska. I put this upon the ground of your own argument made in your letter against lessening the rates. I think it would be just to reduce the rates below that and extend them to and from all points in Colorado, but the offices I have mentioned in Colorado being large paying offices, I see no excuse for not giving the people at these points the same rates that you are extending to communities where the offices do not transact so large a business or pay so large a profit.

If I am mistaken in my general statements regarding the amount of profitable business transacted at Denver, Leadville, and other large towns in Colorado, I will submit the following questions to be answered by your company: (1) The number of messages originating at Denver; (2) the number of messages sent from Denver to other State points; (3) the number of messages sent from Denver to points outside of the State; (4) the gross and net receipts of the Denver office; (5) the same facts regarding the Leadville office and other large towns.

The amount of telegraph service between Denver, Leadville, and other large towns in Colorado and the large cities in the East, Southeast, and West is large and profitable; and I repeat that there is no good reason why the rate for this service should not be reduced, at least as much as you have reduced them between the other points mentioned.

Very respectfully,

G. G. SYMES.

NORVIN GREEN, Esq.,
President Western Union Telegraph Company,
New York City, N. Y.

It will be seen from the letter of President Green of April 24, 1886, that he represented a great reduction in telegraph rates applicable to Colorado, but that when it is scrutinized closely it does not relieve the people of Colorado to any appreciable extent from the unjust and discriminating charges, as is more particularly shown by my letter to President Green of May 13, 1886.

It will be seen that the Western Union Company justified its high charges on the ground of having to maintain offices where the business was very limited; and when it was pointed out that Denver, Leadville, and other cities and towns in Colorado furnished an unusually large amount of telegraph business, and that it was very unjust and discriminating to make the people of Denver, Leadville, and other towns pay the same rates to New York as from San Francisco to New York, and requested to be furnished with (1) the number of messages originating at Denver; (2) the number of messages sent from Denver to other State points; (3) the number of messages sent from Denver to points outside of the State; (4) the gross and net receipts of the Denver office; (5) the same facts regarding the Leadville office and other large towns, which would prove the truth of the statements made, President Green never deigned to answer the communication making these inquiries.

In truth, his letter was an ingenious, false pretense. This is only one illustration which happened to come within my knowledge of the very unjustifiable, outrageous, discriminating, and extortionate charges levied upon the people west of the Missouri River for telegraph services over telegraph lines built by subsidies granted by the Government and by franchises transferring in trust to quasi-private corporations these supposed franchises and subsidies for the benefit of the people.

THE DARTMOUTH COLLEGE CASE.

Mr. Speaker, the Dartmouth College case has been referred to in the minority report of the committee and by gentlemen who have spoken in favor of it as a justification for everything that has been done by the Western Union Company in this regard. As usual, whenever any legislative body or any court proposes to inquire into the peculation, abuse of trusts, or wrongs committed by corporations and their officers, the Dartmouth College case is flippantly talked about as being a great constitutional bar to all legislation and to all judicial proceedings which seek to administer justice when applied to the conduct of corporations and corporate rings.

Mr. Speaker, what is the Dartmouth College case? Upon what facts did it arise? What was decided by the judgment in that case? Sir, I studied that case when a law student. The reading of Webster's consummately able argument in that case caused me to study the case in connection with that argument. In that way I thought I became familiar with it in all its bearings. I should still think so if I did not hear the case so continually misrepresented by lawyers in this country as settling legal propositions so entirely different from my conception of it. I have reviewed my studies upon the subject in the last few years to see if I had so utterly misconceived the facts upon which that decision rested and the principles of law therein decided.

What are the facts as found by the court, upon which the decision of the case turned?

In 1754 and 1755 a private charity school was established on a farm or plantation by Rev. Dr. Wheelock, with the aid of one Joshua Moore, for the purpose of educating native Indians and employing them as missionaries among the native tribes. Dr. Wheelock, the founder and owner of this school, appointed an agent in England to solicit funds to enlarge and increase the usefulness of this charity school. He succeeded in obtaining quite large contributions from the Earl of Dartmouth and others. After a time Lord Dartmouth and others were requested by the founder, Dr. Wheelock, to receive and act as trustees for the funds to support this charity school. In doing this he made a deed of trust to these persons. He appointed them trustees and conveyed all the property in trust to them and authorized them to fix the location of the school, which was to be enlarged and the scope of its educational advantages to be extended to the education of white young men as well as Indians. For these purposes it was thought best by the founder and owner of the school and funds to secure a charter of incorporation. Such a charter was procured from the British Crown. This charter was draughted by Dr. Wheelock, his attorney, and friends. It is quite long, and provides just how this charity school, which is to be changed into an eleemosynary corporation or charity college, shall be conducted; how its funds shall be administered by the trustees; how the officers and professors shall be appointed, and quite particularly how the school and college shall be conducted.

It is not necessary to dwell upon the whole history of the subject; how efforts were made by adjoining States and other towns to secure the location of this desirable school; how a donation of land was made by the governor of New Hampshire which probably resulted in the location of the college in that province. The charter invested the trustees with all legal funds and with the right to appoint successors forever. It made Dr. Wheelock the founder of the institution. The charter or letters patent granted in 1769 simply complied with the request of the founder and created a corporation by the name of "The Trustees of Dartmouth College," with perpetual succession. Nothing was given or granted except the naked power to constitute the twelve trustees of Dartmouth College a private eleemosynary corporation. Nothing was reserved on the part of the sovereign. It was necessary to reserve nothing because no donations or aid were given by the sovereign to this private corporation. No power of eminent domain was expressly granted; no right to collect tolls by way of charges or tariff of any kind whatever upon any person or people was granted. The sovereign simply granted the naked right to the twelve trustees at the request of the founder, to conduct this charity school or college in their own way forever, and administer its affairs in accordance with their own judgment, and to control the private funds which had been raised, and of which they had been constituted the trustees, as they desired and according to the will of the founder.

It was an eleemosynary corporation. Eleemosynary corporations are those created for the management of private property according to the will of the founders or donors. They are corporations constituted for the perpetual distribution of the free alms and bounty of the founder in such manner as he has directed. In a word, such corporations are for the dispensation of private charity. A college created in such a way is as much a private charity as an orphan asylum. Dartmouth College was such a private charity institution. It was purely a private corporation for the perpetual administration and distribution of private charities. Such corporations are almost entirely different in their creation, the objects for which they are created, and the manner in which they are thereafter controlled and governed from such quasi-private corporations created by the sovereign and granted the franchise of eminent domain and the right to collect tolls from the people. A court of equity has jurisdiction to entertain a bill on behalf of the founder or visitors to require the trustees to use the funds or property and to conduct these charity or eleemosynary corporations in accordance with the will of the founders or visitors expressed in or implied from the charters creating them.

The Legislature of New Hampshire passed an act which provided for taking these private funds of this private charity college or eleemosynary corporation away from these twelve trustees, and away from the control of the founder, Dr. Wheelock, and requiring the property of this charity school or college to be transferred to another and a different board of trustees and to a different corporation, and it provided arbitrarily for many other things not necessary to enumerate. The decision of Judge Marshall held that the Legislature could not take this property or funds which belonged to these trustees, and the legal title to which had been transferred to them by the founder, and give it to another and a different body of men or to another and different corporate body. It decided, in other words, that the property, funds, and affairs of this private charity school or college could not be taken away from the control of the founder and the trustees by the Legislature and given to other persons or corporations. It seems strange that it was necessary for a court to be called upon to decide such a proposition.

But, sir, the United States Supreme Court, by the ablest of American judges, did, however, decide a principle of constitutional law in that case, which always has received, and will always continue to receive, the admiration of the bench, the bar, and the people. It was decided that that clause of the Constitution of the United States which says that no Legislature shall pass a law impairing the obligation of contracts applied to the obligations between the sovereign and the members and officers of corporations in the protection of private property, or the property of private or quasi-private corporations; in other words, that the property rights which are acquired under the provisions of an act of incorporation by the members and officers of corporations will be protected under that clause of the Constitution the same as obligations which arise under contracts between individuals.

. It was further decided that the letters patent did not convey to or invest the people or Government of Great Britain or afterwards of New Hampshire with the funds, property, or power to visit or control the affairs of this private charity school or college, and hence the Legislature of New Hampshire had no power to take it away from the control of the founder and trustees. The express language of these letters patent or charter could not be plainer, that such control and power were not taken away by the charter, but were expressly invested forever in the founder, and the trustees named in the charter at his request.

And this is the case and this the decision that is cited to show that Congress has no right to pass this bill to control, regulate, or require the Union and Central Pacific Railroad and Telegraph Companies to operate their lines in accordance with the express letter, terms, and provisions of the acts and statutes creating them and granting them the public franchises and subsidies and providing how these railroad and telegraph lines should be operated. This is the decision cited and harped upon pertly and flippantly to show that vested rights will be interfered with by the passage of this bill. This is the opinion referred to in the minority report to show that the Western Union Telegraph Company have acquired vested rights under contracts which are shown to be absolutely void ab initio, because in express violation of the terms of the said acts and statutes and because in violation of public law and against public policy.

Mr. DOCKERY. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. HOGG].

Mr. HOGG. Mr. Speaker, there was a time in the history of our country when corporations had no recognition in the courts of the United States. That continued for a period of more than fifty years; but by reason of their influence and power the decision of the court of last resort was changed, and they were recognized as citizens having a standing in the courts of the Union. Since that day their influence has been widening and extending until they threaten the country with a power that is to be dreaded. To-day no question is made as to the right of a corporation to stand even as a citizen and against a citizen in the highest court of the Republic.

Since we have extended to corporations this consideration it becomes necessary for us to look after and control these corporations, for it was the sense of the purest and best men upon the Supreme bench that these bodies were calculated to exert a dangerous influence in the country. Here is a bill having for its object the honest and legitimate control of the influence and power of corporations. This bill originated in a sense of justice to the people of this country, and all it asks is to refer to a tribunal which was the result of the deliberations and the sense of justice of the Forty-ninth Congress questions whose solution affects the interests and prosperity of our people.

Here is simply a proposed law giving to the Interstate Commerce Commission the right to control the influence of telegraph lines, which have become as important to the people as railroad lines. There is upon the records of the Interstate Commerce Commission to-day a decision unanimously expressed that that tribunal under existing law has no right to take control of telegraph lines. These telegraph lines aree ssential incidents to railroad lines; and if it has become necessary to control the railroad lines, it also becomes important to control their essential incidents. If you institute a tribunal for the purpose of regulating the business of the railroad lines, it is equally important and necessary that the incidents and essential qualities of these railroad lines should be controlled. As this bill looks to that end I am heartily in favor of its passage.

[Here the hammer fell.]

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HATCH in the chair). If there be no objection the Chair will lay before the House personal requests of members.

There was no objection; and, by unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted in the following cases:

To Mr. LYNCH, for one week, on account of important business.

To Mr. MCSHANE, for ten days, on account of important business.

To Mr. COWLES, from last Monday indefinitely, on account of sickness.

To Mr. LEHLBACH, for five days, on account of important business.

To Mr. DELANO, for ten days, on account of important business.

MILITARY AND POSTAL TELEGRAPH.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The House resumes the consideration of the telegraph bill, and the gentleman from Missouri is entitled to the floor.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, it is not my purpose, in view of the protracted debate already had upon the pending bill, to trench upon the time of the House to any great length at this hour. I will endeavor to briefly summarize the facts and the law as they relate to this bill. What are the facts connected with the management of these Pacific railroads which have caused the introduction and report of the bill at the present time? The Pacific railroads, in the opinion of the majority of the Post-Office Committee, were not only required to construct a railroad line, but also to construct and operate a telegraph line.

The acts of July 1, 1862, and July 2, 1864, clearly required these roads to maintain and operate a telegraph line, but instead of complying with this requirement they have undertaken to divest themselves of that obligation by contracting with the Western Union Telegraph Company.

Upon this proposition the issue is joined: Were these Pacific railroad companies required to operate a telegraph line, or had they any lawful authority to make a contract with the Western Union Telegraph Company to divest themselves of this obligation? I assume as a legal proposition, from an investigation of the question, in the light of the opinions of Mr. Justice Miller and Judge Dillon, as well as of others, that these railroad and telegraph companies can not lawfully transfer either the railroad or telegraph franchise unless by express authority of the power that brought them into being. From this view of the case I apprehend there is no dissent.

Now, the next question which arises is has Congress by any act authorized the Pacific railroads to divest themselves of the exercise of their telegraphic franchise?

But, sir, before discussing that point I wish to note the features of this contract to which we specially except and of which we, as the representatives of the people, have the right to complain. The original incorporation acts of 1862 and 1864 provided that the Government, the people, and connecting telegraph lines should have equal facilities as to rates, time, and transportation. Now, in this connection, and as pertinent to this legislation, let us inquire whether the Pacific railroads have entered into any contracts by which they have virtually annulled or abrogated that provision of their charters?

So far as I am personally concerned, I will say frankly that if the Western Union Company had carried out in good faith the provisions of the railroad incorporation acts as to non-discrimination, I should not feel so much disposed to press this legislation. But the question arises here, is the Western Union Telegraph Company, as the successor of the Pacific railroads under these contracts, performing the duty required under the incorporation acts of those railroad companies by affording to the Government, the people, and connecting telegraph lines equal facilities as to rates, time, and transportation?

Let us ascertain. Section 3 of the contract between the Western Union and the Union Pacific Railroad Company provides that—

> The railway company, so far as it legally may, hereby grants and agrees to assure to the telegraph company the exclusive right of way on, along, upon, and under the line, lands, and bridges of the railway company and any extensions and branches thereof, for the construction, maintenance, operation, and use of lines of poles and wires, or either of them, or underground or other system of communication for commercial or public uses or business, with the right to put up from time to time or cause to be put up or constructed under the provisions of this agreement, such additional wires on its own or the railway company's poles or such additional lines of poles and wires or either, as well on its bridges as on its right of way, or to construct such underground lines as the telegraph company may deem expedient, doing as little damage and causing as little inconvenience to the railway company as is practicable; and the railway company will not transport men or material for the construction or operation of a line of poles and wire or wires or underground or other system of communication in competition with the lines of the telegraph company party hereto, except at and for the railway company's regular local rates, nor will it furnish for any competing line any facilities or assistance that it may lawfully withhold, nor stop its trains, nor distribute material therefor at other than regular stations.

The same section further provides that—

> No employé of the railway company shall, while in its service, be employed by or have any connection with any other telegraph company than the telegraph company party hereto, and the telegraph company shall have the exclusive right to the occupancy of and connection with the railway company's depots or station-houses for commercial or public telegraph purposes as against any other telegraph company.

It will be seen that these provisions give an exclusive right of way for wires, telegraph poles, and other necessary appliances, and to the exclusion of all other telegraph lines from occupation of their depot privileges. The policy declared by Congress in the acts of 1862 and 1864 is thus nullified by this contract with the Western Union Company.

IS THE CONTRACT LAWFUL?

Mr. Speaker, let us look at this question from another standpoint. Is this a lawful contract? If the railroad companies could not transfer their franchises except in pursuance of express authority of law, let us examine the law and see whether or not under it any authority is to be found or any right is given by which they could transfer their franchises for telegraph purposes to the Western Union Company. Section 19 of the act of July 1, 1862, is the statute upon which the gentleman from New York [Mr. WHITE] relies, and I call the attention of the House to it here, because it is the statute upon which the whole question rests. Upon this section the gentleman from New York relied as he stated a few evenings since in a debate upon this question, as is shown by his reply to an inquiry addressed to him by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS]. I quote from the debate:

> Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. I stated, Mr. Speaker, that on investigation I was constrained to dissent from the facts as presented by the gentleman from New York [Mr. WHITE]. If I understood his argument the other day, he claims that, as a matter of fact, under what is known as the Idaho act, certain portions of these land-grant railroads at least took advantage of that act and instead of constructing a line of telegraph along their roads, as required by the statutes of 1862 and 1864, made contracts with telegraph lines by which these lines were conveyed to the right of way of the railroad companies, and that thereby they had complied with all the requirements of the General Government, and then had power to enter into the contract which the Western Union Telegraph Company claims as the contract of 1881. If I am not correct in stating the position of the gentlemen, I ask him to set me right.

Mr. WHITE, of New York. I did not intend to be so understood. I will state the legal proposition in a word or two, if the gentleman desires.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. I ask the gentleman to state the facts.

Mr. WHITE, of New York. Then I will state the facts. I have not claimed that there was any attempt made at the time to take advantage of the nineteenth section of the act of July 1, 1862, on the part of either the railroad company or the telegraph companies.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. What do you claim, then?

Mr. WHITE, of New York. I will state what I claim. I stated that the right was granted by the acts of July 1, 1862, and of July 2, 1864, to these railroad companies to enter into an arrangement with the telegraph companies that the telegraph companies should be operated or constructed over their right of way, and that those laws are unrepealed to-day, and it was so held by Judge Miller when he continued the injunction at Topeka, Kans.

In other words, he held that section 19 of the act provides a continuing authority for the "arrangement" referred to, and that under it the railroad companies had a right to make these contracts. The committee hold that the authority granted by the section expired by its own terms upon the construction of the road. I do not profess to be versed in legal lore, but I do believe that any intelligent man who will read the section without bias or prejudice must reach the conclusion that this was a construction act and its authority terminated upon the completion of the road.

But here, Mr. Speaker, is the whole gist of the controversy, and I may be pardoned for calling the especial attention of the House to it.

Section 19 of the act of July 1, 1862, provides—

That the several railroad companies herein named are authorized to enter into an arrangement with the Pacific Telegraph Company, the Overland Telegraph Company, and the California State Telegraph Company, so that the present line of telegraph between the Missouri River and San Francisco—

That was the line constructed under the act of June 16, 1860, as the House will remember—the overland telegraph line, to which Congress granted an annual subsidy of $40,000 a year for ten years—may be moved upon or along the line of said railroad and branches as fast as said roads and branches are built.

When was the "arrangement" authorized? Why, clearly, prior to the completion of the road, because the "arrangement" was essential and preliminary, so that the lines could be "moved upon or along the line of said railroad and branches as fast as said road and branches are built." This fixes the time for the "arrangement" beyond the shadow of controversy. It was a construction act unquestionably; but if there still be doubt as to the time when that "arrangement" was authorized, let us read the second proviso:

And if said arrangement be entered into, and the transfer of said telegraph line be made in accordance therewith to the line of said railroad and branches, such transfer shall, for all purposes of this act, be held and considered a fulfillment on the part of said railroad companies of the provisions of this act in regard to the construction of said line of telegraph. And in case of disagreement said telegraph companies are authorized to remove their line of telegraph along and upon the line of railroad herein contemplated without prejudice to the rights of said railroad companies named herein.

Now, what are the facts? They failed to make any "arrangement," and the Western Union Company now make no such claim. Having failed, therefore, to make the arrangement under the first proviso of the act authorizing them to remove their line to the right of way of the railroads, they moved their line of telegraph under the second proviso.

These are the facts uncontroverted by the gentleman from New York; and the law which I have read, it seems to me, can not be given any other construction than the one I have presented.

There is another view presented by this section that has an important bearing upon the question. This "arrangement," if they had made one—which they did not—stood in lieu of what? Why, in lieu simply of the construction of the line of telegraph required by the act. There is not a clause in the nineteenth section of the act of July 1, 1862, authorizing the Overland Telegraph Company or its successors to operate the line. The removal of the line, as heretofore stated, only stood in lieu of the one the railroad company was required to construct. Certain public-spirited citizens applied to Congress in 1860 to secure a charter to build a telegraph line from the Missouri River to San Francisco, on the Pacific coast; and Congress, desiring to unite the people more closely, granted the charter and a subsidy of $40,000 a year for ten years, and also gave them 160 acres of land for each 15 miles for depot purposes.

When, therefore, the Pacific railroad incorporating acts were being discussed the owners of this telegraph line came to Congress and said, "You are authorizing the construction of another telegraph line, which will seriously impair the value of the capital we have invested in the existing line." And so, at the request of the overland telegraph lines, this provision was adopted, authorizing them to enter into the "arrangement" before the road was completed, and of which they never availed themselves.

VESTED RIGHTS.

I desire to again call the attention of the House to this contract, because on it the gentleman from New York [Mr. WHITE] erects a superstructure of vested rights. What is the contract? It is an agreement under the section I have quoted and a violation of it. To show that the Western Union Telegraph Company itself so understood it, let us examine its phraseology. What does it say? Does it speak as though the contracting parties had no doubt as to their powers under the law, or does it express any doubt? The terms of the contract indicate its illegality. It says "the railroad company, so far as it legally may," and throughout the contract appears that doubt; and it was a substantial doubt, because the agreement was entered into after the Union Pacific Railroad Company had taken the counsel of Judge Dillon, their attorney, who advised them that they had no right to make such contract—that the railroad company could not transfer its telegraph franchise. Moreover, Judge Dillon himself drew the contract after having rendered the opinion that the railroad company had no right to make it.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I think the proposition is clear that under this section—and the whole case rests here—there has been no authority, at any moment from the time that the telegraph company failed to avail itself of the privileges of this section and subsequent to the construction of the road, to enter into such a contract between the Pacific roads and the Western Union Telegraph Company.

Again, Mr. Speaker, if there is any shadow of doubt in the mind of any gentleman on this floor after the reading of section 19—and I think there ought not to be any vestige of doubt left—the benefit of that doubt should be given to the people of the United States, whose representatives we are. The acts of July, 1862 and 1864, were passed amid the perils of civil war, when the nation was engaged in a contest for its supremacy and perpetuity, and yet, every stipulation is carefully guarded, so that the rights of the people are reserved—the right to alter, amend, and repeal—and each of these incorporating acts declares against the policy of discrimination.

WATERED STOCK.

As the representatives of the people, front to front and face to face with this great corporation, it becomes our duty if we have any doubt to give the benefit of that doubt to the people. In 1866 the Western Union Telegraph Company had 37,000 miles of telegraph. This great public benefactor (?) for whom my distinguished and learned friend from New York to-day has spoken so eloquently—had in that year only 37,000 miles of telegraph lines. To-day how many miles of the entire system in the United States do they control? There are now 170,000 miles of telegraph lines in the United States; and of these, in round numbers, the Western Union Telegraph Company controls 160,000 miles; and, according to the statement of Mr. Spofford, in the American Almanac just issued, that company had a net profit on every message sent of 9 cents, in round numbers.

The capital of the Western Union Telegraph Company amounts to $86,200,000, and if that Company had its basis of capitalization upon the actual money invested, thus revealing their enormous profits, the people of this country would instantly demand such legislation as would put them within the pale of wholesome and equitable regulations. I am not sufficiently advised to be able to state just how much "water" there is in this $86,200,000 capital, but I had indulged the hope that my friend from New York would give us the information inasmuch as he presented all the Western Union rates, and is doubtless familiar with the whole question by reason of his large business experience.

I can, however, give the amount of "water" involved in the construction of the line from Brownville, Nebr., to Salt Lake, Utah. That is a line of 1,100 miles, and the cost of its construction was $147,000. What value does it represent to-day? It was transferred to the Western Union for $2,000,000 of their stock, and then the Western Union Telegraph Company, with that facility and ingenuity never equaled by any other corporation in this country, coolly trebled that amount and issued stock equivalent to $6,000,000; so that the original $147,000 invested in that line stands to-day as the basis for the issue of $6,000,000 of stock of the Western Union Telegraph Company.

Mr. WEAVER. Is that a "vested right?"

Mr. DOCKERY. That, I suppose, is a fair sample of a Western Union "vested right." A friend advises me that, according to the North American Review, the actual cost of the Western Union lines was nineteen millions, and that the company is now capitalized at ninety-five millions; but according to Mr. Spofford's Almanac the present capital of the Western Union Company is $86,200,000. However that may be, the facts which I have submitted, and which I challenge the gentleman from New York [Mr. WHITE] or anybody else to controvert—because it is sworn testimony—show that a very large percentage—how much I do not know—of the capital of the Western Union Company is "watered stock."

Mr. Speaker, I do not share in any unreasoning prejudice, if I may call it so, which possibly may now and then manifest itself against corporations; but, sir, the people have rights in this Government which corporations should and must respect, and the greatest danger to corporations to-day lies in their disposition to overleap the boundaries and confines of statute laws and set at defiance the will of the people. "Vaulting ambition" sometimes "o'erleaps itself," and Mr. Jay Gould had better take cognizance of that fact. The people have rights, and if oppressed and trodden upon they may go to an unwarranted extreme.

Mr. WEAVER. Oh, I do not know. They will stand almost anything.

Mr. DOCKERY. Well, I know that the people are very patient, but when aroused they are liable to turn upon their oppressors. There is, however, one bright feature in connection with the consideration of this bill, which has impressed me since it was first reported, and that is that the representatives of the people, without distinction of party, have in the conduct of this debate manifested a disposition to put the bit and bridle of salutary regulation upon the further encroachments of the Western Union Telegraph Company.

Mr. Speaker, this bill simply proposes that where, by the acts of incorporation, railroad companies were required to maintain and operate telegraph lines they shall so maintain and operate them. Therefore, if any railroad company is not required by its original charter to maintain and operate a telegraph line, it will not be disturbed by this measure. I imagine, however, that some of them will be affected from the opposition manifested here and elsewhere.

Mr. Speaker, as stated on a former occasion, this measure is just and equitable alike to the Western Union Telegraph Company, to the railroads, to the Government, to the people, and to connecting telegraph lines. It simply requires the railroads to execute in good faith the provisions of their charters. It deprives the Western Union Company of no right to which it is lawfully entitled. That company is not required to take down a pole or a wire along the line of the road. The bill gives to the Government, to the people, and to connecting telegraph lines equal rights and privileges along this line of telegraph, stretching as it does from the heart of the Mississippi Valley to the Pacific Ocean, and Mr. Speaker, allow me again to suggest that if Mr. Jay Gould and the other managers of the Western Union Telegraph Company are wise they will make no further attempt to evade the present statute, but will bow in graceful deference to the will of the people.

Competition is essential to the highest and best interests of the whole people, and if necessary, Mr. Speaker, and I believe it is necessary, the power of the Government itself must be exercised to secure that perfect equality without discrimination which is the very basis upon which rests the whole fabric of our institutions. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, allow me to reiterate the statement of a few days since, that this is but the initiative measure of reform which, speaking to Mr. Jay Gould and the Western Union Company, says in no uncertain tones, "Thus far thou shalt go and no farther." [Applause.]

Sir, monopoly is a plant of foreign growth. It is un-American, unrepublican, undemocratic, and should not be allowed to take root in American soil. Our fathers founded this Government as the result of the exactions and oppressions of favored classes which drove them from the Old World. Here in the wild, free wilderness of the New World they laid the foundation for a new government, and upon that foundation they erected a superstructure dedicated to freedom and the equal rights of men.

The measure is in genuine accord with the policy adopted and announced by our fathers. It is a bill in which I take especial pleasure, because it lifts us out of the ruts of narrow partisanship and brings us together as Representatives upon a broad national platform, obedient to the wishes of the whole people without distinction of party. [Applause.] I thank the members of the House for the attention they have given me. The hour for general debate has not quite expired, but I will have compassion and stop right here.

Several MEMBERS. Go on! Go on!

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, the committee desire to perfect the bill, which they have a right to do under the rules, and then the gentleman from New York [Mr. WHITE] has a substitute which he proposes to offer. And, Mr. Speaker, having time remaining, I will add a remark for the purpose of calling attention to the substitute which is proposed by my friend from New York, whom I esteem most profoundly, and whose courage and genius are, in my humble opinion, worthy of a better cause.

THE SUBSTITUTE.

The substitute, if my friend will permit the remark, gives away his whole case. He has kindly furnished me with a copy of it in advance, and I find that it virtually admits everything that has been charged. The only difference in its effect from our bill is—what? Instead of requiring the Government, as the pending bill does, to see that perfect equality is maintained, the substitute turns the matter over to the tender mercy of some aggrieved individual—just as though an individual could compete with this corporation with its millions of capital. Why, sir, the Baltimore and Ohio Telegraph Company, a powerful corporation, went down only a few months ago beneath the prowess, the cunning, and the tact of Mr. Jay Gould; and does the gentleman from New York expect that the people will get any relief under his substitute, which gives them merely the right to go into the courts and attempt there to throttle this great corporation? No, sir, the gentleman has wholly misapprehended the temper of the House. The bill we offer is designed to give relief—how? By the power of 60,000,000 of people sustaining the courts of the country. Why? Because in the acts incorporating these companies we required the policy of non-discrimination, and it is our duty to the humblest citizen to see that the law which was placed on the statute-book is enforced. We do not intend to stand cowering and helpless before this telegraph monopoly which has reared its head in this country, or allow its policy of oppression to continue by going through the form of giving the remedy simply to an individual. It is true the substitute does provide that—

Nothing herein contained shall be construed as preventing the Attorney-General from proceeding by quo warranto, etc.

But is that a very cordial invitation to the Attorney-General?

Mr. WHITE, of New York. If it will satisfy the gentleman, I will put in a provision requesting the Attorney-General to do it.

Mr. DOCKERY. No, my friend. We demand a positive requirement. Behind that flag, representing the sovereignty of this nation, there rests a power strong enough to throttle any monopoly, even though it be the monopoly of Jay Gould and the Western Union Telegraph Company. [Applause.] This power represents the whole people, and will be invoked to secure perfect equality—ay, sir, even to the humblest negro at Omaha who may desire to send a dispatch to San Francisco. That is our idea of government. [Applause.]

Now, a word more as to the necessity of a measure of this kind. I have before me a local item from the Kansas City Times of February 28. By this article it appears that the only existing line of competing telegraph is in danger of absorption by the Western Union Telegraph Company. It seems that one after another of these lines of competing telegraph have gone down beneath the extraordinary craft and money of Jay Gould. I have not time to read the article, but it is to be found in the local columns of the paper to which I have referred, and indicates the pressing necessity for this and other remedial legislation.

One word in conclusion. I desire to appeal to no prejudice in the discussion of this question; but, sir, I am in earnest about this proposition, for I believe that no one man, although he wield the power of $300,000,000, should dominate the business interests of the country, and in any department of effort sway the scepter of universal monopoly. I desire to secure the passage of a bill which shall be just to these corporations, and just also to the people from whom they receive their power—just and equitable alike to all interests. Let us supplement this measure with such a bill, and thus say to Mr. Gould, "If you do business in this country, you must do it upon business principles, recognizing the rights of competitors to exist; and even though your hundreds of millions of capital be invoked in behalf of monopoly, you shall not succeed, because the people are unwilling to foster monopolies." [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, my friend from New York [Mr. WHITE] has a substitute which he desires to offer; but before that is done the committee desire to perfect the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HATCH). Amendments are now in order.

Mr. DOCKERY. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PETERS] will offer three additional amendments on behalf of the committee.

Mr. PETERS. I move to amend, in line 9 of section 4, by striking out the words "enforce and." These words are surplusage and make a seeming inconsistency in the language. They were inserted, I presume, through oversight.

There being no objection, the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PETERS. In lines 25 and 26 of section 6 there is a typographical error which I desire to correct. I move to strike out in those lines the words "Commissioner of Railroads" and insert "said commission." This amendment makes the language correspond with the rest of the bill.

There being no objection, the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PETERS. The next amendment is to add to section 7, the last section of the bill, the clause which I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Or any authority that the Postmaster-General now has under Title LXV of the Revised Statutes to fix rates, or of the Government to purchase lines as provided under said title, or to have its messages given precedence in transmission.

Mr. PETERS. I will state that in Title LXV of the Revised Statutes the Postmaster-General has the right to fix the rate upon the telegraph companies which accept the provisions of that tariff. In order there may be no dispute whether it is accepted or not, this addition is made to section 7.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DOCKERY. I ask, by unanimous consent, that all of the amendments reported by the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads to the bill be agreed to in gross.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. WHITE, of New York. I have not yet completed my substitute for the bill and amendments.

Mr. DOCKERY. I will demand the previous question on the engrossment and third reading of the bill, with the understanding that the substitute of the gentleman from New York shall be considered as pending.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. WHITE, of New York. I now submit my substitute for the bill and amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

A substitute for House bill 1426.

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

"The circuit court of the United States within and for any district in which is situated any portion of any railroad or telegraph line belonging to or operated by a railroad or telegraph company which has received any subsidy of land or bonds from the United States under the provisions of the act of Congress approved July 1, 1862, entitled 'An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes,' and the acts amendatory thereof, shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine all cases of mandamus to compel said railroad or telegraph company to operate its road or telegraph line as required by law; and further, to hear and determine all informations and proceedings in quo warranto which may be brought for the alleged mis-user or non-user of any of the franchises of said railroad or telegraph lines; and any person alleging himself to be aggrieved by the action of said railroad or telegraph company shall have the right to file the relation for such writ of mandamus or the information for such writ of quo warranto: Provided, however, That this act shall not be construed as preventing the Attorney-General of the United States from proceeding, upon his own motion, by mandamus or quo warranto, against any of said railroad or telegraph companies whenever in his opinion the public interests will be subserved thereby. And he is hereby directed to examine forthwith all contracts between the Western Union Telegraph Company and the respective railroad and telegraph companies organized and operating under the provisions of the said act of July 1, 1862, and all amendments thereto; and if he believes them to be illegal, he is directed to bring suit for their cancellation and annulment."

Mr. WHITE, of New York. I do not intend to consume any time on the substitute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The previous question has been ordered and debate is closed.

Mr. WHITE, of New York. I wish to make a single remark.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I hope the gentleman will have consent.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. How long does the gentleman want?

Mr. SMITH, of Wisconsin. I object.

The substitute was not agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. DOCKERY. I demand the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. DOCKERY demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 197, nays 4, not voting 123, as follows:

Mr. MCADOO. I was in the Hall when the roll-call began, but was not present when my name was called, having been called out for a moment. I wish to state that if I had been present I would have voted in the affirmative.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will be recorded in the RECORD, not on the roll.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. DOCKERY moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. DOCKERY. I move that the House do now adjourn.

THOMAS J. TAYLOR.

Mr. HOVEY. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Private Calendar the bill (H. R. 2161) for the relief of Thomas J. Taylor and put it upon its passage.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill will be read, subject to objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay Thomas I. Taylor, out of moneys not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $2,000, as compensation for services rendered by said Thomas I. Taylor as a scout during the late war of the rebellion, all of said services having been rendered under written instructions of the commanders of the Federal Army commanding the Department of the Tennessee.

Mr. RANDALL. Let the report be read.

The report (by Mr. O'NEALL, of Indiana) was read, as follows:

The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2161) for the relief of Thomas J. Taylor, have had the same under consideration, and recommend that the same be amended so as to allow the said Taylor the sum of $861; and, when so amended, they recommend its passage.

This claim is for military services rendered by Thomas J. Taylor as a scout in the Army of the Union in the late war of the rebellion.

The proof accompanying the bill establishes the justice thereof beyond all reasonable doubt, and is as follows, to wit:

1. The affidavit of Thomas J. Taylor, the claimant.

2. The affidavit of Acting General M. M. Bane, under whom a part of the services were rendered.

3. The affidavit of Maj. Charles C. Davis and of General John C. Starkweather, all officers of the United States, under whom said Taylor rendered the services for the payment of which said bill is introduced, all clearly and fully establishing said services.

4. Various passes given said Taylor by said officers during the time said services were being rendered, which were of a very arduous and dangerous character.

The committee also recommend that the bill be amended by striking out the initial "I." in the name of claimant and inserting "J.;" so that it will read "Thomas J. Taylor." Also amend the title to conform.

There being no objection, the bill was considered, the amendments agreed to, and the bill as amended ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HOVEY moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

REMOVAL OF CHARGES OF DESERTION.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up House bill No. 6106, reported by the Military Committee, in relation to desertions; and ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union from its further consideration and put it upon its passage now. I believe the House is unanimously in favor of the bill, and therefore I have no hesitancy in making this request.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill will be read, subject to objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to amend the military record of any soldier who served during the late civil war in the volunteer service, upon proper application, where the rolls and records of the Adjutant-General's Office show the charge of desertion against him, when such rolls and records, or other satisfactory evidence, show the facts set out in any of the following cases:

First. That said soldier served faithfully the full term of his enlistment and left his command believing that his service was completed and that he was entitled to his discharge.

Second. That said soldier, having served for six months or more, and until the 1st day of May, A. D. 1865, left his command believing that he was entitled to discharge because of the close of the war.

Third. That such soldier left his command, or a hospital, with or without leave, and was prevented from returning before the muster-out of his command, by reason of a wound, injury, or disease incurred in the service and line of duty.

Fourth. That said soldier, after said charge of desertion was entered on the rolls, voluntarily returned to his command, within a reasonable time or as soon as physically able, and served faithfully until discharged.

Fifth. That said soldier left his command with proper authority, and not being able to return because of sickness, and having no knowledge of any charge of desertion against him, was arrested and returned to his command by a provost-marshal, and was restored to duty by his officers, without trial or punishment, and served faithfully until discharged.

Sixth. That said soldier having left or been separated from his command by no fault of his own, and after the 1st day of May, 1865, was unable to rejoin the same by reason of its muster out of the service.

Seventh. That said soldier having left or been separated from his command by no fault of his own, and being unable to join the same by reason of circumstances beyond his control, and without receiving or intending to receive any pay, bounty, or reward not incident to his proper service, joined another command and continued faithfully to perform military duty the full term of his enlistment.

Eighth. That said soldier served faithfully with his command for six months or more, and until the same was mustered out of service; and not being either mustered out or notified of his assignment to another command, remained at his home up to the close of the war without arrest or molestation.

Ninth. And in all cases where there was no real purpose of desertion; or to evade military duty or danger; or to receive additional pay, reward, or bounty; or where the charge is shown to be incorrect in fact.

Tenth. But this act shall not be applied to relieve from the charge of desertion any soldier who left his command from disaffection or disloyalty to the Government, or to evade the dangers and hardships of the service when in the presence of the enemy, or to re-enlist for the sake of bounty or increased pay, or who was under sentence or in arrest for breach of military law, or who was in fact a willful deserter.

SEC. 2. That when the charge of desertion is removed under the provisions of this act the soldier shall be restored to a status of honorable service, his military record shall be corrected as the facts require, and an honorable discharge shall be issued, and he shall be restored to all his rights as to pension, pay, and bounty as if the charge of desertion had never been made; and in case of the death of said soldier his widow or other legal heir shall be entitled to the same rights as in case of other deceased honorably discharged soldiers: Provided, That this act shall not be construed to give to any soldier, or his legal representatives or heir, any pay, bounty, or allowance for any period of time he was absent without leave and not in the performance of military duty.

SEC. 3. That all acts and parts of acts in conflict with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

Mr. BOOTHMAN. I wish to offer an amendment to this bill.

Mr. WADE. I desire to offer an amendment, to insert after the word "volunteer," in the fifth line, the words "or regular Army."

Mr. STEELE. I hope this bill will not be amended to apply to the regular Army. They enlisted for a fixed period and this is not intended for that class of soldiers. I hope it will be withdrawn or voted down.

Mr. WADE. I wish to explain my amendment, if in order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has the floor for that purpose.

Mr. WADE. Mr. Speaker, gentlemen present who have served in the volunteer service recollect that propositions were often made to the volunteers to enter the regular service. There were recruiting officers who came to our regiments and got men to enlist in the cavalry service of the regular Army. They were discharged by order of the War Department or went into the regular service and served just as the men did to whom this bill refers, and went home at the expiration of the war or under circumstances similar to those enumerated in the bill for which it is sought to relieve these men in the volunteer service.

They were never molested and have never been arrested as deserters, yet they stand on the rolls as deserters, and I want to correct their record as much as gentlemen desire to correct the record of those who were volunteers and staid in the service to the end of their term of enlistment.

The question being taken on Mr. WADE'S amendment, there were—ayes 83, noes 44.

So (further count not being called for) the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BOOTHMAN. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the words "volunteer service," in line 5, insert the words "or in the war with Mexico."

Mr. RANDALL. I have no objection to that amendment.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I object to it. I do not care to take any part in the discussion about those who were deserters in the late war. Let the House deal with that matter as it deems best. But I am not willing that the House should set a precedent for any other war.

The question being taken on agreement to Mr. BOOTHMAN'S amendment, there were—ayes 97, noes 17.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I make the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair appoints as tellers the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL].

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I withdraw the point of no quorum.

Mr. RANDALL. I demand the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. STEELE. There is an amendment reported by the committee.

The Clerk read the amendment proposed by the committee, as follows:

In line 53, strike out "Tenth. But" and insert "Provided, That."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. RANDALL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. STEELE. I ask to have the title made to conform with the amendments.

Mr. RANDALL. It should read: "A bill for the relief of certain volunteer and regular soldiers of the late war and the Mexican war."

The title was amended as suggested.

Mr. STEELE. I hope the bill will be printed, that gentlemen may have copies to send home.

Mr. RANDALL. Let the bill be printed as passed.

There was no objection.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BLAND. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question being taken, the Speaker pro tempore stated that the "noes" seemed to have it.

Mr. BLAND. I call for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 49, noes 75.

So the House refused to adjourn.

Mr. BLAND. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is the unfinished business on the House Calendar.

The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 1733) to provide for the issue of circulating notes to national banking associations.

[Laughter.]

Mr. MCMILLIN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WILKINS] who has charge of this bill is not present. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question being taken, the Speaker pro tempore stated that the "ayes" seemed to have it.

Mr. SOWDEN. I call for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 64, noes 53.

So the motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 46 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Monday.

PRIVATE BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS INTRODUCED AND REFERRED.

SENATE.

MONDAY, March 5, 1888.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of Thursday last was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, in response to a resolution of February 16, 1888, relating to smuggling in the Free Zone of Mexico; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, in response to a resolution of March 1, 1888, calling for reports of special agents in regard to the evasion of duties on sugar in the port of New York; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Finance, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitted in response to a resolution of February 9, 1888, calling for information as to whether the military cemetery at Mound City, Kans., is under the charge of the War Department, and whether adequate means have been taken for its care and preservation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. As this communication is in response to a resolution submitted by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB], it will lie on the table until he comes in. It will be printed.

Mr. PLUMB subsequently said: My attention has been called to a supplementary report of the Secretary of War on a resolution offered by myself and passed by the Senate, asking information in regard to the military cemetery at Mound City, Kans. The report is more satisfactory than the former one, although it is still defective. I ask that the report be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and I will state that the Secretary of War says that the Government has no title to the ground in Mound City in which soldiers are buried. That is a mistake. The deed was made out about the time when the first soldiers were buried in that plot of ground, and the United States have the fee. That is immaterial, however; the report of the Quartermaster-General transmitted by the Secretary of War covers the remaining part of the resolution, and is satisfactory.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The communication will be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, in response to a resolution of February 20, 1888, calling for information concerning the utility of a breakwater at the mouth of the Housatonic River, Connecticut; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, in response to a resolution of February 16, 1888, calling for information as to the amount of money that could be profitably expended in continuing improvements of the Ohio River between Davis Island Dam and a point near Raccoon Creek, Pennsylvania; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a letter from the Postmaster-General, in response to a resolution of February 24, 1888, asking for information under and by virtue of what provisions of law publications franked and deposited in the mail by a United States Senator are returned with the information that they have been held for postage.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The communication will lie on the table until the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER] comes in. It will be printed.

CREDENTIALS.

Mr. BLACKBURN presented the credentials of JAMES B. BECK, chosen by the Legislature of Kentucky a Senator from that State for the term beginning March 4, 1889; which were read, and ordered to be filed.

DEATH OF REPRESENTATIVE MOFFATT.

Mr. PALMER. I wish to give notice at this time that I shall call up the resolutions of the House of Representatives in reference to the death of Hon. Seth C. Moffatt, late a Representative from the Eleventh district of Michigan, on Thursday, the 15th instant, at 4 o'clock, for the purpose of making a few remarks thereon.

Mr. DANIEL. I present the petition of F. Johnston and other citizens of Virginia, praying that an appropriation of $10,000 be made to erect a monument to General Andrew Lewis at or near Salem, Va. I ask unanimous consent that the petition may be printed at length in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The petition will be referred to the Committee on the Library. The Senator from Virginia asks that it be printed in the RECORD. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The petition is as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States:

The undersigned respectfully ask that an appropriation of $10,000 be made for the erection of a monument to General Andrew Lewis at or near Salem, Va.

General Andrew Lewis, the hero of Point Pleasant, was one of the five sons of John Lewis, who emigrated from the north of Ireland and settled in the county of Augusta in the year ——.

All of the sons were noted for their skill and bravery in defending the infant settlements against the Indians, but Andrew became the most distinguished of them all.

General Washington, in whose regiment he had once been a major, had formed so high an opinion of his bravery and military skill that at the commencement of the Revolutionary war he was induced to recommend him as one of the major-generals of the American Army—a recommendation that was slighted to make room for General Stevens. It is also said that when Washington was commissioned as commander-in-chief he expressed a wish that the appointment had been given to Lewis.

In June, 1774, when hostilities had broken out on the western frontier of Virginia, Andrew Lewis was made a brigadier-general. In September of that year he set out for Camp Union, near Lewisburgh, in Greenbrier County, with eleven hundred men on his march to Point Pleasant, where it was understood that the most formidable army and confederacy of Indians ever assembled in Virginia was gathering in large numbers. This army was composed of the flower of the confederate tribes of Delawares, Mingoes, Cayugas, Iowas, Wyandottes, and Shawnees, and was under the leadership of Cornstalk, the most renowned Indian warrior of his day.

On the 10th day of October, 1774, the battle of Point Pleasant was fought and won by General Lewis and the troops under his command, led by Colonels Shelby, Campbell, Field, Fleming, and Christian. The conflict was bloody and the victory one of the most glorious on record, being so decisive that it freed the soil of Virginia forever after from the foot of a hostile Indian; in fact, it was one of the initiatory steps that led to our independence.

General Lewis commanded the Virginia troops when Lord Dunmore was driven from Gwynn's Island in 1776, and announced his orders for attacking the enemy by putting a match to the first gun. He resigned his command in 1780 to return home, being seized with a violent fever, and died on his way, in Bedford County, about 25 miles from his home on the Roanoke, in Botetourt County (now Roanoke), where he was buried, and where his remains now lie. The exact spot has been identified within the last few years, and large stones at the head and foot of his grave have been marked with the initials of his name.

It is now proposed to remove his remains a few hundred yards from their present resting place to the beautiful cemetery east of the town of Salem, commanding a splendid view of the town and of the lovely valley of the Roanoke, extending for miles up the river; and to erect a handsome granite monument of a size and character to correspond with his own noble and manly form, which was so remarkable that on one occasion the governor of New York said "the earth seemed to tremble under him as he walked along."

The State of Virginia has so far recognized the value of General Lewis's public services as to make his one of the striking figures around the equestrian statue of Washington near the capitol in Richmond; but as his services were of a national character, and the whole country is now enjoying the benefit of them, it is thought eminently proper that the Congress of the United States should be asked to make an appropriation to erect a suitable monument to his memory on or near the spot where his remains lie buried.

To this end the undersigned, citizens of Roanoke County, respectfully present this our petition to the Congress of the United States, through Hon. JOHN W. DANIEL, United States Senator from the State of Virginia, for an appropriation not exceeding $10,000 for the foregoing object.

R. H. LOGAN,
WM. McCAULEY,
W. W. BERKELEY,
R. W. PAGE,
L. R. HOLLAND,
WM. W. BALLARD.

Mr. DANIEL presented the petition of John Reilly and 566 other citizens of the District of Columbia, praying for prohibition in the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also presented the petition of John A. Read and others, citizens of Accomack County, Virginia, and the petition of John B. Wheatton and others, citizens of Accomack County, Virginia, praying for an increase in the pay of the Life-Saving Service; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented the petition of Mrs. Sophia B. Linn, executrix of Henry Williamson, late of Jacksonville, Fla., praying to be reimbursed for losses suffered by Henry Williamson in consequence of his farm being occupied by the Federal troops as an encampment during the late war; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. REAGAN presented a petition of J. P. Hamilton and 27 other citizens of Marion, Ala., praying for the passage of House bill 4910, in relation to postage; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. VOORHEES presented a petition of the Richmond (Ind.) Board of Trade, in favor of the erection of a public building at Richmond, Ind.; which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. FRYE presented a petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Maine, officially signed, praying for the submission of a prohibitory amendment to the Constitution; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. HOAR presented a petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Massachusetts, officially signed, praying for the submission of a prohibitory amendment to the Constitution; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. PLATT presented a petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Connecticut, praying for the passage of a prohibitory constitutional amendment; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. PLATT. I present a petition of 26 citizens of New Mexico, of 45 citizens of Dakota, of 55 citizens of Idaho, of 80 citizens of Montana, of 120 citizens of the First and Second Congressional districts in Connecticut, and of 374 citizens of the District of Columbia, praying for the passage of a prohibitory law in the District of Columbia.

I desire to say just one word about these petitions. I see that in one of the newspapers of this city the criticism is made that the petitions which have been presented on this subject were largely those of women and children. That statement induced me to make an examination of the names appended to the petitions which I present this morning, and I find them to be largely petitions of men. The petition of 374 citizens of the District of Columbia is very largely signed by men who give their place of business—business men. An examination of the petition, I think, will show that they stand high in the District of Columbia as business men and as men of integrity and principle.

In saying this I do not wish to be understood as in any way indicating that I am not glad or even proud to present the petitions of women on this subject. I think of all persons women have the greatest interest in the subject.

I move that the petitions be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. FARWELL presented the petition of Mary Brown, widow of George W. Brown, of Company B, Twelfth Ohio Cavalry, for arrears of pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PLUMB. I present the memorial of J. M. Hurley, M. D., of Arizona, remonstrating against the passage of any bill creating a court for the settlement of private land claims in Arizona, setting forth that there are no claims of that character in Arizona, and that such a bill would be simply the shield of fraud. I move that the memorial lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. I present a petition of ex-Union soldiers resident in Carlton, Kans., praying for the passage of the per diem rated service-pension bill; a similar petition of ex-Union soldiers resident at Vermillion, Kans., at Prescott, Kans., at Industry, Kans., at Solomon, Kans., and at McPherson, Kans., all praying for the passage of the same bill. I move the reference of these petitions to the Committee on Pensions.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PADDOCK. I present the petition of John M. Thayer, governor of the State of Nebraska, James C. Birney, chairman, and W. W. Abbey, a member of the Live-Stock Sanitary Commission, and J. Gerth, jr., state veterinarian of the same State, praying that the Bureau of Animal Industry, as now organized, be retained and strengthened by additional appropriations to enable it to deal with pleuro-pneumonia and other contagious diseases among cattle, expressing the opinion that this is all the legislation now needed on the subject. I move that the petition lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

The message also announced that the House insisted upon its amendment to the bill (S. 154) for the erection of a public building at Milwaukee, Wis., non-concurred in by the Senate, agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. DIBBLE, Mr. NEWTON, and Mr. POST the conferees on the part of the House.

The message further announced that the House insisted upon its amendments to the resolution of the Senate providing for the printing of Executive Document No. 51, first session Forty-ninth Congress, on the subject of cattle and dairy farming, non-concurred in by the Senate, agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. RICHARDSON, Mr. GIBSON, and Mr. HIESTAND the conferees on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House of Representatives had passed a concurrent resolution directing the Secretary of the Navy to designate a national vessel of war to convey the remains of General Paez, together with the commission appointed by the Government of Venezuela, from New York to the port of La Guayra, Venezuela; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker pro tempore of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. 4756) to amend an act to restrict the ownership of real estate in the Territories to American citizens, etc., approved March 3, 1887; and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

POSTAL TELEGRAPH SYSTEM.

Mr. REAGAN. From the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads I report back the bill (S. 534) to provide for the establishment of a postal telegraphic system, and the bill (S. 614) to provide for the establishment and operation of the United States Postal Telegraph, and request that they lie on the table; and I report to the Senate a substitute for these two bills, with a written report. I ask that the new bill and report be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands the Senator from Texas to report back the two first bills adversely and recommend their indefinite postponement.

Mr. CULLOM. I suppose they are the bills introduced by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] and myself.

Mr. REAGAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. CULLOM. If that is so, I should like to have those two bills go upon the Calendar. I understand the Senator from Vermont is very anxious that the bill introduced by him should go on the Calendar.

Mr. REAGAN. Yes, sir; I so understood.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bills will be placed on the Calendar with the adverse reports, and the bill reported as a substitute will be read twice by its title.

The bill (S. 2222) to regulate commerce carried on by telegraph was read twice by its title.

Mr. CULLOM. I am not aware of the exact provisions of the bill, but I suppose it is a regulation bill.

Mr. REAGAN. Yes, sir; it is a regulation bill.

Mr. CULLOM. If that is so, the bill ought to go to the Committee on Interstate Commerce for consideration by that committee. I move the reference of the bill to that committee, if it is a regulation of interstate commerce by telegraph.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Illinois moves that the bill be referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. REAGAN. Is the subject open for discussion?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is.

Mr. REAGAN. All I desire to say in relation to it is that the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads had several bills before them for the establishment of a postal telegraph; that they have given much attention to the consideration of those bills; and in lieu of the bills presented to the committee they have thought it best to report a bill regulating the telegraph system of the United States.

As the subject-matter was before the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, it seems to me that the bill is properly before the Senate. Of course, if the Senate is not satisfied with the report of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, and thinks the work can be done better by another committee, it will take that course; but as I suggested, we had the whole subject before us, and we have disposed of it in the way I have mentioned.

Mr. SAWYER. I suggest to the Senator from Illinois that he allow the matter to go over until its consideration is reached by the Senate, and then let the Senate decide whether it will take one of the other bills or substitute the bill now reported. Then after that matter is considered it will be time enough for the bill to be referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce, if the Senate so desires.

Mr. CULLOM. In answer to that I desire to say that the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] some time ago introduced a bill for the regulation of interstate commerce by telegraph, and he had it referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce. That committee have been making preparation for an investigation and for hearings, and have the bill now before them for consideration. I suppose, though I am not aware of the fact officially that the bill which is reported by the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads is substantially that bill; and it would seem to be rather an anomalous state of things for one committee to go to the document-room and get a copy of a bill which is under consideration by another committee, and substitute it for bills that were properly before it, and bring the substitute in here and ask that it be placed on the Calendar, without the opportunity of the Committee on Interstate Commerce, having it in charge, to examine the subject before it is brought up for consideration in the Senate.

We are placed in a position, as every Senator must know, either to defer the consideration of the bill referred to us on the motion of the Senator from Wisconsin, which is probably exactly the same bill now reported, or to report it back and ask to be discharged from its further consideration.

While this bill may be exactly what the Committee on Interstate Commerce may recommend, yet for the purpose of having harmony between the committees, and allowing the committee which has regularly taken charge of the subject by the reference of a bill to it looking to regulation, it seems to me that this bill ought to be referred to that committee, so that the whole subject may come up for consideration at one time and not by pieces, first by one committee and then by another.

I hope, without any conflict of opinion in the Senate, that the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads will allow this bill to go to the Committee on Interstate Commerce, so that we may take up the subject and report a bill here at the earliest possible day.

The Senator from Texas who has the honor of reporting this bill is upon the Committee on Interstate Commerce and on the subcommittee also which has the subject in charge. I shall certainly ask the Senate to discharge that committee from the further consideration of this subject unless this bill can go to it.

Mr. REAGAN. It appears that the subject-matter was before two committees; but the fact that it was before another committee, it seems to me, is no just reason why the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom it was properly referred, should not make their report and have their report considered by the Senate. I see no advantage to the country or to the Senate in refusing to consider the report of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads when they had the whole subject-matter before them.

The very object of any bill that has been before us is to regulate telegraphy as a part of the postal system, and while the bill which has been reported to the Senate is, without the amendments which the Post-Office Committee put on it, the bill to which the Senator from Illinois has referred, it is on the subject of the other bills, and we may as well consider this bill as to wait for another report and consider another measure on the same subject. What I mean to say is that the two committees may, either of them, have legitimate jurisdiction of this subject.

I do not think it can be questioned that the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads had proper jurisdiction of the subject and might properly report a bill in regard to it; and if that be so, it seems to me that it would hardly be just to that committee for the Senate to refuse to consider the bill it has reported.

Mr. PLATT. Being upon the subcommittee of the Committee on Interstate Commerce which has this subject in charge, of course I feel an anxiety either to be discharged from its consideration or to have the untrammeled and unembarrassed consideration of the matter of regulating telegraphs by law of Congress. Not knowing exactly in what form the bill has this morning been reported by the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, of course I can not speak with accuracy upon the question as to whether the subject-matter was before the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads. Certainly the subject of regulating the telegraphs of the country as a matter of commerce and interstate commerce could not have been properly before the Post-Office Committee. If the telegraph is to be treated from the commercial point and regulated as between the States because it is commerce between the States, that certainly would seem to be outside of the jurisdiction of the Post-Office Committee.

I apprehend it will be found, on an examination of the bill reported from that committee this morning, that the Post-Office Committee have undertaken not to regulate the telegraph in the interest of the postal service, but in the interest of the commerce of this country. If the Senate desires that the Post-Office Committee should thus usurp the business of the Interstate Commerce Committee, and regulate not only the postal service of the country, but the commerce of the country, I hope that the Senate will discharge the Committee on Interstate Commerce from any further consideration of the subject.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, when this matter was first up at the opening of the session the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER] moved the appointment of a special committee to look into all matters connected with the telegraph. The Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, as we all thought, very justly claimed that that matter belonged to them, and it was referred by the Senate, perhaps unanimously, to that committee. I suppose by that reference the committee had the telegraph question in every form before them, and whether we should buy the present lines, whether we should go into partnership with the existing lines, whether we should have limitations, or whether we should seek to regulate those now existing were all phases of the question. That subject having been acted upon by them, and they now having reported, none of us yet knowing what they have done or read their report or seen their bill, it hardly seems to me the fair thing to take it away from that committee and set aside its action and refer it to another committee, which has its hands very full in dealing with the great railways of the country, which are the subject of interstate commerce as far as we have gone up to this time.

If the Post-Office Committee was allowed to take the question of the telegraphs and to consider it as part of the postal system, it seems to me until we see what it has done and what report it has made, and upon what ground it has based it, it would hardly be fair to take it away now and send it to another committee.

Let the report be printed; let the bill go on the Calendar; let the examination be made, and if the chairman of the Committee on Interstate Commerce and his committee then think that some additional matter likely to come in hereafter should be considered by his committee the Senate can act intelligently.

Mr. CULLOM. I think the Senator from Kentucky does not quite understand the exact situation. The Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Poads, of which the Senator from Texas is a member, had two or three bills referred to it, looking to a construction of telegraph lines by the Government or to a system of contracts for telegraphic service. It never had a regulation system, in the technical sense of the word, referred to it; but, upon the other hand, the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] prepared and introduced and had referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce a bill looking to the regulation of interstate commerce by telegraph; that is to say, interstate telegraphy through its regulation, just as we are regulating the interstate commerce by rail.

The Committee on Interstate Commerce have that bill under consideration. They have given it into the hands of a subcommittee, and very much correspondence has already been had with reference to it, and we are preparing for hearings with a view to investigating and determining just the kind of regulation that ought to be reported to the Senate.

Now, the proposition of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads is to bring in a bill which is substantially, I understand, the Spooner regulating bill, as a substitute for the bills which were referred to it, this latter bill not having been referred to that committee at all, and there is no reference to postal matters in the bill which is thus reported. While I am not here to say that we are going to disturb that bill if it is right, yet for the Senate to refuse to allow an interstate bill to go to the Committee on Interstate Commerce, which was created expressly for the purpose of investigating subjects of that kind, would be rather a strange proceeding. Certainly we have no business in the interest of economy to go on with the investigation of that branch of the subject unless this bill is referred to us.

Mr. BECK. What I rose to say, and what I have said, was that when the subject-matter went to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads every phase of the question was before them.

Mr. CULLOM. Not at all.

Mr. BECK. Necessarily it was the case, by the very reference of the bills to them. The sense of the Senate was expressed that the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads was the proper committee to take charge of the whole question. I never heard, and I can not imagine (I would be very glad to be advised; perhaps I could be convinced after a while) how commerce is carried on by telegraph. Communications can go by telegraph as they can through post-offices and over post-roads, but the instrument of it is the post-office. It may be that the Senator can convince me that packages and all sorts of things can go by telegraph; but at the present time my advice is that it is simply a means of rapid communication, just as the railway is more rapid than the steam-boat, the steam-boat more rapid than horseback, or the star route more rapid than the boy who carries the mail on his back. All include methods of carrying information in regard to commerce.

Mr. CULLOM. The Supreme Court of the United States has decided over and over again that telegraphy between the States is just as much interstate commerce as the carrying trade between the States.

Mr. BECK. Carrying letters must be the same thing. Telegrams relating to commerce occupy no other relation than letters relating to commerce. They are all communications in regard to it, whether they go one way or the other.

But what I rose to say was, that the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads have made a report and laid before us a bill; and surely we ought to see it; we ought to know what it is before that bill is taken off the Calendar and referred to any other committee. When the question comes up perhaps I shall vote with the Senator from Illinois, but I hardly feel prepared to do so now.

Mr. CHACE. Mr. President, the Senator from Illinois, the chairman of the Committee on Interstate Commerce, it seems to me, in urging his position on this question, may very reasonably find that the exact objection which he makes to permitting the report to come from this committee would apply to the proposition which he also makes—that the bill shall be committed to the Committee on Interstate Commerce. The question involved here, as I understand it, is as to the jurisdiction of the two committees; and that question is to be settled by a consideration of the subjects which should legitimately go to those committees. The Post-Office Committee, I apprehend, may properly consider all questions relating to intercommunication or the conveyance of intelligence of any kind between individuals or States within the United States. That is the legitimate sphere of consideration for the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads. Certainly I believe the Senator will admit that a mere social letter passing between two parties, not in any sense relating to any business transaction, to any commercial relations between the parties, can not be a subject legitimately referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce. I apprehend also that a purely social message sent over the wires by telegraph between two parties can not with propriety be referred to that committee. There are a great variety of subjects upon which people communicate with each other, using as an agency the telegraph.

It is true that a certain portion of these messages relate to commercial matters; it is equally true that as large a proportion of communications that pass through the mails relate to commercial matters; and if the argument of the Senator from Illinois be sound, that because a portion of the intercommunication which goes by telegraph relates to commercial matters therefore this question should be referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce, then the argument is equally good that all questions in relation to the post-office should be referred to that committee.

As I understand it, the Senate have had this question up before on the consideration of whether those other bills should be referred to this committee, and they have decided, and the matter has been committed to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads. Now, if that committee, in the course of its investigation, has decided that the Government had better not own the means of conveyance of messages, it has decided on a line in entire propriety with the management of the Post-Office Department. The Post-Office Department does not own the vehicles by which the mails are transmitted; the Post-Office Department does not attempt to control them, but simply avails itself of the agencies already in existence. The Post-Office Department interferes to regulate the transference of intelligence through the mails. The two subjects are exactly alike, as nearly as they may be, in all their features, with the simple difference that this information, or this intelligence, is conveyed over the wire instead of in the mail-pouch.

I apprehend, Mr. President, that if the Senate will allow this report and this bill to be printed and take them carefully into consideration they will see that the ground upon which the Senator from Illinois claims the consideration of this bill by his committee is without sufficient foundation or justification.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President, I do not care to occupy the time of the Senate on this subject; but it does seem to me that there can be but one side to the question. Here is a bill that the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads report, the title of which is "to regulate commerce carried on by telegraph;" and then when you go through the bill it is a bill making the Interstate Commerce Commission the authority to carry out and enforce the law, following the interstate-commerce act almost literally all the way through, except that it applies to telegraphy instead of to commerce on railroads and water-ways.

The Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, because they had jurisdiction of the subject as pertaining to the post-office, concluded that they must regulate commerce as well as regulate the affairs of the Post-Office Department. It seems to me there is no kind of analogy; there is nothing in this bill whatever that would give the Post-Office Committee any sort of jurisdiction over the subject, and certainly, if the Post-Office Committee have jurisdiction over commerce between the States by telegraph, they have jurisdiction over the commerce of the country by railroad as well. They might just as well assert that authority by reporting a bill here on that subject also.

While I care nothing about this matter personally, yet the Committee on Interstate Commerce has the subject under consideration and a subcommittee has it specially in charge. The chairman of that subcommittee has been at work making an investigation with a view to bring it before the whole Committee on Interstate Commerce; and in the midst of that we have a bill reported by the Post-Office Committee to regulate commerce by telegraph and placing it under the Interstate Commerce Commission of the country, which was created by the law we passed last year in relation to railroads.

I have nothing further to say, except that I think the bill ought to go to the Committee on Interstate Commerce, unless the Senate is ready to discharge that committee from any further consideration of the subject.

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. President, I am a member of the Interstate Commerce Committee, but not of the subcommittee which has under consideration the bill introduced by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER]. But by the decisions of our courts the regulation of the telegraphic system of the country is interstate commerce where such communications are between the States. It is an exceedingly important part of the commerce of the country, and as a question of jurisdiction and bearing upon the future jurisdiction of these committees, it seems to me one more important than this can hardly arise, and it ought to be decided less with reference to the disposition of this particular report than with reference to the outlining of legislation in the future upon this great subject.

It is a thing of great consequence to know whether the interstate commerce of the country is to be considered as one great harmonious whole by the new committee that has been created for that purpose, or whether it is to be subdivided and chipped into and distributed about among the various committees of the Senate, as the whole of it may be by reasoning from analogies. Thus the question touching the railroads of the country can be sent to the Committee on Railroads. Wherever interstate commerce is carried on by the water routes of the country, it can be sent to the Committee on Commerce; and wherever it is a question of the transmission of intelligence bearing upon commerce, it can, upon the reasoning which has been offered here this morning, be sent to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads; and thus the Committee on Interstate Commerce, recently established by the Senate to consider this great and growing subject will be deprived entirely of its jurisdiction.

This is particularly noticeable when another committee of the Senate comes in, not with a report upon a bill sent to it, but with a report upon a bill covering the whole subject of interstate telegraphy, which had already been referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce, and thus really usurps absolutely this great department of the jurisdiction of the latter committee.

Mr. President, it is said by the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHACE] that inasmuch as the postal system has reference to the transmission of intelligence and the Post-Office Committee has a right to regulate what is strictly the postal service of the country, therefore it is right that it should embrace the transmission of intelligence by telegraphy also in its jurisdiction. If that proves anything, it proves too much, because intelligence is not transmitted wholly by the post-office, nor wholly by telegraphy, but the great express system of the country carries to all parts of the land letters and communications bearing upon commerce, and upon the same principle the Post-Office Committee could take control of the express system.

Mr. CHACE. Will the Senator from New Hampshire permit a question?

Mr. BLAIR. Thus they may usurp the control of the regulation of the rates of express companies, a question which is now under consideration by the Interstate Commerce Committee.

Mr. CHACE. I should like to ask the Senator from New Hampshire whether or not it is a fact that there is a statute prohibiting express companies or individuals from carrying letters.

Mr. BLAIR. Simply letters.

Mr. CHACE. Yes.

Mr. BLAIR. But letters bearing on the question of commerce are so carried. Has not a man a right to order a bill of goods by express? Letters that bear upon anything which is commercial in its nature may be sent by express, and the express companies charge accordingly. Can the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads regulate the charges of the express companies of the country in such cases?

Now, what is the fact? The postal system relates to and touches the interest of every person in the country who can write, whereas the system of telegraphy is employed by only about 5 per cent. of the people, and very largely it is a strictly commercial use that is made of the telegraph, and to such an extent has it gone that, as I stated before, the courts have held that telegraphy is commerce, and when it is between States it is interstate commerce.

I have no personal feeling about this matter, for I am not on any subcommittee engaged in the consideration of the bill; but it seems to me that the question ought to be decided where the jurisdiction lies; and if there is any jurisdiction in the Interstate Commerce Committee certainly it covers this subject of interstate telegraphy.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. President, I agree with the closing remarks of the Senator from New Hampshire, that the bill ought to go where the jurisdiction properly lies.

How does this question come before the Senate? By the petitions of bodies of people in almost all parts of the country, some asking that the Government build and own and regulate telegraph lines for the carrying of news—it is news they carry—some asking that the present telegraph system be purchased. A general demand comes from all over the country that something be done to relieve the people against what is believed to be the improper exactions of telegraph companies in the transmission of news, in the transmission of intelligence—such news and such intelligence as in another form is transmitted by letters through the mail. That is the way the question comes to us.

These memorials come before the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads on the subject of the transmission of intelligence of news by telegraph, and the committee has chosen to report as a substitute for the bills referred to it the one which has been called to the attention of the Senate, and in almost every paragraph of the bill it is clear that the purpose is to regulate the charges upon the transmission of intelligence, such intelligence as without the telegraph would be transmitted by the mail.

The second section of the bill provides that "all charges made for such telegraphic service in receiving, transmitting, and delivering messages shall be reasonable and just, and every unreasonable charge for such service is prohibited and declared to be unlawful;" and it goes on to provide against exorbitant charges and places the subject-matter under the control of the commission which has the supervision of interstate commerce. We chose to put it there because the committee did not believe it best for the country or safest for its interests to establish a Government system of telegraphy, which would require a sacrifice of the interests now engaged in the telegraph system and involve the Government in an accumulation of patronage and make the cost of telegraphing probably greater by having a larger number of employés. We did not think it was best to lease the existing system of telegraphs, and so, in order to avoid what we believed would be expensive and in fact dangerous experiments, we preferred to report a bill regulating telegraphy, regulating the transmission of news; you may call it by any name you please. The Supreme Court of the United States has called telegraphy between the States commerce between the States, perhaps rightly; but the purpose of this bill, by whatever name you call it, is to regulate, or rather to provide a means of regulating, the rates of charges for the transmission of news

The object has been to frame a bill that will not do injustice to the telegraph companies, that will leave them secure in their rights and at the same time protect the people against improper discriminations and unjust charges. So I think the whole subject must have been before the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads. The committee so believed, and went through a labored investigation, and have reported a bill on a subject of which they believed they had jurisdiction, and it seems to me but fair that it should be considered by the Senate.

Mr. SAULSBURY. The chairman of the Committee on Interstate Commerce thinks the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads had not any jurisdiction of this question. The object of both committees, I suppose, is to present to the Senate some measure which shall relieve the people from extortion in reference to telegraphing from point to point in the country.

Now, as an original proposition, this bill ought to have been referred to the Post-Office Committee, because it is a question over which the Interstate Commerce Committee has no jurisdiction. Telegrams are not only intercommunications between the people of the different States, but between the people of the same State, and that committee has jurisdiction only of interstate commerce. This bill proposes to deal with transmission of telegrams from one point in one State to another point in the same State; and if the Interstate Commerce Committee should undertake to regulate that it would be an infringement of the powers of that committee.

Mr. CULLOM. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. SAULSBURY. Certainly.

Mr. CULLOM. Does the Senator state that this bill undertakes to regulate the charges on telegrams from one point in Delaware to another point in Delaware?

Mr. SAULSBURY. The Senator misapprehends me.

Mr. CULLOM. If it does not, it relates to interstate commerce, and belongs to the committee created expressly to regulate that business.

Mr. SAULSBURY. It may be true that the Committee on Interstate Commerce could deal with it just as well as the Post-Office Committee; but the Post-Office Committee being empowered to regulate the transmission of news, with quite as much authority as any other committee would have to deal with the question——

Mr. HOAR. I should like to ask the Senator a question, if he will yield.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Certainly.

Mr. HOAR. Is it true that the Post-Office Committee is empowered to deal with the transmission of news or intelligence? Is it established to deal with anything except the transmitting of news or intelligence by the agencies of the Government, and does it ever undertake to deal with the transmission of pure news or intelligence unless it is done by the Government itself by the establishment of post-offices and post-roads?

Mr. SAULSBURY. Of course the Government has absolute control over the transmission of letters and news in any form. It may take private agencies to accomplish its purpose.

So far as the question of interstate commerce is concerned, I have always doubted myself and do doubt yet the constitutional power of Congress to establish postal telegraphs or to purchase those already established; but I apprehend that the power exists in the Government to regulate any private agency that the people of the country have to deal with in their interstate communications. Sometimes we may have to use the strong hand to deal with private parties who are concerned in matters in which the whole people of the country are interested. I think that was true in reference to the establishment of the Interstate Commerce Commission for the regulation of railroad companies; but it was a necessity forced upon Congress by the decisions of the Supreme Court, which denied to the States the right to regulate their own corporations when engaged in interstate commerce.

Mr. REAGAN. I wish to respond to the question of the Senator from Massachusetts whether the Government has ever undertaken to transmit intelligence by other means than by its own agencies. I believe that was the question.

Mr. HOAR. That was not the question.

Mr. REAGAN. Will the Senator restate the question?

Mr. HOAR. I will put my question in the form of a proposition. I understand that the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads is not established to provide for the transmission of intelligence or to regulate the transmission of intelligence from one State to another, or from one person to another, except so far as the Government undertakes to do it for those individuals. The Government may do it either by hiring or buying a team of its own, or hiring a railroad or express company to carry the mail; but it is the Government that is doing the thing; and this committee is to superintend the constitutional function of establishing post-offices and post-roads. If the Government allowed express companies to transmit letters instead of doing it itself for private persons, then if it undertook to regulate their charges it would regulate their charges not under the post-office authority but as a regulation of commerce.

Now, I understand that this committee come in with a bill in which they utterly repudiate making it a part of the postal system of the country at all, and as a Post-Office Committee or as a post-office agency we do nothing with it; but we leave it under the power of regulating commerce, and then proceed to propose a bill to regulate it. Now, the Senator from Illinois, as I understand, says the moment you do that you are doing a thing which his committee was raised for.

Mr. REAGAN. What I want to say in response to the position of the Senator from Massachusetts is that while the committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads considers bills for regulating post-offices and post-roads, it is to be remembered that the mails are not carried by Government vehicles. The Government does not own the horses or the coaches or the steam-boats or the railroads that carry the mails, but the vehicles of conveyance belong to private parties, just as the telegraph lines do.

Mr. HOAR. But it is the Government mail that is carried. The Government takes it, locks up the bag. The local postmaster, its officer, delivers it to the mail agent and he delivers it to the railroad company. So you have got the Government function of a postal agency in operation. Now you utterly check that by this bill.

Mr. REAGAN. You have that by law.

Mr. HOAR. You do not say, "We will undertake to have Government officers to transmit telegraphic messages and compel the existing telegraph companies or new ones to take them for us." You say you have nothing to do with that. You simply say that the private person shall deal with the telegraph company at a certain rate.

Mr. REAGAN. Before the law was passed creating the Post-Office Department and providing for postal facilities we had nothing to do with the present mode of the transmission of intelligence. It took a law to put the present system in motion. This is only a law extending the conveying of intelligence from the ordinary lines now adopted to the telegraph system.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President, there were several distinct propositions before Congress. One was whether we should regulate the interstate commerce of the country carried on by railroads and telegraphs, and another was whether the Government itself would make the telegraph system a part of the postal service. During the last Congress and at this the proposition was presented and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads whether the telegraph system should be made a part of the postal service. At the present session an attempt was made to refer that matter to a special committee, and after a long debate it was properly agreed that it should go to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads. In the mean time the other proposition to regulate the telegraph service and bring it within the control and under the jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission was presented and referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Now, I submit to my friend from Texas that when the Post-Office Committee concluded that it would not consider favorably and report a bill looking to bringing the telegraph system within the direction and control of the Post-Office Department or make it a part of it, there their jurisdiction ended, as the bill regulating the existing system of telegraphy had gone to the Committee on Interstate Commerce, a committee which has for more than two years considered the subject. That committee did frame a bill and succeeded in having it passed, for which the whole country is indebted to the Senator from Illinois and the Senator from Texas and others, for bringing the railroad corporations within the control of Congress and under the direction of the commission created, so far as the interstate commerce of the country by railroad is concerned. In my judgment it would be highly improper to consider this bill until the Committee on Interstate Commerce has made its recommendations for the further regulation of railroads, the further regulation of steam-boats, and complete regulations as to express companies, and as to telegraph companies engaged in interstate commerce.

I think, with all due respect to my friends on the Post-Office Committee, that they have gone beyond what was intended when the telegraph matter was referred to them. Personally I regret very much, as I think the country will regret, that the Post-Office Committee have not taken up this one subject that was referred to them. Here we are to-day with all the facilities for quick communication between one section of this country and another in the hands of one single corporation, with no power, as experience has shown, to ever compete with that corporation unless the Government steps in and says it shall be a part of the postal system. All competitors heretofore have been wiped out. Probably in the next half century no private enterprise can compete with them and establish new lines. Every message that must pass over wires for a long time will be under the control of a single company, a power too great, too far-reaching, to be permitted so to be controlled. That great question was presented to the Post-Office Committee. That there are many objections to the Government embarking in such an enterprise I am aware—one is as to the increase of the employés of the Government—and yet it is a great question which must be met. The Post-Office Committee, however, come back to the Senate with a bill which does not touch the subject, but report a bill which has been referred to the Interstate Commerce Committee.

It seems to me that the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads have gone beyond anything that was contemplated by the Senate when this reference was made, and I trust the subject will go back to the Committee on Interstate Commerce, who have considered it and are now considering it, and who have of necessity given the subject greater consideration than it has been possible for the Post-Office Committee to give. I therefore concur with the Senator from Illinois that this matter ought to be committed to the committee over which he presides.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the motion of the Senator from Illinois to refer to the Committee on Interstate Commerce the bill reported from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. REAGAN. I offer a substitute for that—that the bill and report be printed and laid on the table for the time being, so that we may see whether any other bill comes here on that subject.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the rules the motion can not be amended. The question recurs on the motion made by the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. REAGAN. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. STEWART. I do not know how to vote on this question.

Mr. SHERMAN. What is the question before the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. To refer the bill reported by the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, as an original bill, to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that this be laid on the table at present. I have not had time to examine any of these bills or know much about them.

Mr. CULLOM. For the sake of avoiding any further delay I am willing that this bill may be laid on the table for to-day and printed, so that Senators may see what it is.

Mr. STEWART. That is right.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Let the report be printed too.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understood the Senator from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] to move that as an amendment to the motion offered by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM], but the Chair thought it not in order in that form.

Mr. CULLOM. I am willing to withdraw the motion to refer for to-day and ask that the bill be laid on the table and printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion to lie on the table and print is in order and will take precedence.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Then I ask that a report accompanying the bill be also printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That order will be made, of course. The bill reported from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads will lie on the table and be printed, if there be no objection. The Chair hears none.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on the 1st instant approved and signed the act (S. 601) to authorize the purchase of additional ground in Newark, N. J., adjoining the custom-house and post-office building, and for the improvement of the building thereon, and the erection of additions thereto.

The message also announced that the President had this day approved and signed the following acts:

An act (S. 313) for the relief of R. R. Tinsley; and

An act (S. 642) to authorize the removal of the quarantine station from Ship Island, Mississippi.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. PLATT, from the Committee on Territories, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1351) to enlarge the jurisdiction of the probate courts in Wyoming Territory, reported it with amendments.

Mr. TELLER, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2009) to restore the homestead right of M. F. Vance, of Akron, Colo., reported it with amendments.

Mr. SAWYER, from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1826) for the relief of the heirs of Hiram W. Hubbard, deceased, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was agreed to, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1141) to increase the pension of Lucy Moore, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was agreed to, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1459) granting a pension to Florence Courtney Cochnower, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. WALTHALL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1589) for the relief of Isaac N. Thompson, submitted an adverse report thereon, which was agreed to; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. FAULKNER, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1727) to grant to the trustees of the German Lutheran Trinity Congregation of Washington, D. C., the right to sell a portion of their cemetery lands, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1730) to grant to the trustees of the German Lutheran Trinity Congregation of Washington, D. C., the right to sell a portion of their cemetery lands, reported adversely thereon; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. HAMPTON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 439) for the relief of Grovenor A. Curtice, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. HAMPTON. A few days ago I submitted an adverse report from the Committee on Military Affairs on the bill (S. 1423) authorizing the President to appoint William English an officer in the regular Army of the United States. The Senator from Virginia who sits on my left [Mr. DANIEL] was not present at that time, and he desires that it may be placed on the Calendar. It was indefinitely postponed, and I should like to have such action taken that it may be placed on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the vote by which the bill was indefinitely postponed will be reconsidered, and the bill placed on the Calendar with the adverse report.

Mr. GIBSON, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1755) to incorporate the Atlantic and Pacific Ship Railway Company, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments.

Mr. STEWART, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1306) to define the status and for the relief of the heirs or legal representatives of certain recruits for the Fourteenth Kansas Cavalry Volunteers who were killed at Lawrence, Kans., August 21, 1863, by guerrillas, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. PLUMB, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3613) for the relief of Joseph Casson, reported it without amendment.

Mr. MANDERSON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1561) to provide for the completion of the quarters, barracks, and stables at Fort Robinson and at Fort Niobrara, in the State of Nebraska, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1039) for the relief of the heirs of Charles B. Smith, deceased, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of John McFarland, praying for an honorable discharge from the Army, submitted a report thereon, accompanied by a bill (S. 2223) to remove the charge of desertion, and of having enlisted in the Confederate service, from the records of the War Department standing against John McFarland, and to grant him an honorable discharge; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. PADDOCK, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 259) granting the title of the United States in certain lands to the county of Randolph and State of Illinois, on certain conditions, reported it without amendment.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. 783) to correct the enrollment of an act approved March 3, 1887, entitled "An act to amend sections 1, 2, 3, and 10, of an act to determine the jurisdiction of the circuit courts of the United States, and to regulate the removal of causes from the State courts, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1875, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2595) for the relief of the widow of John A. S. Tutt, deceased, reported it without amendment.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1780) to incorporate the Georgetown Barge, Dock, Elevator, and Railroad Company, reported adversely thereon, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, reported a bill (S. 2252) to incorporate the Georgetown Barge, Dock, Elevator, and Railway Company; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. FRYE. I am instructed by the Select Committee on the Pacific Railway Commission's Report to present certain bills, and ask that they be read twice and referred to that committee, the request being made so that the committee may have the bills recommended by the Commissioners on the Pacific Railroads in a more convenient form for their use.

Mr. HAWLEY. I think the law authorizes the printing at the request of the committee of a sufficient number without the action of the Senate; 100 may be printed without the action of the Senate, whereas the order of the Senate carries 1,900.

Mr. FRYE. If under the rules that can be done without the action of the Senate, I withdraw the bills.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks it can be done.

Mr. FRYE. I withdraw the bills.

REMOVAL OF THE REMAINS OF GENERAL PAEZ TO VENEZUELA.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am directed by the Committee on Foreign Relations, who have had the subject under consideration, to report in favor of the passage of the House concurrent resolution now lying on the table providing for the removal of the remains of General Paez to Venezuela. I ask that the resolution be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution from the House of Representatives, which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Whereas a commission of distinguished persons appointed by the Government of Venezuela has arrived in New York for the purpose of conveying the mortal remains of General José Antonio Paez to Venezuela, with a view to their interment in the National Pantheon at Caracas; and

Whereas General Paez (who died in New York in 1873) bore a very eminent historical part in the great and protracted struggle for South American independence, and was the first President of the Republic of Venezuela: Therefore,

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That, as a proper and graceful act of national courtesy in such case, the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized and directed to designate a national vessel of war to convey the mortal remains of General Paez, together with the commission aforesaid, from New York to the port of La Guayra, Venezuela: Provided, It shall first be ascertained that such action will be agreeable to the Government of Venezuela.

Mr. SHERMAN. As this is an act of international courtesy, manifestly proper, and recommended by the President, and as the resolution has passed the House of Representatives, I move to concur in the resolution sent to us by the House.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio moves that the Senate concur in the resolution just read from the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to, and the resolution was concurred in.

ADDRESSES ON PRESENTATION OF SPEAKERS' PORTRAITS.

Mr. MANDERSON. I am directed by the Committee on Printing to report back the House concurrent resolution providing for the printing of 10,000 copies of the addresses delivered in the House of Representatives January 19, 1888, upon the presentation of the portraits of Speakers Sedgwick, Varnum, and Banks, and recommend its passage with an amendment. I ask for the present consideration of the resolution.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be printed 10,000 copies of the addresses delivered in the House of Representatives on January 19, 1888, upon the presentation of the portraits of Speakers Sedgwick, Varnum, and Banks, for the use of the House.

The amendment reported by the Committee on Printing was, after the name "Banks," in line 7, to insert "2,000 for the use of the Senate and 8,000;" so as to make the resolution read:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be printed 10,000 copies of the addresses delivered in the House of Representatives on January 19, 1888, upon the presentation of the portraits of Speakers Sedgwick, Varnum, and Banks, 2,000 for the use of the Senate and 8,000 for the use of the House.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was concurred in.

REPRINTING OF MILITIA REPORT.

Mr. HAWLEY. The usual annual report of the Secretary of War concerning the militia forces of the United States was received, ordered printed, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. I have received a communication from the War Department saying that the errors in the publication render it almost valueless for reference, and that the errors did not originate in the copy prepared in that office. I ask an order that the report be reprinted according to the corrected copy, and as far as possible substituted for the original erroneous publication.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That order will be made if there be no objection.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. BLACKBURN (by request) introduced a bill (S. 2224) to extend the streets and avenues of the city of Washington, D. C.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also (by request) introduced a bill (S. 2225) to grade streets in the District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

AMENDMENT TO A BILL.

Mr. STEWART submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 12) to provide for the formation and admission into the Union of the State of Washington, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Territories, and ordered to be printed.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion of Mr. HOAR, it was Ordered, That the petition of Mary Curtin, praying for a pension, presented in the Forty-ninth Congress, second session, be taken from the files of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

CLAIM OF WILLIAM H. FREAR.

Mr. GORMAN submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of State be, and he is hereby, requested to transmit to the Senate copies of all documents and correspondence in the Department of State relating to the claim of William H. Frear, for payment of the money due him for provisions furnished to the French Government in March, 1871, for revictualing Paris.

INDIANS IN WISCONSIN AND MINNESOTA.

Mr. CHANDLER submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Select Committee on Indian Traders be directed to inquire into the methods of allotting lands in severalty to Indians upon the Lac Court d'Oreille, Lac de Flambeau, Bad River, Fond du Lac, and other Indian reservations in the northern portions of Wisconsin and Minnesota, and into the system under which Indians to whom lands have been allotted are allowed to sell the timber thereon; and especially to inquire whether or not adequate prices are paid to Indians under such sales, and that for the purpose of this resolution the committee be authorized to exercise all the powers heretofore conferred upon the committee by the Senate.

ARTHUR KILL BRIDGE.

Mr. FRYE. I am instructed by the Committee on Commerce to report a resolution and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce, in considering Senate bills 1433, 1842, and 1850, touching the construction of a bridge or bridges across Staten Island Sound, known as Arthur Kill and Kill von Kull, be, and it is hereby, authorized to visit the locality for the purpose of making a personal inspection and inquiry into the necessity for said bridge or bridges, and especially to investigate the bridge now in process of construction under authority of Congress, with a view to determining whether or not any change is required in its location or form of structure; and such expense as may result from said investigation shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate, upon vouchers to be approved by the chairman of said committee and by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. FRYE. I desire simply to say that during the last Congress, after a protracted hearing before the Committee on Commerce, and after a careful consideration of the bill reported by them in the Senate, a bill was passed authorizing the erection of a bridge across this kill. The railroad company immediately commenced upon the construction of the bridge and have expended $100,000 or $200,000 already. Now New Jersey insists that it has destroyed the commerce of the kill, which is a very valuable commerce. A board of Army engineers has reported that the bridge is proving an obstruction to the kill. Another board of Army engineers has reported that it will not obstruct. The Secretary of War, on the request of the Committee on Commerce, has ordered another board of engineers to examine this bridge while it is in process of erection and to make report to him. He has also notified a hearing, and the parties are exceedingly desirous that the matter shall receive the fullest investigation. Its importance entitles it to the fullest and completest possible investigation. The commerce of this kill is equal to that of the Suez Canal to-day. This bridge will probably carry a commerce almost equal to that, if it is built. The committee, feeling the responsibility of the situation, desire themselves to investigate the matter personally so far as they can.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Senate resumes the consideration of the unfinished business. The Chair understands the Senator from Maine to ask unanimous consent that the resolution reported by him may be considered now. Is there objection?

Mr. McPHERSON. Let the resolution be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be again read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands that under the rules the resolution must go to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, as it makes a charge upon the contingent fund.

Mr. FRYE. Let it be referred.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be so referred.

HEARINGS BEFORE FOREIGN RELATIONS COMMITTEE.

Mr. SHERMAN submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Relations is hereby authorized to employ a stenographer to report hearings in regard to Chinese immigration and other subjects pending before it, the expense to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HALE. I ask that the regular order of business be laid aside, and that the Senate proceed to consider the urgent deficiency appropriation bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Before submitting that request the Chair will lay before the Senate messages received from the President of the United States.

Mr. HALE. My motion can be acted on as soon as they are disposed of.

AWARDS OF MEXICAN CLAIMS COMMISSION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate:

I transmit herewith a report from the Secretary of State, with its inclosures, in response to the resolution of the Senate of the 21st of December, 1887, and the 16th of January, 1888, touching the awards of the late Mexican Claims Commission, and especially those in favor of Benjamin Weil and La Abra Silver Mining Company.

It will be seen that the report concludes with a suggestion that these claims be referred to the Court of Claims or such other court as may be deemed proper in order that the charges of fraud made in relation to said claims may be fully investigated.

If for any reason this proceeding be considered inadvisable, I respectfully ask that some final and definite action be taken directing the executive department of the Government what course to pursue in the premises.

In view of the long delay that has already occurred in these cases, it would seem but just to all parties concerned that the Congress should speedily signify its final judgment upon the awards referred to, and make the direction contemplated by the act of 1878, in default of which the money now on hand applicable to such awards now remains undistributed.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, Washington, March 5, 1888.

REMAINS OF GENERAL PAEZ.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read:

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America:

I transmit herewith, for the information and consideration of Congress, a report of the Secretary of State, with accompanying correspondence, touching the action of the Government of Venezuela in conveying to that country for interment the remains of the distinguished Venezuelan soldier and statesman, General José Antonio Paez, and take pleasure in expressing my concurrence in the suggestion therein referred to, that the employment of a national vessel of war for the transportation of General Paez's remains from New York to La Guayra be authorized and provided for by Congress.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, Washington, March 5, 1888.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Both Houses having acted upon the subject-matter, the Chair will direct that the message lie on the table and be printed.

INTERNATIONAL EXHIBITION OF FINE ARTS AT MUNICH.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a report from the Secretary of State relative to an invitation which the royal Bavarian Government has extended to this Government to participate in the Third International Exhibition of the Fine Arts, which is to be held at Munich, Bavaria, during the present year.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, Washington, March 5, 1888.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HALE. I now renew my request.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be informally laid aside to enable the Senate to proceed with the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6437) to provide for certain of the most urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. HALE. I ask that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, and that the Senate proceed to consider the bill, the committee amendments being acted on as they are reached in the reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRIS in the chair). The Senator from Maine asks that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The bill will be read, and the amendments reported by the Committee on Appropriations will be acted on as reached in the reading.

Mr. MORGAN. I desire to ask the Senator if he will yield to me to bring up Order of Business 418, which is the bill (S. 1824) to ratify and confirm an agreement with the Gros Ventre, Piegan, Blood, Blackfeet, and River Crow Indians in Montana, which is a matter of very great public interest, particularly to Senators from the Northwest. I have no personal interest in it myself. I think the bill will occupy but a very few moments and perhaps not lead to debate.

Mr. HALE. Since I have conferred with the Senator from Alabama I am led to believe that the bill which he desires to call up will give rise to debate. I can not, of course, yield for that.

Mr. MORGAN. I will not press it if that is the case.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection being made, the matter must go over.

Mr. COLQUITT. Will the Senator from Maine allow me to give a notice? I shall move on Thursday morning, after the morning hour, to take up the resolution of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] referring the President's message, with a view of submitting some remarks thereon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The notice will be considered by the Senate.

URGENT DEFICIENCY BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 6437) to provide for certain of the most urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "Treasury Department," in section 1, on page 2, after line 7, to insert:

To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to pay Samuel A. Robinson, inspector of plumbing for the District of Columbia, for services rendered in connection with the sanitary improvement of the Treasury building, the sum of $595 is hereby authorized to be paid him out of the appropriation of $20,000 made by the sundry civil act of August 4, 1886, to put the Treasury building in a proper sanitary condition by improved plumbing, sewerage, and drainage.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, on page 4, line 8, after the word "limit," to insert "in a fire-proof manner;" and in line 9, before the word "thousand," to strike out "three" and insert "seven;" so as to make the clause read:

For court-house and post-office at Leavenworth, Kans.: For completion in excess of the limit, in a fire-proof manner, $7,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to line 22, on page 4.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair calls the attention of the Senator from Maine to the language in line 22. It reads "Fort Townsend." The Secretary suggests that it should be "Port" instead of "Fort."

Mr. HALE. That should be "Port Townsend."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That correction will be made. The reading will proceed.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in section 1, on page 5, line 19, before the word "granite," to strike out "extension;" in line 20, after the word "limit," to strike out "$65,000. And said building may be extended on the north side thereof 15 feet and one story high;" and insert "and for extension of building on the north side thereof 15 feet and one story high, $65,000;" so as to make the clause read:

For post-office and court-house at Syracuse, N. Y.: For granite work for approaches, and completion, in excess of the limit, and for extension of building on the north side thereof 15 feet and one story high, $65,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, on page 6, to strike out the clause from line 12 to line 14 inclusive, as follows:

Post-office at Jersey City, N. J.: For necessary extension of the building, $12,000.

Mr. McPHERSON. Will the Senator from Maine in charge of this bill please inform me why this item is stricken out?

Mr. HALE. Since the bill was prepared and passed by the House of Representatives another bill making a much larger appropriation for a larger subject-matter has passed the House and has come to the Senate, and is now before the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in the appropriations for "light-stations," in section 1, on page 7, line 4, after the word "for," to strike out "lease of the ground used" and insert "use of the ground occupied;" and in line 11, before the word "ground," to strike out "leased;" so as to make the clause read:

Hell Gate light-station, New York: For use of the ground occupied as a site for the light-house and fog-signal established at Hallet's Point, near Hell Gate, New York, from April 1, 1886, to June 30, 1888, $1,350. And the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed to remove the property of the Government from said ground on or before June 30, 1888.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, on page 7, line 17, before the word "thousand," to strike out "five" and insert "three;" so as to make the clause read:

In addition to the amount appropriated by the act making appropriations for the sundry civil expenses of the Government, approved August 4, 1886, for the establishment of a light-house and fog-signal at Castle Hill, Rhode Island, the sum of $3,000.

The next amendment was, in section 1, on page 7, to strike out the clause beginning on line 23, as follows:

Lake Borgne light-station, Mississippi: For establishing a light and fog-signal to guide into Lake Borgne, Louisiana, instead of St. Joseph's Island light-station, $8,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, on page 8, after line 9, to insert:

Revenue-cutter service.—For expenses of the revenue-cutter service: For pay of captains, lieutenants, engineers, cadets, and pilots employed, and for rations for the same; for pay of petty officers, seamen, cooks, stewards, boys, coal-passers, and firemen, and for rations for the same; for fuel for vessels, and repairs and outfits for the same; ship-chandlery and engineers' stores for the same; traveling expenses of officers traveling on duty under orders from the Treasury Department; instruction of cadets; commutation of quarters; for protection of the interests of the Government on the seal islands and the sea-otter hunting-grounds, and the enforcement of the provisions of law in Alaska; contingent expenses, including wharfage, towage, dockage, freight, advertising, surveys, labor, and miscellaneous expenses which can not be included under special heads, $30,664.02.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, beginning at the top of page 9, to insert:

Coast and Geodetic Survey—Office expenses: For copper-plates, chart-paper, printers' ink, copper, zinc, and chemicals for electrotyping and photographing; engraving, printing, photographing, and electrotyping supplies; for extra drawing and engraving; and for photolithographing charts and printing from stone for immediate use, $6,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for "miscellaneous objects," in section 1, on page 12, at the beginning of line 8, to strike out "Suppressing counterfeiting and other crimes: To supply a deficiency in the appropriation for suppressing counterfeiting and other crimes, for," and to insert "For;" so as to make the clause read:

For continuing the investigation of certain claims of Indian soldiers and their heirs for arrears of pay and bounty, $2,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, on page 12, after line 12, to insert:

Fish Commission: For salary of the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries from date of qualification in office, February 18, to June 30, 1888, at the rate of $5,000 per annum, $1,840.68, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "District of Columbia," in section 1, on page 13, after the word "tunnel," at the end of line 14, to insert "according to the plan recommended by the board of Army engineer officers;" so as to read:

Increase of water-supply, Washington, D. C.: To enable the Secretary of War to complete the work of increasing the water-supply of the city of Washington, under the act entitled "An act to increase the water-supply of the city of Washington, and for other purposes," approved July 15, 1882, namely: For completion of lining of the tunnel according to the plan recommended by the board of Army engineer officers, $297,750.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was under the head of "War Department," in section 1, on page 14, after line 18, to insert:

Office of the Surgeon-General: For salaries of the following additional force from March 1 to June 30, 1888, namely: For one engineer, at the rate of $1,400 per annum; one assistant engineer, for night duty, at the rate of $900 per annum; two firemen, at the rate of $720 each per annum; and two laborers, at the rate of $660 each per annum; in all, $1,611.67, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, on page 15, line 10, to increase the appropriation "for new steam-heating apparatus, including necessary pipes and radiators," from $2,500 to $3,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, on page 15, line 19, after the word "all," to strike out "five thousand eight" and insert "six thousand three;" and after the word "dollars," in line 20, to insert:

Provided, That the printing-press and material formerly in use in the office of the Surgeon-General may be used by the record and pension division of that office to expedite as much as possible the work of the division, and for no other purpose.

So as to make the clause read:

For necessary painting of wood and iron work, including cases, shelving, and necessary glazing, $500; in all $6,395: Provided, That the printing-press and material formerly in use in the office of the Surgeon-General may be used by the record and pension division of that office to expedite as much as possible the work of the division, and for no other purpose.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Military Establishment," in section 1, on page 16, line 4, after the word "cents," to insert "to be disbursed under the limitations prescribed for the appropriation for mileage to officers by the Army appropriation act approved February 9, 1887;" so as to make the clause read:

Pay of the Army—For mileage to officers, when authorized by law, $40,308.76; to be disbursed under the limitations prescribed for the appropriation for mileage to officers by the Army appropriation act approved February 9, 1887.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, on page 16, in line 16, to change the spelling "neceeary" to "necessary."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, to insert, beginning at the top of page 17, the following clause:

Extension of military reservation at Fort Robinson, Nebr.: For payment to John T. Sechler for private property taken by the Government in extension of the military reservation at Fort Robinson, Nebr., under the President's order of June 28, 1879, being the amount awarded by a board of officers January 5, 1888, as per their report approved by the War Department, $2,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for "Signal Service," in section 1, on page 18, after line 19, to insert:

For rent, hire of civilian employés, furniture, light, stationery, ice, stoves and fixtures, repairs, rent of telephones, text-books, lumber, and other expenses of offices maintained as stations of observation outside of Washington, D. C., $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, on page 19, to strike out the clause from line 7 to line 13, inclusive, as follows:

Army transportation: For payment to estate of T. J. League, deceased, on account of Army transportation, 1882 and prior years, $10,750, said sum having been certified to Congress as due by the accounting officers of the Treasury in House Executive Document No. 19, Fiftieth Congress, first session.

Mr. COKE. I desire to ask the Senator from Maine the reason for striking out this item of the bill.

Mr. HALE. I do not hear what the Senator says.

Mr. COKE. I ask the Senator to state the reason for the amendment striking out this clause of the bill.

Mr. HALE. This matter was one of a narrow class which has given the Committee on Appropriations a good deal of trouble in the last three or four years. This and three other claims—the Von Hoffman claim, the Hoboken Land and Water Company claim, and the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad claim for transportation, for use of mill property, for charter of a steamer, and the item now embodied in the House appropriation bill—had been playing back and forth between the two Houses until at last, on the appropriation bill of two years ago, the Treasury Department was directed to re-examine those four claims. They were mentioned in terms, and the accounting officers of the Treasury Department were directed to submit all four of these items to the renewed scrutiny of the Department, so that if any weaknesses really obtained in them such weaknesses might be brought to light.

The Department, in accordance with that direction, carefully considered these four claims, including the one that the committee has here recommended to be struck out; and in a very elaborate and I think very complete document submitted by Mr. I. H. Maynard, the Second Comptroller, in Executive Document No. 19 of the House of Representatives of this Congress, they are very fully treated. I have some reason to have a good deal of faith and repose a good deal of confidence in any investigation made by Judge Maynard, because I believe that ordinarily his examinations have been very thorough, very clear, and very fair. In this document he decides in favor of all these claims.

All these claims were put upon an appropriation bill in the last Congress, but the Senate and the House finally struck them all out. They are a proper subject-matter for a regular deficiency bill. They are no more urgent now than formerly, except that the parties in waiting become more and more anxious to get their pay from year to year; but they do not stand in the relation that items for an urgent deficiency bill ought to stand. They are not pressing particularly now in order to carry on the work of the Government, and they should all go together. If this one is put on the bill, I see no reason why the others should not go on. They have all been subjected to an examination, and I see no reason why the other House should make fish of one and flesh of the other, and that is precisely what has been done in this bill.

One of these four claims has been selected from the body of the report made by the Second Comptroller of the Treasury and has been put upon the bill by the House, and when it came to the Senate the Senate Committee on Appropriations, believing and knowing that they should all go together, has struck those items out purposely, in order to put them all on to the general deficiency bill, as was done last year, and insist that they shall be passed, the reason being that this is not an urgent deficiency, and no more urgent technically now than it has ever been before.

I care but little what the Senate does about this matter. If it passes this item and retains it in the bill, then I shall move that the other three be incorporated with it, because they all should stand alike. It is only a question of time. That is the reason why the committee has stricken it out from the bill. I state this in answer to the question of the Senator from Texas.

Mr. COKE. Mr. President, this item has once before passed the Senate in connection with the three other items alluded to by the Senator from Maine. They were all stricken out in the House. The House now sends this item on the bill, leaving out the other three. That is simply evidence of the fact that the investigation given to this claim in the House has proved this to be a proper claim to be appropriated for, and that in the judgment of the House the other three are not proper claims for appropriation. I desire to read to the Senate from the report of Judge Maynard, to whom this claim was submitted. After reciting the testimony he says:

> These are, in brief, the facts relating to the transaction, and if the same weight is to be given to this evidence that it would receive in an ordinary judicial tribunal, I see no escape from the conclusion that an express contract was duly made by an authority competent to bind the United States for the use of this property at a stipulated rental; that the Government has enjoyed the use of the property during the period for which rent is claimed, and that payment of this claim could not be refused by the Government without ignoring its contract obligations.
> The United States have paid under this contract the rent accruing for several months both prior and subsequent to the time for which rent is here claimed, which, in a case between private citizens, would estop the parties from asserting the non-existence of the contract.
>
> It is also shown that in 1881 application was made to Congress for relief, and a bill was introduced in the Senate December 21, by Senator Cameron, of Wisconsin, referred to the Committee on Claims, and reported favorably, and passed the Senate April 2, 1882, which directed the Secretary of the Treasury to pay the sum of $10,750 to Thomas J. League, or his legal representative, for rent of coal wharf and yard at Galveston, Tex., used for discharging, shipping, and storing Government coal and other freights from December 1, 1865, to March 31, 1866, under contract at the monthly rental of $2,500 per month with the said League, and also for rent of coal-yard at Galveston, Tex., used for storing Government coal from April 1, 1866, to June 30, 1866, under contract at the monthly rental of $250 per month with said League, and appropriated the necessary sum for that purpose.

The terms in which he alludes to the contract are italicized.

It is perfectly apparent that officers competent to bind the Government made the contract with League, and that under the contract the money is due. It has been due since 1865, and a relief bill referred to the Committee on Claims, an independent bill, has once passed the Senate. Again it was placed on an appropriation bill with the three other claims referred to by the Senator from Maine, and passed the Senate again; they were stricken out in the House. Now, this item comes back from the House on this appropriation bill without the other three. This claim has no connection in the world with the other three claims. It is a thousand miles from any of them. The Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company owns one of the claims, and some other parties in the Eastern States own the others. This claim arose at Galveston, having no connection with the three with which the Senator from Maine is attempting to couple it on this bill. This debt was incurred in 1865, and the party to whom it was due has been vainly asking Congress for it ever since.

Now that the House of Representatives, in the exercise of its jurisdiction and its discretion, without seeing proper to place the other three claims on this appropriation bill, has sent this one here and indorsed it as a proper claim for payment, I do not believe that because the other three, which have nothing to do with this, are not sent therefore this should be stricken out. I therefore hope that the Senate will not accede to the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. COKE. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. HALE. I am willing to take a standing vote of the Senate. It is not necessary to take the yeas and nays.

Mr. COKE. I withdraw the call.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. HALE. Now I move the following amendments, to come directly after the clause just retained:

> For payment on account of Army transportation, 1882 and prior years, as certified to Congress as due by the accounting officers of the Treasury in House Executive Document No. 19, Fiftieth Congress, first session, as follows:
>
> To the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company, $32,788.48; to the Hoboken Land Improvement Company of New Jersey, $15,800; in all, $48,588.48.
> For payment on account of barracks and quarters, 1881 and prior years, to L. A. Von Hoffman and William A. Mertens (trading as R. Von Hoffman & Co.), and William H. Newman, $18,430.56, certified to Congress as due by the accounting officers of the Treasury in Executive Document No. 19, Fiftieth Congress, first session.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. I offer the following amendment to follow that just adopted:

> For reimbursement to the estate of Walter Mason for stolen money under sections 2554 and 2155, Revised Statutes, as certified to Congress in House Executive Document No. 19, Fiftieth Congress, first session, $32,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations was, in section 1, on page 19, after line 13, to insert:

> National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, at the Western Branch, Leavenworth, Kans.: For fitting up barrack for the accommodation of additional inmates, $1,000; for maintenance during the remainder of the current fiscal year, $4,500; in all, $5,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Navy Department," in section 1, on page 20, to strike out the clause from line 12 to line 15, inclusive, as follows:

> For the purpose of making 100 feet longer the dry-dock now under contract to be built at the Brooklyn navy-yard, $100,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for the "Marine Corps," in section 1, on page 20, line 19, after the word "California," to strike out "five thousand" and insert "two thousand five hundred;" so as to make the clause read:

> Officers' quarters, Mare Island, California: For the erection of officers' quarters at the marine barracks, Mare Island, California, $2,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Interior Department," in section 1, on page 21, after the word "dollars," to insert:

> And from this amount an expenditure not to exceed $360 is hereby authorized for the rent of additional rooms for said bureau during the current fiscal year.

So as to make the clause read:

> Bureau of Labor: To enable the Commissioner of Labor to complete the collection of statistics of, and relating to, marriage and divorce in the several States and Territories and in the District of Columbia, $7,500; and from this amount an expenditure not to exceed $360 is hereby authorized for the rent of additional rooms for said bureau during the current fiscal year.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, on page 21, after line 16, to insert:

> Reports of the Tenth Census: To complete the publication of the reports of the Tenth Census, $77,495.52.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, on page 21, in line 22, after the word "office," to strike out "one thousand" and insert "five hundred;" so as to read:

> Office of the surveyor-general of Arizona: For salaries of clerks in his office, $500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, on page 22, line 24, before the word "thousand," to strike out "two" and insert "one;" so as to make the clause read:

> Office of surveyor-general of California: For salaries of clerks in his office, $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, on page 22, line 1, after the word "office," to strike out "one thousand" and insert "five hundred;" so as to read:

> Office of surveyor-general of Colorado: For salaries of clerks in his office, $500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, on page 22, in line 3, after the word "office," to strike out "three thousand" and insert "one thousand five hundred;" so as to make the clause read:

> Office of surveyor-general of Dakota: For salaries of clerks in his office, $1,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, on page 22, line 6, after the word "office," to strike out "one thousand" and insert "five hundred;" so as to make the clause read:

Office of surveyor-general of Louisiana: For salaries of clerks in his office, $500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, on page 22, in line 10, after the date "1888," to strike out "one thousand five hundred" and insert "seven hundred and fifty;" so as to make the clause read:

Office of the surveyor-general of Montana: For salaries of clerks in his office for fiscal year 1888, $750.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, on page 22, line 13, after the word "office," to strike out "one thousand" and insert "five hundred;" so as to make the clause read:

Office of surveyor-general of Nevada: For salaries of clerks in his office, $500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, on page 22, in line 16, before the word "thousand" to strike out "two" and insert "one;" so as to make the clause read:

Office of surveyor-general of New Mexico: For salaries of clerks in his office, $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, on page 22, line 18, after the word "office," to strike out "one thousand five hundred" and insert "seven hundred and fifty;" so as to make the clause read:

Office of surveyor-general of Utah: For salaries of clerks in his office, $750.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, on page 22, line 21, after the word "office," to strike out "three thousand" and insert "one thousand five hundred;" so as to make the clause read:

Office of surveyor-general of Washington: For salaries of clerks in his office, $1,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, on page 22, line 24, after the word "office," to strike out "one thousand" and insert "five hundred;" so as to make the clause read:

Office of the surveyor-general of Wyoming: For salaries of clerks in his office, $500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, on page 23, line 2, before the word "hundred," to strike out "eight" and insert "four;" so as to make the clause read:

Office of surveyor-general of Oregon: For salaries of clerks in his office, $400.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, on page 23, line 12, before the word "thousand," to strike out "thirty-five" and insert "twenty-five;" so as to make the clause read:

Contingent expenses of land offices: For clerk-hire, rent, and other incidental expenses of the several land offices, $25,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, on page 23, to strike out lines 18 and 19, as follows:

For the examination of surveys heretofore made, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, on page 23, after line 19, to insert:

Surveying the public lands: For the examination of surveys in the field to test the accuracy of the work and to prevent payment for fraudulent and imperfect surveys returned by deputy surveyors, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Indian affairs," in section 1, on page 24, to strike out the clause from line 13 to line 21, as follows:

This amount for pay of special agents and necessary expenses to carry out the provisions of section 3 of the act approved February 8, 1887, entitled "An act to provide for the allotment of lands in severalty to Indians on the various reservations, and to extend the protection of the laws of the United States and Territories over the Indians, and for other purposes," $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, on page 25, to strike out the clause from line 7 to line 13, inclusive, as follows:

Traveling expenses of Indian school superintendent: Necessary traveling expenses of one Indian school superintendent, including incidental expenses of inspection and investigation: Provided, That he shall be allowed $4 per day for traveling expenses when actually on duty in field, exclusive of cost of transportation, $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Post-Office Department," in section 1, on page 25, line 24, to strike out "wrapping-paper" and insert:

For wrapping-paper, $14,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. The order in which this is printed makes a difference in the appropriation. The amendment "for wrapping-paper, $14,000," should be brought back and stand in a line by itself below the twenty-third line on page 25, making line 24. Otherwise it would have relation to what follows, which should be separate. It is a misprint.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the Secretary will be directed to transpose and put that line above as a separate clause of itself, according to the suggestion of the Senator from Maine. The reading of the bill will proceed.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in section 1, on page 27, line 9, after the word "Department," to strike out "being for the fiscal year 1887;" so as to make the clause read:

Building, Department of Justice: For fitting up fire-proof record-rooms to preserve the records of the Department, $1,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, on page 28, after line 7, to insert:

For support of United States prisoners, including necessary clothing and medical aid, and transportation to place of conviction, being for the fiscal year 1887, $20,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, to strike out the clause from line 1 to line 3, inclusive, on page 29, as follows:

Miscellaneous expenses: For miscellaneous expenses, United States courts, $20,000, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1887.

Mr. BERRY. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Maine why that item is stricken out?

Mr. HALE. Because the Department of Justice came before the committee by its representative and stated that since the House of Representatives passed the bill putting this item in it had discovered that it had means enough and did not need it; and at its suggestion we struck it out.

Mr. BERRY. That is satisfactory.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in section 1, on page 29, line 7, after the word "dollars," to insert "or so much thereof as may be necessary;" so as to make the clause read:

Salary of circuit judge: For salary of the additional circuit judge in the second judicial circuit authorized by the act approved March 3, 1887, $6,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Public printing," in section 1, on page 29, after line 9, to insert:

For printing and binding for the Post-Office Department, $98,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, on page 29, to strike out the clause from line 16 to line 18, inclusive, as follows:

And the Public Printer is hereby directed to rigidly enforce the provisions of the eight-hour law in the Department under his charge.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to know why that is proposed to be stricken out.

Mr. HALE. The Senator may not be here when we reach the other stage of progress, and I will say now, in reply to his question, that in the first place the committee had no knowledge, and none was produced for its consideration, that the eight-hour law was not now being enforced in the printing department. Some inquiry into the matter led to this condition being established: There are persons in employment there who desire to work more than eight hours a day; they are working by the piece, and can do more than eight hours' work, and desire to continue as skilled and expert workmen beyond the eight hours. The committee did not wish, before further information as to how it would work, to put on a clause which might be considered as dealing with them.

In short, what I would say about it is that there is no information furnished, and the committee can learn none anywhere, indicating any need for this provision. If it is put in a law as to one department, there is no reason why it should not be made to apply to all the other departments; and the committee looked upon it as an interpolation not needed or justified by any single need, and feared that it might be construed to the disadvantage of the Government, and therefore recommended the striking of it out in order that the conferees of the House might be able to show, if they could, to the conferees of the Senate why they had put it in. We could learn nothing about it.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, if this clause were not already in the bill, but were now proposed by some individual Senator on the floor, the objection which the Senator from Maine has raised might seem to have some weight; but here the other House of Congress has evidently found some special reason for directing this Government officer, who is an officer of their own political faith, appointed by the present Administration, in regard to the rigid observance of a certain law referred to in terms, whatever may be its opinion as to the wisdom of the law. I think we may fairly presume therefore that there has been some failure to execute the law. Of course the obligation of the Public Printer is the same whether this mandate is contained in the bill or not; but it is quite obvious that the attention of Congress has been called to the need of a strict enforcement of that law in this department, and it will have the effect to quicken the sense of legal obligation. I should feel very sorry to have the clause stricken out by the Senate under the circumstances.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Will the Senate agree to the amendment?

Mr. HALE. It does not add to the force of any law to throw into an appropriation bill a direction to a particular bureau or Department that the law shall be enforced. It is to a certain degree a reflection upon the bureau or Department. The Senator certainly has not furnished any reason why this clause should be here except that it is found in the bill. The committee took the bill in all its provisions under just such limitations as that, and in other cases found the reason why it was that a clause was put in: but it found no reason why this was put in and could not find on inquiry why it was put in, and therefore, it being exceptional and not like other provisions hundreds of which we have allowed to remain because there seemed to be reasons for them, the committee have recommended the striking of it out in order that it may be investigated, in order that the conferees on the part of the House may show why it is in here. If there is good reason for it, if the law is not enforced as it ought to be, then the Senate is just as much in favor of enforcing the law as the House.

Mr. HOAR. I call for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to know to what class of employés this provision as to the Printing Office applies.

Mr. HALE. It applies, like the eight-hour law, anywhere, to everybody in employment in that bureau receiving regular daily pay. It is a question whether it might not be construed, if put in in this way, to apply to parties who are doing work by the piece. I doubt if it could, but it might be so claimed. The result of that might be, and would be if it were so applied to them, that workmen who are receiving pay for twelve hours would be obliged to stop at the end of eight hours, and a new and untried and green force would be thrown upon the office.

It has been said that one object of this clause was to get in one hundred and fifty or two hundred new, untried men, and that this is the method of doing it. The committee have not been able to find that out. There was some discussion on the other side of the Capitol, but it does not seem to throw much light on what would be done under this clause; and for these reasons the committee have concluded to strike it out.

Mr. TELLER. It seems to me that if any employés of the Department are working by the piece, the present statute does not apply to them. The present act applies only to day laborers where they work by the day. If any man chooses to work extra time and receives extra pay I do not suppose we ought to interfere with him, and I do not suppose we do by this legislation. Why should we say that the Public Printer shall comply with the law when nobody knows that he is not doing so? There is no evidence before the Senate that he is not observing the present statute on the subject.

Why it should be necessary to repeat that he shall obey a statute of this kind I can not understand. The eight-hour law is as binding in every Department where the employés are employed by the day as is any other statute. I can not understand why it should be necessary to repeat it, or why it should be necessary to infer or to suggest that it is not being enforced, unless there is some proof to that effect; and if there is some proof that it is not being done, I presume a declaration of this kind will not change matters at all.

Mr. HALE. If the Senator will allow me I will read the law as it is found in the body of the statutes. Section 3738 provides:

> Eight hours shall constitute a day's work for all laborers, workmen, and mechanics who may be employed by or on behalf of the Government of the United States.

There is no purpose, let me say here, on the part of the committee to interfere with that law. It has been well established, acceded to by everybody, and presumably has been carried out in the Departments. If it is not carried out in this department, it ought to be carried out there. If it is not carried out in any other department, it ought to be carried out. All that is desired is information on the subject.

Mr. TELLER. As far as I am concerned, I do not want to give my vote in such a way that it shall appear that I am not in favor of an observance of this law. At the same time I do not think it is quite fair for persons to assume here or anywhere else that a public officer is not observing the law unless there is some proof to that effect.

There will be an inference, I suppose, if this clause passes, that the Public Printer has not been observing the law. It may be suggested if we vote to strike it out that we think, on the other hand, it ought not to be observed. So I regret that the committee could not have given us direct information as to whether there was any necessity for this clause or not.

Mr. HALE. I do not think it is a matter of great moment one way or the other. The committee can give no more information than it has given. If there is such a disposition on the part of the Senate, as I perhaps discover that there is, I am entirely willing that it shall remain. It will do no harm.

Mr. HOAR. If I may be permitted to say a word—I will endeavor to speak within the rule of parliamentary propriety—I will state that there is on my table a report of a debate, somewhere, and the names of speakers given, which, if we were permitted to read, would give the Senate information bearing on the subject.

Mr. HALE. I have read that carefully, and I could not make head or tail of it.

Mr. HOAR. I think if it were read it would certainly throw considerable light on the necessity of the provision.

I may be permitted to say that this is a simple affirmation of the belief of Congress that an existing law, which everybody admits ought to be carried out in good faith, should be enforced in the Public Printing Office. That being the case, it turns out that the House of Representatives, which certainly can not be charged with a desire to put any slur on the officer, because he is its political friend, has found it necessary to point out in an appropriation for that office that it is the desire of Congress that that law shall be observed and enforced there as elsewhere. It seems to me that to strike out that provision would put us in a false position.

It is very well known that a great many laborers of the country think that the experiment which the eight-hour law was intended to try, as to whether, on the whole, as useful and as much work would not be obtained in the ordinary mechanical occupations of the country by eight hours' work as by the enforcement of a larger portion of the day being devoted to such work, has not been fairly and faithfully tried. For instance, some years ago in the Springfield Arsenal there was a class of work which was done upon very difficult machinery, done by skilled workmen, and to which one would have said in the first instance that the principles of the eight-hour law were peculiarly inapplicable. Some statistics were kept by the superintendent there which showed a most wonderful result. The product of those machines under a limitation of the work to eight hours considerably exceeded the amount produced by ten hours' work, all other conditions being substantially unchanged, the work being on the machines.

I tried and tried alone by specific calls upon the War Department in those days to get those facts into the possession of Congress, and for one reason or another the call was not obeyed when made by the House of Representatives. At last, however, the information came.

Whether these persons are right or wrong, they have a feeling that this experiment upon which so much of the welfare and the comfort of the working people of this country depends, has not been fairly and thoroughly carried out by all the Departments of the Government. A great many people so feel. Everybody agrees that more and better work is done by twelve hours a day than by the old custom of fifteen or sixteen hours. Everybody, I think, is now satisfied that the reduction from twelve hours to ten hours has been for the benefit of the employer of labor, the producer of manufactured articles, as well as of the workman.

There are a great many persons who believe that, taking the country through, taking any considerable occupation requiring skilled work or unskilled work, the giving to the workingmen of the country of more leisure time to see their families at a period of the day when they are not entirely exhausted, worn down in brain and body by the hard drudgery of their labor, will not only result in a comfort to them, but will result in giving a class of inventive skill and intelligent brain to the service of their employers, so that in the end the workingmen of this country will take a higher place in the race with other countries in manufacturing supremacy than they will if a larger amount of labor is exacted from them. Let this experiment be fairly and fully tried.

My honorable friend from Maine and the other members of the Committee on Appropriations will not only acquiesce in this policy, but I am sure they will be leaders in it whenever it is in any degree of peril.

As I said before, something has satisfied the House of Representatives that it was well to call the attention of this particular department of the Government to this demand and desire of the workingmen of this country. They put in the clause. It can not do any harm, and it seems to me that the striking out of the clause now would be an indication on the part of the Senate that we are indifferent to the desires of the workingmen or we do not mean that the letter or spirit of the present legislation be extended to the Printing Office. I hope my honorable friend from Maine will let the clause remain.

Mr. HALE. If I can be allowed to go on with the bill, I am willing that the clause should stay in.

Mr. REAGAN. I did not hear the remarks of the Senator from Maine, and therefore am liable to have misunderstood him. He has read a section of the law stating that eight hours shall be a day's work under the Government. Now, the House of Representatives sends us a bill containing a clause that is curious in its wording:

> And the Public Printer is hereby directed to rigidly enforce the provisions of the eight-hour law in the department under his charge.

It may be that we shall make a mistake if we adopt this language. A very large part of the work that is done in the Printing Office is piecework. With this language that the eight-hour law shall be rigidly enforced, will the Public Printer be required to suspend work as to all the employés of his office when they have labored eight hours? If so, the service of that department may be very seriously crippled.

It seems to me a strange sort of legislation, after a law has been passed, to tell a department of the Government that it must rigidly enforce that law. If there has been a failure to enforce the law, there is another mode of getting at it, and the officer who violates the law, who disregards its provisions, should be held accountable for his conduct, and not another act passed saying that he must rigidly enforce the law when the law makes it his duty to enforce that law without that adjective added to it.

It seems to me that whenever the labor question comes up in any form, whatever is most extravagant, whatever is most extreme, whatever is most extraordinary seems to command our approbation. I do not think that is right. Certainly no one sympathizes with the labor of this country more than I do; and yet I never reached a point where I felt that because I would protect the rights of the laborer I would commit myself to every act of folly that ignorance could demand of me. I do not think it is our duty to do that.

I think the Senate Committee on Appropriations did right in striking out this extreme provision. It adds nothing to the law unless it adds a provision which will cripple and embarrass the administration of the Printing Office by making the Public Printer suspend labor at the termination of eight hours and stop piecework, and thereby embarrass the department in doing the work which is required of it. If this clause is liable to that construction——

Mr. HOAR. The Senator will pardon me. This clause certainly is not liable to any such construction as that. It is simply the old law.

Mr. REAGAN. The old law does not say that. The old law says eight hours shall constitute a day's work. This says that law must be rigidly enforced. I say if it means anything more than the old law meant, it means that the Public Printer shall suspend all work at the end of eight hours each day; and if he does so the large number of employés who do piecework would have to suspend operations, to their very great injury as well as to the injury of the public service.

So then, altogether, I think the clause is entirely unnecessary, and may result in operating injuriously to the service. I think it is one of those extraordinary things that we are liable to do under a sort of pressure that it seems nobody is able to withstand in either branch of Congress.

Mr. BLAIR. This eight-hour law, enacted by the United States and placed on the statute-book with as much definiteness and solemnity as a law against crime, has been deliberately and persistently and wickedly violated by the executive officers almost from the beginning. Never has there been any considerable degree of success in extorting from these unwilling executive officers of the Government compliance with their own duty in this regard.

As the bill comes to us from the House of Representatives with an admonition of a statutory nature in it which would have the effect to teach these men that it is their duty to obey the laws of the land, I for one am rejoiced at it, and I should regret exceedingly that this clause should be stricken from the bill. I hope that whenever the proper time comes before the Senate, the proposed amendment will be rejected.

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] was speaking of the matter when I came in, and he touched with force upon the general considerations that led to the enactment of the law; and I assure the Senator from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] that he is conflicting with the intelligence and the convictions of a great many minds as able and as well informed as his own if he undertakes to say that the eight-hour law is based upon the foolish demands of an ignorant people.

Mr. REAGAN. I never said that.

Mr. BLAIR. Or that this provision is to be found in this bill in compliance with the demands of ignorance. The laboring people of this country who desire the enforcement of this law which the judgment of the country has enacted, are as intelligent a body of men as there is to be found, and among them, as I know from personal acquaintance with them, are as many intelligent men, and I had almost said a larger proportion of intelligent men than there is in the Senate to-day, and they are not to be derided nor scoffed at nor sneered down by anything that may be said here or elsewhere; and the sooner those who represent the American people come to understand that the better it will be for the nation as a whole.

Mr. President, there has been pending in this and the other branch of Congress for years a claim by some employés of the United States for compensation for the extra hours they were compelled to work, in order to obtain any work, by executive officers of the United States. There have been reports in favor of the claims from time to time, but never as yet have those claims resulted in law or in justice to these men; but the claims are here, and the Senate and the House and the country will be troubled with claims of this description just so long as the executive officers of the United States undertake to ignore this law, and if there can be placed anything in the way of admonition in this appropriation bill, or any other bill whatever, that shall prevent the arising of such claims in future by reason of the determination of executive officers not to enforce the law, I for one shall be highly gratified.

Mr. EVARTS. Mr. President, I am quite ready to acquiesce in what the Senator from Maine has said, that he is not disposed to prevent the insertion of this clause if the Senate desire it. I only wish that if the Senate desires it it should be known upon what ground they desire it.

The law which has been read from the statute-book is an enactment, and requires obedience to it from all who have to do with the execution of that law. It also belongs to the President of the United States to see that that law, like all other laws, is executed. It belongs to Congress in re-enactment to make its law more precise and peremptory, and, if need be, to re-enforce it by penalty; and that is law-making and additional law-making.

And if it be found that this eight hours' labor law, which should be enforced in the interest of the laborer, and in the interest of legislation that laws should be enforced, and in the interest of the Executive that he should enforce the laws, if there was now proposed some further legislation in the nature of enactment or in the nature of additional penalties to the existing law, I would favor it. But it does not belong to the United States Legislature as represented in the two Houses of Congress to give reprimand or admonition or advice. It is precisely one of the functions that does not belong to us. If this Printer needs to be reprimanded or if he needs to be aroused, it should come from the Executive or such subordinate officers of his as have to do with the question whether this Printer has violated this law and will violate it.

Now, with these views of mine I am ready to vote for a penalty to be put upon this Public Printer if he has violated the law; I am willing to re-enforce the general statutory law that shall affix a penalty against the head or managers of all Departments if the law is not executed; but I do not wish to see a derogation from the law-making force that is expressed in the statute books-now by adding to it an admonition or reprimand. Punishment is all that belongs to us to provide for if legislation is needed, and for the President of the United States to see that the existing laws are complied with. But, as I have said, if when it comes to the point the Senate wishes to engage in reprimand and in injunction and in advice, then let it so stand, but let it stand, not as legislation, but as a part of the executive government which really does not belong to us.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, the Senator from New Hampshire said this statute had been persistently violated. I do not know whether he means that it is being violated to-day or not. I know that when he says it has been persistently violated he goes entirely too far, for under the late administration this eight-hour law was enforced. I believe it was enforced everywhere; I can certainly speak for one Department of the Government, not having a great many of the employés of the class named, but having some, that it was rigidly enforced in that Department for three years at least, and I believed it was enforced in the other Departments. I have no information that it is not now being enforced in all the Departments of the Government. I believe myself in the enforcement of every law that is on the statute-book. I do not understand that the executive officers have any discretion in the matter. A plain statute must be obeyed.

I agree with the Senator from Massachusetts that in very many classes of business eight hours a day is as much time as a man can profitably employ. In the mines in Colorado eight hours is a day's work. A man who contracts for this work is expected to work eight hours and no more, without reference to any statute. Such is the custom there. Eight hours is found to be all the time a man can work at certain classes of work out there, unless on piecework he can labor longer.

If it is intended by this provision to say that the law shall be enforced against piecework, I do not think that would be right. I think that every man who works should have the right to work eight hours or ten hours if he thinks he can labor ten hours. I would make the day's work eight hours, and then if a man chooses to work two hours more for additional compensation, he certainly ought to be allowed to do that if he has the skill and ability and his employer is willing to pay him for his additional time. If these men are working by the piece, I think it is within the provisions of the law that the Public Printer shall pay them for ten hours' work. I do not think he ought to work them unnecessarily because it would be profitable to do so; but if a printer says he can work ten hours, that is his business. The statute did not contemplate, in my judgment, a case of that kind; I should be against it if that was the purpose; but as it does not seem to me that that can be the construction of a simple declaration that we believe in the eight-hour system for Government employés, I think the committee had better let the clause stand in the bill.

Mr. MANDERSON. If I believed with the Senator from Texas that the result of this proposed striking out of the words we find in the bill in reference to the eight-hour system in the Public Printing Office would be to prohibit the pieceworkers from working more than eight hours per day, I certainly would follow his lead; but I do not think it will have any such operation. Most of the work done in the Public Printing Office is work done either by the hour or by the piece. The compositors, as we all know, work by the amount of matter composed, measured by the thousand ems. Those who fold and stitch the pamphlets or the bound books work by the piece, so much for folding; and most of the other employés work by the hour. There are really very few that work by the day. As I understand the operation under the general law that is referred to by the Senator from Massachusetts, the rule has been in the Public Printing Office that where there are employés who are employed by the day they work for eight hours only, and I certainly have heard no complaint from any one employed in the Public Printing Office in any capacity that this general law has been violated in any degree. I think the effect of leaving these words in the bill will simply be to challenge the attention of the Public Printer to the general law and that it shall continue to be enforced. I think it cuts a very unimportant figure one way or the other; but as it has been placed in the bill by the House and the attention of the Public Printer challenged to it, I see no objection to its remaining. If, however, it is to have the effect of prohibiting a man from working more than eight hours who desires to do it, working either by the hour or by the piece, I think it would be a very objectionable piece of legislation.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President——

Mr. REAGAN. I ask the Senator from Maine to allow me one moment.

Mr. HALE. Certainly.

Mr. REAGAN. It seems to me that we are in a very extraordinary position. We have a law fixing the day's work in Government employment at eight hours. We have no complaint that it has been violated; no one pretends that the present Public Printer has been violating that law; and yet we find the proposition before us to call upon an officer against whom no complaint is made to rigidly enforce the eight-hour law. I have said that it seems to me this clause may bear the construction that if that law is rigidly enforced it may prevent those engaged in piecework from doing the work they want to do and earning the money they desire to earn. Whether it will have that effect or not, if we can conceive of anything more ridiculous than this propsition, I do not know what it can be. The law is in existence. We tell an officer, without complaint of maladministration, to rigidly enforce that law without any statement that he is not rigidly enforcing it. If the Senate can afford to do so ridiculous a thing as this without cause, simply because it may pander to an improper feeling, I suppose I can bear my part of the ridicule.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. HALE. There is evidently a feeling in the Senate that to strike out this clause might be considered as interfering in some way with the execution of the eight-hour law, and as in some degree committing the Senate to that proposition. I have no thought that the Senate desires to take that position; and as it is of so little importance, I do not think it is worth while for me, at any rate, to take more time of the Senate; and if the Senator from Massachusetts will withdraw his call for the yeas and nays, I will, so far as I am concerned, let it go.

Mr. HOAR. I withdraw the call for the yeas and nays, with the leave of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the withdrawal of the call for the yeas and nays on this question?

Mr. REAGAN. I want the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is objection.

Mr. REAGAN. I withdraw the call for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will again ask, is there objection to the withdrawal of the demand for the yeas and nays? The Chair hears none, and the call is withdrawn.

Mr. HAWLEY. I have been unfortunately out during most of this debate. I should like to have it distinctly understood whether the purpose of this enactment is to forbid a man to work more than eight hours a day. The Committee on Appropriations certainly has some theory on that subject. I have been seven years a member of the Committee on Printing, and to the very best of my recollection I never have heard one solitary word of complaint from any being involved, in any rank or position in the Printing Office, concerning the enforcement or non-enforcement of the eight-hour law. If this clause has any meaning whatever, it is an attempt to forbid any man to work more than eight hours; and therefore in behalf of the workingman I protest against it, and shall be glad to record my vote against it. It seems to me a piece of demagogism, and nothing else.

Mr. HALE. Let me suggest to the Senator one thing which may relieve the Senator's doubts and relieve mine. I have some doubt. The eight-hour law is so clear, so short, so bald, declaring that eight hours' work shall be a day's labor under Government employment, that it might be considered as covering piecework, and I do not think it ought to be so. Now, if an amendment is moved which I have prepared, declaring that "nothing in this shall be considered as interfering with piecework," it will save the Senator's doubts and save my doubts and save the doubts of others.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, it often happens that the Printer is obliged to ask the men to work more than eight hours, and as a general rule, if they are in good health and have families to support, they are very glad of the chance to do it, because it gives a handsome addition to their day's wages. It being purely voluntary, it being certain they will get the price of a day's work for eight hours' work, to direct them not to work any more is an interference with the natural right of the workingman, and the workingman who advocates this change in the law unwittingly subjects himself to a condition of slavery, and he will be sorry for such legislation.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator from Connecticut is quite ready to cast doubts on the motives of others in this matter.

Mr. HAWLEY. I did not know that the Senator from Massachusetts had anything to do with it. I spoke quite personally about it. It strikes me as an effort of demagogism. I repeat that remark.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator will hardly repeat it in my time without violating the rules of the Senate.

This proposition of political economy, whether wise or foolish, whether the proposition be demagogism or the opposition to it is shallow-pated assurance, is one which comes from a source where demagogism is not often found. Such profound thinkers as John Stuart Mill, such practical reasoners as Thomas B. Macaulay were among the early advocates of this doctrine in the manufacturing legislation of England, and it is a doctrine which has made its way.

The same kind of speech which the Senator from Connecticut thinks it courteous to indulge in here in regard to opinions which differ from his own was made by the friends of the old English factory-system when it was endeavored to put an end to the labor of children and women in factories who worked fifteen, sixteen, or seventeen hours in the day, and the same discussion and the same contest and the same opposing and conflicting reasonings were heard as the time of the day's work of the laboring men in manufacturing, mining, and other mechanical occupations in this country and in Europe gradually came down from sixteen to fifteen, fourteen, twelve, eleven, and now it has reached ten and is coming to eight hours a day. It is a principle which stands on solid ground both of reason and experience.

The experience of mankind has shown that where the workingmen of an intelligent and instructed country work faithfully for eight hours a day in most of the mechanical occupations and have the remainder of their time for intercourse with their families, for reading, for learning their political duties, for attending lyceums and lectures, for resorting to the public libraries and social meetings, they are not only better workers of the country of which they are citizens, but they turn out more work as the result in the manufacturing employment to which their lives are given. You have, instead of the tired, worn-out jade going to his home, with every faculty of brain and body worn out and fatigued, a skillful, inventive, thoughtful, reflecting brain. You have good citizenship in a man whose leisure is one of the luxuries of life, one almost of the necessities of life to a healthy and educated brain.

As I said before, this experiment has been tried and its results recorded. It is the opinion of some of the most thoughtful and intelligent employers of labor as well as of the representatives of the workingmen, and it has been desired, that this experiment should be tried, not to be left to individual manufacturers who are conducting their business in constant competition and strife with others, but that it should be tried in behalf alike of the labor and the manufacture of the country by the Government, and whether it be right or wrong that the Government should try it in its capacity of a large employer of labor. It is the law of the land, and what Senator will rise here in his place and say that this law should not be faithfully, honestly, liberally, and fairly construed and executed?

Mr. HAWLEY. If the Senator will just allow me—I shall reply more at length hereafter—I will say that I never said anything of that kind at all; nothing approaching it.

Mr. HOAR. I was not imputing anything of that kind to the Senator. I said no Senator on the floor would say it.

I do not see why a Senator is not at liberty to rise here and utter the conviction which to the extent of his own ability, however poor, he has reached on this subject, and why he is not entitled to ask of his brethren and friends here to answer his arguments, and not simply to content themselves with sneers and charges of demagogism for the position he happens to take.

Mr. STEWART obtained the floor.

Mr. HAWLEY. Will the Senator kindly allow me a few moments?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. HAWLEY. Now, particularly, I should like to say something.

Mr. STEWART. Very well.

Mr. HAWLEY. I was a good deal surprised by the remarks and the tone of the remarks of my friend from Massachusetts. It was my misfortune not to be here during this debate, but it was my good fortune to know something on the subject, notwithstanding my temporary absence from the Senate. So anything that I said in the way of severe criticism had no aim at him whatever. Nineteen-twentieths of what he said meets my hearty concurrence, as to the congratulations the world has a right to offer itself upon the gradual reduction in the hours of labor.

I rejoice at it. I rejoice to see the workingmen of all nations having the sense, the force, and the energy to combine for the purpose of reducing the hours of labor. It is a great blessing indeed that men who used to work sixteen, and then fourteen, and then twelve hours—men and women within our recollection—and then ten hours, can now get a good living at eight hours' work. They are sharing in the benefits of the wonderful inventions of the age; they are sharing in the benefits of the righteous, Christian, and sensible legislation of Great Britain and America and other countries. In all that I believe.

I think when the world comes to a proper adjustment of labor, a proper sense of duties and responsibilities the world over, we shall all be able to live on even less than eight hours a day of work; but that has nothing to do with the point I was aiming at, and I thought I was clear enough.

I said that for seven years on the Printing Committee I never heard one word of complaint that our law was not enforced in the Printing Office, and they have most vigorous and energetic trades-unions there; and if this provision had any meaning whatever it was to forbid a man's working more than eight hours. There, I conceive, we pass across the line into an entirely distinct field.

Some men are able to work more than eight hours a day without injury to themselves in any respect. More than eight hours' work is not offered every man every day in the Government Printing Office; but I can easily suppose the case of a man with a wife and two, three, four, five, or six children, who having worked his eight hours for his $3.20, or his eight hours as a laborer for a less rate, is, by reason of sickness in his family or unusual demands of any kind, very glad of an opportunity to work two hours more to-day, and two to-morrow, and two the next day.

I only said that which I repeat, in the interest of the workingmen, that if we attempt to say that no man shall work more than eight hours a day there, it is, in my judgment of the matter, a piece of demagogism; and the workingman, soon or late, who indulges in that kind of legislation will find that he is hurting himself by it, for he is relegating to the dominion of legislation so complete and thorough a control over the hours of labor and all that concerns him that by and by there will be a reaction and the next door to a revolution against the Government that goes into a man's house and controls everything that he does, the railroads that he travels on, for example, and the savings-banks that he uses, and the hours of his labor, and not only tells him that he is free to work eight hours, but that he must not work another hour. But suppose the man goes home and cultivates five or ten acres of good land during the summer by work over hours. He is then getting the advantage of the lazy man who thinks he will not work anywhere more than eight hours. According to your theory, we can step in and forbid him to cultivate a handsome garden after working-hours. It shows there is a limit to this thing.

I rejoice in the general movement in that direction in all possible ways, but I warn you not to attempt to tell the workingman what he shall not do in all these cases.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Did the Chair understand the Senator from Connecticut when on the floor on a previous occasion to object to withdrawing the demand for the yeas and nays on this question?

Mr. HAWLEY. I did not think about it particularly. I said I was perfectly willing to record my vote. I have done so already by this speech. That answers my purpose.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, I had the honor to vote for the original law fixing eight hours as a day's labor on the public works of the United States, and there was a good deal said then about demagogism. I have watched the operation of the law, and I have never had occasion to regret my vote.

I think that eight hours a day is as much as a laboring man ought to work. I believe that in the course of a lifetime he will accomplish much more by working eight hours than by working a longer time daily. Besides, he needs recreation and needs time for improvement. I believe the example set by the Government has had a good effect on the country, and I am glad that I voted for the law.

I do not entirely agree with the Senator from Connecticut in his declaration that we should furnish by indirection more than eight hours' labor to a single individual per day. The Government is employing men, and it says to them, "Here, we will give you a day's pay for eight hours' work." There may be those who would like to get more than a day's pay and do more than eight hours' work. Is there anything wrong in the Government saying, "That is all we will furnish to any man; we will give him a day's labor, and if he wants to do more than eight hours' work let him do it somewhere else?" There are a great many people who are not employed, and who would esteem it a great boon to get into Government employ and do eight hours' work; but if you can avoid the law by piecework, your eight-hour law does not amount to very much.

There has been an effort on the part of many a Government official, in order to make a good showing as to what can be accomplished, to let work out by the piece and by contract, and evade the law in every way. Inasmuch as there is not labor for all, there are many good printers undoubtedly who have families who are suffering to-day in the country, and why should the law be violated by indirection by giving work out by the piece or by the job to avoid it? That can be easily done. In all Government work you can get around the law if you are disposed to do it; but I think that the Government having work to perform should distribute it on such a basis as to give each laboring man who comes and wants employment eight hours' work, and give him the pay for eight hours, and if he wants to do more let him cultivate his garden; let him do some other work besides Government work, if he is so disposed.

The object of limiting work to eight hours is to give the man an opportunity to do other things, but it is not intended that the law should be evaded by contracts and piecework.

I am decidedly in favor of this legislation if it will stop piecework and put all who come on an equality and give a larger number of men employment.

It seems to me that the provision ought to be more explicit. The only objection I have to it is that it is not definite, and does not state exactly what is meant. I always think a law ought to state precisely what is meant. I do not know how it would be construed, but I think instead of qualifying it and saying it shall not mean anything it ought to be a declaration against piecework that would avoid the law.

That is my view, because I think that the passage of the original law was for the purpose of setting the example to other employers of the country, and enabling the laboring man to improve his condition and not exhaust himself in a few years by hard labor, by allowing him to work no more than is good for his health and for the general prosperity of the community. As I said before, in a lifetime, at eight hours a day, a man accomplishes much more than he can if he puts in twelve or fourteen hours a day, and is destroyed by hard labor before he has reached middle age.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. HALE. Before the Senate votes on striking the provision out I wish to offer an amendment, which, I think, improves it. The discussion in the Senate has already shown that there are different views upon the eight-hour law. The amendment which I offer will leave the provision of the House so that it shall not apply to existing conditions in the Printing Office where work is performed by piece or extra work in the night. My amendment is to add:

That this provision shall not be so construed as to interfere with piecework or extra work in said department.

In the phraseology I have employed I have consulted with the members of the Committee on Printing, so as to cover that kind of work now done in the Printing Office where a man is employed by the piece, not by the day, and may if he chooses work more than eight hours.

Mr. HAWLEY. Allow me to make a suggestion to the Senator from Maine.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut will suspend until the amendment may be read at the desk. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. At the end of line 18 it is proposed to add the following proviso:

That this provision shall not be so construed as to interfere with piecework or extra work in said department.

Mr. HAWLEY. I suggest the phrase "voluntary extra work." I do not want to command a man to work over eight hours. He is entitled to his day's pay at the end of eight hours. Say "voluntary extra work."

Mr. HALE. I meant, of course, to include that idea.

Mr. HAWLEY. That is the whole of my mind.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maine modifies his amendment.

Mr. HALE. Let the word "voluntary" precede the word "extra."

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I desire to say a few words, inasmuch as the Senator from Maine has proposed an amendment.

The provision inserted in the bill as it came from the House of Representatives, I think the committee generally understood, did not change existing law in any sense. I should like to ask the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], who has given great attention to this subject, whether he understands the provision as it stands in the bill as it came from the House to in any sense change existing laws? The Senator answers me sotto voce that it does not.

Now, I should like to know whether the provision as it stands applies to those persons who are engaged in the Government Printing Office, working by the thousand ems, which is the usual way for printers to work, or whether it changes at all the existing status there as respects those who work by the hour, which is another method of employment?

Mr. HOAR. It does not.

Mr. ALLISON. It does not. So I understand, and so I understood. That is to say, the provision in the bill as it stood originally did not change the existing law as respects what shall constitute a day's work, nor did it interfere with any existing arrangement as respects work by the hour or piece. I so construed the clause, and the Committee on Appropriations so construed it.

Inasmuch as there was no condition in the Public Printing Office to which this provision could apply unless it changed existing law, and inasmuch as it was intended to be a law and therefore out of order in the Senate, which would make it impracticable or impossible for us in the Senate to amend it by a jot or a tittle, and we could not even have changed this phraseology under our rules, because it in no sense relates to an appropriation, the committee proposed to strike it out.

It was disclosed by the debate in the other House, if I am permitted to speak of what occurred in the other House—I believe I am not—but the debate elsewhere discloses that this provision had no purpose whatever unless it had the purpose to change the existing eight-hour law as respects the right to employ men by the hour. Therefore we said that under no condition in the Senate could we change the law so as to make it effective according to the mind, intent, and purpose of its promoters. So, as has been our custom, we struck the provision out of the bill simply because it proposed to re-enact a law that was already in existence upon the statute-books with all its force and vigor.

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR] in the course of this debate, as I understand him, promotes this provision because he says there have grown up great abuses here. If there are abuses under the eight-hour law, as I have no doubt there are, it is not within the province of the Committee on Appropriations, under the rules of this body, to deal with them. We have had for many years in this body a committee especially devoted to the great subject of caring for the interests of labor.

If the law now upon our statute-book is violated in its spirit and its essence in the office of the Public Printer, or in any Department of the Government, or in any place where the Government of the United States employs labor, I desire for one that the heavy hand of the law and of the proper committees of this body shall be placed upon those Departments, and not that we shall proceed here to re-enact a mere naked provision which it is agreed by Senators on this floor will not change by the dotting of an "i" or the crossing of a "t" the existing law. The Public Printer to-day is enforcing the eight-hour law, unless you propose that he can not under the eight-hour law employ men by the hour, or by the thousand ems if they be printers.

Now, the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] comes in with a new provision which is intended to construe the law, which is intended to give it perhaps a different meaning. According to the Senator from Massachusetts it does not add to the provision at all, because the Senator from Massachusetts said that it could not be construed to mean that the Public Printer shall not employ by the hour.

Mr. HOAR. I did not say that.

Mr. ALLISON. I submit to Senators that upon these appropriation bills——

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator pardon me for a moment?

Mr. ALLISON. I will pardon the Senator. I withdraw the statement, of course; but I understood the Senator to place that construction upon the law.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator allow me one sentence?

Mr. ALLISON. After I state what I understood the Senator to say. I understood the Senator from Massachusetts to say that this provision in the bill would not change the existing law as respects the question of the employment of men by the hour. Did I misunderstand the Senator?

Mr. HOAR. That is what I said.

Mr. ALLISON. So I understood the Senator.

Mr. HOAR. If the existing law prohibits that, this leaves it to be applied. If the existing law does not prohibit that, it leaves it to be applied, and within that limitation, and that only, I understand it as the Senator has stated, that this provision could not be construed as requiring the Public Printer to deal with piecework. I only say that this provision will call his attention to his obligation to enforce the law as it exists, and that it makes no change whatever in that law.

Mr. ALLISON. So I understand. The point I submit is, if we are dealing with this question as legislators should deal with it, if there is an impediment either in the language of the statute or in the existing enforcement of it by the Government or any of its branches, then let us address ourselves as Senators to the removal of that impediment, and not play with it by a naked provision in an appropriation bill.

That is all I have to say in respect to this question; and I say that to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART], who speaks in complimentary words of the eight-hour law. I agree with him, but if it is subject to the construction which is universally placed on it in every Department of the Government—namely, that men may be employed by the hour—then if we desire to change that let us change it by statute and not by a pretense, which is nothing, on an appropriation bill.

If any Senator would rise in his place in this body he would be declared out of order for proposing this provision. How often has the Senate Committee on Appropriations been lectured in this body, and by prominent men in it, in its effort to restrain and take care of appropriations in these bills because, forsooth, we put on provisions which might be construed into legislative enactments.

I care nothing about this provision, whether it is put out or left in, because I regard it as of no moment one way or the other; but I am somewhat afraid that if the Senator from Maine insists on his amendment we shall then get into a discussion of what ought to be the law, rather than what is the law.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator from Iowa, it seems to me, still overlooks the position in which the Senate is found by the fact that the other House has done this thing. If this were proposed in the first instance in the Senate, the argument of my honorable friend from Iowa would have great force, as of course every argument that comes from that source always has great force; but here is the case of a large body of men, many of them in humble life, but men having a deep interest in the honest and fair trial of this experiment. A feeling has grown up (whether right or wrong I do not say; but the presence of this clause in the bill put in by the House of Representatives on solemn and thorough discussion shows that the feeling exists in important quarters entitled to respect) that there is a practice of violating or evading or avoiding the law, and perhaps for the sake of soothing that feeling or for the sake of preventing any repetition of such an attempt the House of Representatives takes occasion in making an appropriation for a particular department of the Government to say, "We desire to emphasize the purpose of Congress that that law is to be punctiliously observed."

I agree that it does not change any existing law. I agree that if piecework or work by the hour or work by any other method of contract not by the day has been lawful in the past, it will remain lawful in the future. It does not affect the existing law in the least; but the House of Representatives having, in the face of this disturbed feeling in the minds of the persons interested, taken occasion to reiterate and emphasize its purpose that that old law, whatever it means, be scrupulously obeyed, it seems to me for the Senate now to strike it out leaves the matter in a very different position than it would be in if we were simply rejecting an original proposition to put it in. That is my position.

Mr. ALLISON. As I said, I do not care whether this provision is stricken out or left in. The committee in dealing with this question saw nothing in it as it was proposed. They had no power to make an amendment, because it would have been out of order in the Senate. All I wanted to do was to call attention to the fact, which is perfectly well known to everybody, that this provision amounts to nothing, except it be a mere monition to the Public Printer to do what he is not doing now, according to every statement made on this floor.

Mr. HOAR. Nobody knows whether he is doing it or not.

Mr. ALLISON. Everybody says he is; all the persons interested say so.

Mr. HOAR. The fact that it is claimed that the law has not been enforced in its spirit in the Public Printing Office is evidenced enough to my mind and to my purpose by the fact that the House of Representatives has inserted this monition in the bill. It seems to me that is enough for us to act upon. Whether it be true or not, there is a claim coming from a quarter entitled to respect that it is true, and that without regard to putting any construction on the law whatever. The House of Representatives, without communicating to us the evidence or the reasons on which it has acted, has declared that it thinks proper to make this emphatic declaration of its purpose to have the law maintained. It seems to me that it would be a positive injury to the cause which the law was enacted to advance if the Senate should strike it out.

It is well known that there are men representing the labor organizations who are in attendance in Washington this winter with the intent to procure legislation to compensate laborers who have been employed on certain important Government works for the deprivation of wages which they suffered under what they regard as an invasion of the law years ago. The agents of the workmen at the Springfield Arsenal are writing to my colleague this winter; they have written recently, if I am not mistaken; and other persons of high character and standing, with nothing but a sincere desire to get the rights of the body of men to whom they belong, have been here in person and have had hearings before the committee of which my honorable friend from New Hampshire is chairman. In that condition of things, for the Senate to look to see whether they think one construction or another of the law ought to be made, to see whether this theory or that theory on which the law was originally based and originally proposed be sound, seems to me entirely unimportant. If the House of Representatives have thought fit, whether we know their reason or not at this time, to emphasize their desire to adhere to that experiment until it is fairly and thoroughly tried, we ought to agree to it; and that is all there is to this question.

Mr. EVARTS. Mr. President, I am opposed to the qualifying amendment offered by the Senator from Maine. I oppose the clause as it now reads as not being legislation at all. I believe in the opinion of the Senator from Massachusetts; he concedes that it is nothing but a monition. Now, we do not pass monitions through the two Houses of Congress. If we are to address a monition it must be to those who are charged with the execution of the laws, and they are the President of the United States and those under him in authority.

But the amendment now proposed by the Senator from Maine is a qualification not only of this monition, but a qualification of the law as it now reads on the statute-book. If it means anything, it is when occasion is sought for enforcing the existing law by monition, you put in a clause saying "We do not mean by that that you can not have people there working more than eight hours." What does the law as it now reads mean? The laborers have a right to contend, as the Senator from Maine contends, that the meaning of it is, if there is more labor needed by any of the Departments, that they shall have more laborers, and not more labor.

Whether that be the rightful construction of the law as it now reads or not, I am not in favor, under the guise of a monition, of saying that the law as it reads shall be enforced, and that it shall be accompanied by a qualifying reduction of the force and meaning of the law itself.

Is it true that at this Printing Office or any other department of labor a tariff may be issued: labor for eight hours, so many dollars; labor for nine hours, so many dollars; labor for ten hours, so many dollars?

Is that in accordance with the law as it now reads on the statute-book, and would it be an obedience to the monition that that law shall be rigidly enforced? I do not know as a legislator what the difference is in law-making between laws that are rigidly and laws that are not rigidly enforced. Is the penalty for not enforcing a law rigidly to be six months' imprisonment, and the penalty for not enforcing it moderately so much less or so much more? I would put more on it for administering it only moderately.

Mr. President, we are right square upon the matter that as it reads this clause does not alter legislation. Then it is not legislation. It is not appropriation, that is agreed; it is monition; and the monition is that if there is need of enforcing existing law it is to be a monition by penalties that are to be increased.

But as to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Maine, while I was willing that this piece of monition should go in the statute-book if Senators thought proper, I can not consent to the qualified influence upon the existing law given by that amendment.

Mr. HOAR. I raise the question of order upon the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Upon the amendment of the Senator from Maine?

Mr. HALE. Will the Senator wait for one moment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts withdraw his point of order for a moment?

Mr. HOAR. I do.

Mr. HALE. I was going to say that I would withdraw the amendment or I would try to fix it to suit Senators. I will do anything to get a vote and get along with the bill. I have nothing more to say, and I do not mean to say another word, because I do not belong to that limited band of Senators whose duty it will be for the next three months to look out for all these great public questions. I want to vote on the bill. I want to finish it. I want the money which has been held back for a long time to go to the proper beneficiaries; and I wish these gentlemen to select a time when the great cause of labor can be discussed by them fully in fair competition, and not on this bill. So I withdraw the amendment and will take the vote on the original proposition of the committee.

Mr. REAGAN. To what amendment does the Senator refer?

Mr. HALE. I ask the Senator to let it go and let us have a vote.

Mr. REAGAN. If the Senator will allow me, I will try to dispose of it in another way. I make the question of order upon it based upon the third paragraph of Rule XVI.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maine withdraws his amendment to the clause in the bill proposed to be stricken out by the committee.

Mr. HALE. And I withdraw my objection to the clause in the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maine withdraws his amendment. What question of order does the Senator from Texas raise?

Mr. REAGAN. Can the Senator withdraw the amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Of course he can.

Mr. HAWLEY. That does not withdraw the amendment of the committee?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No; the amendment of the committee is pending; but the Senator from Maine had offered an amendment to perfect the language proposed to be stricken out.

Mr. REAGAN. That language he can withdraw; but can he withdraw the committee's amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. By no means can he.

Mr. REAGAN. Then it is upon the committee's amendment I make the point of order, in order to save further time.

Mr. HALE. I can not prevent any Senator from calling for the yeas and nays on the proposition, and if the Senate sustain him in the call we shall have the yeas and nays entered on the records. That is the Senator's right, undoubtedly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would state to the Senator from Texas that the amendment reported by the committee, striking the clause out of the bill, is not subject to a question of order. The committee had clearly the right to propose such an amendment, and that amendment in the opinion of the Chair is in order.

Mr. REAGAN. I know the superior knowledge of the rules of the Senate of the occupant of the chair over mine, but I ask leave to read paragraph 3 of Rule XVI:

> No amendment which proposes general legislation shall be received to any general appropriation bill;—
>
> No matter by whom moved—
> nor shall any amendment not germane or relevant to the subject-matter contained in the bill be received; nor shall any amendment to any item or clause of such bill be received which does not directly relate thereto.

Now, if the Chair will allow me, the amendment submitted by the committee is not germane to the bill; it is not relevant to any matter in the bill, and it proposes general legislation.

Mr. DAWES. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Texas what is the amendment proposed by the committee? It is to strike out certain words which are in the bill. I do not see how that can be affected by the rule.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair in disposing of the question of order raised by the Senator from Texas would say——

Mr. REAGAN. I was mistaken in the point of view that I presented. My objection is applicable to the clause in the bill, and not to the motion to strike it out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas, then, withdraws the question of order?

Mr. REAGAN. I do.

Mr. SHERMAN. I desire, as soon as the Senator from Maine will allow, to submit a motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. HALE. I shall not oppose such a motion if we can get off from this subject. I am afraid to have it go over night, because nobody can tell what may be launched upon us in the morning on this great question. Therefore, if the Senate can dispose of this matter now and here, I will consent, so far as I have the management of the bill, to the Senator making his motion. Let us have a vote upon the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is the Senate ready for the question on the amendment reported by the committee? Senators in favor of striking out the language in the bill as it came from the House of Representatives will say "ay."

The question being put, there were, on a division—ayes 19, noes 17; no quorum voting.

Mr. BLAIR and Mr. STEWART called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President, as a member of the Committee on Appropriations I agreed to recommend to the Senate to strike out this provision in the bill as it came from the House of Representatives——

Mr. SHERMAN. Will the Senator from Maryland yield to a motion to proceed to the consideration of executive business? I do not wish to interfere with the debate, but the proper time has arrived for an executive session. I submit the motion, with the consent of the Senator from Maryland.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Before putting the motion, the Chair will lay before the Senate sundry bills from the House of Representatives for reference.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills, received from the House of Representatives, were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (H. R. 85) granting a pension to Mrs. Mary Jane Case;

A bill (H. R. 4835) for the relief of Everard Flynn;
A bill (H. R. 5499) granting an increase of pension to Frederick Augustin;
A bill (H. R. 5766) granting a pension to Miss Capitola V. Harsh, daughter of Daniel Harsh;
A bill (H. R. 6343) to increase the pension of Nancy Rains, the oldest Revolutionary pensioner on the rolls, she being nearly ninety-six years of age;
A bill (H. R. 6732) granting a pension to Leora E. Gear; and
A bill (H. R. 7237) granting a pension to Clarissa Harvey.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Claims:

A bill (H. R. 331) for the relief of David Meriwether;
A bill (H. R. 3766) for the relief of William Pfaender;
A bill (H. R. 2699) for the relief of the heirs of the late Solomon Spitzer;
A bill (H. R. 3617) for the relief of John C. Adams, administrator of Joseph Adams, deceased; and A bill (H. R. 7319) for the relief of Emory R. Seward.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Commerce:

A bill (H. R. 1818) for construction of a revenue-cutter for Charleston, S. C., in maintenance of the service, to replace the United States revenue-cutter McCulloch; and

A bill (H. R. 7348) granting to the city of Grand Forks, Dak., the right to build two free bridges across Red River.

The following bills and joint resolution were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs:

A bill (H. R. 2161) for the relief of Thomas J. Taylor;

A bill (H. R. 6106) for the relief of certain volunteer and regular soldiers of the late war and the war with Mexico;

A bill (H. R. 6243) for the relief of Conrad Claycomb; and Joint resolution (H. Res. 123) authorizing and directing Secretary of War to lend five hundred army tents to State of Tennessee.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

A bill (H. R. 4694) to remove the political disabilities of Paul F. Faison; and

A bill (H. R. 5859) to remove the political disabilities of Orris A. Browne, of Virginia.

The bill (H. R. 860) for the relief of Alfred Head was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

The bill (H. R. 1983) to ratify an act entitled "An act creating the county of San Juan," in the Territory of New Mexico, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Territories.

The bill (H. R. 5091) to be entitled "An act for the relief of Y. G. Rust," was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

The joint resolution (H. Res. 83) accepting the invitation of the French Republic to take part in an international exposition to be held in Paris in 1889, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The bill (H. R. 1426) supplementary to the act of July 1, 1862, entitled "An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes," and also of the act of July 2, 1864, and other acts amendatory of said first-named act, was read twice by its title.

Mr. CULLOM. I have looked over that bill and I find that it is a regulation bill, referring the enforcement of the law to the Interstate Commerce Commission. I move that it be referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

The bill (H. R. 1761) for the relief of the First National Bank of Portland, Oregon, for money advanced the Oregon Iron Works, the contractor in building the United States revenue-cutter Thomas Corwin, was read twice by its title.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. At the request of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] the bill will lie on the table.

The bill (H. R. 1473) authorizing the President of the United States to arrange a conference for the purpose of promoting arbitration and encouraging reciprocal commercial relations between the United States of America and the Republics of Mexico, Central and South America, and the Empire of Brazil, was read twice by its title.

Mr. FRYE. I ask that the bill lie on the table.

Mr. SHERMAN. Should it not be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations?

Mr. FRYE. I prefer to have it lie on the table for a day or two at any rate. We have reported a similar bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will lie on the table, if there be no objection.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the Speaker pro tempore of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. 147) for the relief of S. D. Barclay, G. D. Adams, and William H. Kimbrew;

A bill (S. 158) authorizing the Secretary of War to transfer to the trustees of the Porter Academy certain property in the city of Charleston, S. C.;

A bill (S. 451) granting a pension to Hannah C. De Witt; and

A bill (S. 455) for the relief of Andrew J. Lindsay.

DEPENDENT PENSION BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which is the bill (S. 181) granting pensions to ex-soldiers and sailors who are incapacitated from the performance of manual labor, and providing for pensions to dependent relatives of deceased soldiers and sailors.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After forty minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, March 6, 1888, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, March 5, 1888.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by Rev. WILLIAM BRUSH, D. D., president of Dakota University.

The Journal of Saturday's proceedings was read and approved.

BUSINESS REPORTED BY COMMITTEE ON COMMERCE.

Mr. CLARDY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the order which I send to the Clerk's desk be adopted.

The order was read, as follows:

It is hereby ordered that Tuesday, the 27th, and Wednesday, the 28th days of March, immediately after the hour for the consideration of bills by committees, be set apart for the consideration of bills and measures reported from the Committee on Commerce, in such order as the said committee may designate. This order not to conflict with prior orders, revenue bills, or general appropriation bills.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of this order?

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARDY] will except also business reported from the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. CLARDY. I trust the gentleman will not insist upon that.

The order was adopted.

BUSINESS REPORTED FROM THE COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY.

Mr. OATES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to offer a resolution for present consideration.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That it is hereby ordered by the House that Thursday, the 22d, and Saturday, the 24th days of March, immediately after the reading of the Journal, be set apart for the consideration of bills and resolutions reported from the Committee on the Judiciary, in such order as may be designated by said committee, but not to interfere with revenue bills, appropriation bills, or prior orders; and if displaced by any of these, or by any cause, the same days on each subsequent week shall be substituted for those named herein until two days, or so much thereof as may be necessary, are devoted to the consideration of measures reported by said committee.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the resolution at this time?

Mr. PAYSON. Mr. Speaker, before the question is put I suggest to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OATES] that the resolution ought to exclude the second morning hour, which is assigned to committees under the rules. If that amendment is made, I shall not object.

Mr. OATES. I hope the gentleman will not insist upon that.

Mr. PAYSON. I must object, unless that exception is made.

Mr. OATES. The business of the Committee on the Judiciary will be more than sufficient to consume the whole time.

Mr. HOLMAN. I shall have to ask that business from the Committee on the Public Lands be also excepted.

Mr. OATES. I ask the adoption of the resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. HOLMAN. I must ask, Mr. Speaker, that business from the Committee on the Public Lands be excepted.

Mr. OATES. The resolution excepts prior orders of the House, and I trust the gentleman from Indiana will not insist.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will again report the resolution.

The resolution was again read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. HOLMAN. I understood the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OATES] to consent that an exception should be made in favor of measures reported by the Committee on the Public Lands.

Mr. OATES. I hope the gentleman will not insist upon that.

Mr. HOLMAN. That committee has the right to report at any time, and it has important bills that it must bring forward at an early day. I trust my friend will agree to make the exception.

Mr. OATES. Well, I will accept the amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the gentleman from Indiana is accepted. Is there further objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Before consent is given I want to ask the gentlemen of the Judiciary Committee whether they propose to call up on one of those days the bill amending the law in relation to alien ownership of land in the Territories?

Mr. OATES. The resolution says measures "reported from the Committee on the Judiciary, in such order as may be designated by said committee." I have no right to specify.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Is it the purpose of the committee to allow discussion on that bill?

Mr. OATES. Oh, I presume it is, as upon every other bill.

The resolution as amended was adopted.

Mr. ROGERS moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution as amended was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

COLUMBIA ROAD, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House a letter from the president of the board of commissioners of the District of Columbia, submitting an estimate for constructing Columbia Road, middle section; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. NORWOOD, for one week, on account of important business.

To Mr. BACON, indefinitely, from and including to-day, on account of important business.

Mr. ENLOE. My colleague, Mr. PHELAN, desires leave of absence indefinitely, on account of important business.

There being no objection, leave was granted.

PAY OF EMPLOYÉS IN GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I desire to submit a privileged report from the Committee on Printing.

The Clerk read as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, February 27, 1888.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky, submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

"Resolved by the House of Representatives. That the Committee on Printing be, and are hereby, directed to inquire and report to the House the difference in the scale of prices now paid to employés at the Government Printing Office and that paid before January 1, 1887; and further, whether the former rate of prices ought not to be re-established."

The Committee on Printing have considered the resolution of the House submitted by Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky, and direct that the same be reported with a recommendation that it do pass.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. RICHARDSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I ask unanimous consent to make another report, which will not provoke any discussion.

Mr. CRISP. I call for the regular order.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. PLUMB. I rise to a question of privilege; and I ask the Clerk to read such portions as I have marked in a copy of the Chicago Times of Thursday, March 1, 1888.

The Clerk read as follows:

PLUMB'S LITTLE BUBBLE.

The Judiciary Committee of the National House of Representatives has been investigating the alleged discovery of our Illinois Representative, Mr. PLUMB, that the funding act of 1870 was tampered with after it had passed Congress and before it was signed by the President. According to Mr. PLUMB, the original bill made the 4 per cent. bonds redeemable "for" thirty years from the date of their issue, but the word "for" was erased and the word "after" substituted before the bill was signed.

The Judiciary Committee finds, after a thorough investigation, that the word "after" was used in the bill as it passed both Houses; that "for" was substituted by error in enrolling, and that the Committee on Enrolled bills corrected the error. This finding is substantially what the Times expected, because it did not believe the Forty-first Congress to have been absolutely idiotic. At the time when the act in question was framed the market price for United States bonds then outstanding did not justify a belief that 4 percents could then be sold at par in coin, even if they had a long time to run. It would be anything but complimentary to the intelligence of Senators and Representatives to suppose that any of them thought a 4 per cent. bond subject to call at any time could be marketed at par in coin. The 5 per cent. ten-forties, still having four years to run, were hardly at par in coin, and he must indeed have been a person of peculiarly constituted mind who could have supposed that a bond bearing one-fifth less interest could be sold at par.

* * * * * * *

Mr. PLUMB, it appears, is afflicted with another crotchet, of which the Judiciary Committee does not attempt to relieve him. It consists in the notion that even if there was no tampering (as there was not) "still the general funding act would make the bonds redeemable at the pleasure of the Government now that they can be sold at and above par." That makes sheer nonsense of the provisions making the bonds redeemable "after" certain terms of years, for the act expressly provides that no bond authorized thereby shall be sold at less than its par value in coin. If that provision was complied with every bond issued under the act became redeemable at the pleasure of the Government the moment it was issued, according to Mr. PLUMB's notion.

If Mr. PLUMB is capable of understanding tolerably plain English, he may get some light into his mind by reading the third paragraph of the funding act of 1870. Having provided for the issue of the three kinds of bonds, the act continues in the fourth section as follows: "That the payment of any of the bonds hereby authorized after the expiration of the said several terms of ten, fifteen, and thirty years shall be made in amounts to be determined from time to time by the Secretary of the Treasury at his discretion, the bonds so to be paid to be distinguished and described by the dates and numbers, beginning for each successive payment with the bonds of each class last dated and numbered," etc. Mr. PLUMB is requested to observe that the "after" here applies to all the several terms, the term of the 4 percents as well as of the other bonds. It is not easy to understand how he could get such ridiculous crotchets into his head in the face of such plain language.

* * * * * * *

Congressman PLUMB thought he had discovered a very wonderful mare's-nest in the funding act, but after he had made a line of figures as long as a piece of string, to show how much money this mare's-nest had cost the country, he found that it was nothing but a last year's hen's-nest, without even a china nest-egg in it, and that it hadn't cost the country even the straw it was made of. Mr. PLUMB's present reticence is very becoming to his particular sort of complexion.

Mr. PLUMB. It will be observed, Mr. Speaker, that the writer of the article just read claims to have information from the Judiciary Committee of the House in reference to what has been done by that committee on this subject. I do not myself know what has been done by the committee; but I know that I am grossly misrepresented as to the position I have taken upon the subject discussed in that article; and I beg the privilege of explaining in a few moments exactly what has been done in the premises.

The facts are these: On the 18th of January last I offered in the House certain resolutions asking for the investigation of alleged facts. I was not permitted to make any explanation on that occasion and objections were made to entertaining the resolutions. On the 24th of January I again offered those resolutions, and they were referred to the Judiciary Committee for consideration. Six weeks have since elapsed and so far as I know that committee has made no report. Yet this correspondent of a journal of widely extended circulation—one that circulates in my own district—pretends to tell what has been done by the committee and at the same time misrepresents very grossly the position which I have taken on the subject.

A few days ago there was under discussion in this House a bill reported by the Ways and Means Committee to provide for the purchase of 4 and 4½ per cent. bonds. I desired on that occasion to explain my position. I had a carefully prepared speech which does justice in so far as it tells clearly what my position is upon the whole subject. I now ask simply——

Mr. GLOVER. I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PLUMB] will suspend his remarks. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. GLOVER] raises a question of order.

Mr. GLOVER. My point of order is made for the purpose of raising the question how far the remarks of the gentleman from Illinois constitute a question of privilege.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri makes the point of order that the matter now submitted to the House does not present a question of privilege.

Mr. PLUMB. I ask simply this——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is ready to decide the question.

Mr. PLUMB. In view of the circumstances of the case, I simply ask that the speech which I prepared and which I had not the opportunity to deliver the other day may be printed in the RECORD, so that the House and the country may understand my position.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to printing the remarks of the gentleman in the RECORD? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

[Mr. PLUMB'S speech will be found in the Appendix.]

Mr. CULBERSON. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PLUMB] that the Committee on the Judiciary has very carefully investigated the matter involved in his resolution, and has agreed practically and substantially upon a report to be made, but the report is not quite ready to be presented to the House. I think it will be by Tuesday next.

Mr. WEAVER. And the whole matter will come up for consideration at that time?

Mr. CULBERSON. I know nothing about the article which has been read from the newspaper.

Mr. PLUMB. I find no fault whatever with anything done by the committee; my only complaint is as to the publication of this article, which purports to give the conclusions of a committee which has not yet reported, and in doing so grossly misrepresents me.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order has been called for. The first business in order is the call of States and Territories for the introduction of bills and resolutions.

SETTLERS UPON DES MOINES RIVER LANDS.

Mr. OATES (by request) introduced a bill (H. R. 8023) for the relief of the settlers upon the land along the Des Moines River above Raccoon Forks, in the State of Iowa; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

PROCEEDS OF CAPTURED COTTON.

Mr. McRAE introduced the following resolution; which was read and referred to the Committee on Claims:

Whereas Senate Executive Document No. 23, Forty-third Congress, second session, pages 36, 37, shows that there were collected by E. B. Fugua, an agent of the Treasury Department appointed for the purpose of collecting captured and abandoned property in the county of Lafayette, Arkansas, two lots of cotton, one of 150 bales, and one of 70 bales, the net proceeds of which two lots in the Treasury aggregate $11,176.87: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed at his earliest opportunity to report to Congress, for its information, whether claim has been made for the proceeds of said cotton or any part thereof, and what action was taken thereon.

CORRECTION.

Mr. WHITE, of New York. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WHITE, of New York. I desire first to make a parliamentary inquiry as to whether, when the RECORD correctly reports me, but in a case where I answered under a misapprehension a question asked by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BREWER], I can, after having seen the question, make the proper answer to it and have the RECORD show that correction?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that it would not be in order pending this call. The Chair will recognize the gentleman hereafter for that purpose.

INTERNAL REVENUE.

Mr. BIGGS (by request) introduced a bill (H. R. 8024) to amend section 3242 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to internal revenue; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC AFFAIRS, SAMOA.

Mr. MORROW introduced the following resolution of inquiry; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs:

Resolved, That the President be, and he hereby is, requested, if in his opinion it be not incompatible with the public interests, to communicate to the House all information in possession of the executive department, together with the correspondence between the Government of the United States and its consular or other agents at the Navigators' (Samoa) Islands, touching public affairs at said islands; the seizure and deportation of the late King Malietoa, with whom this Government has entered into certain treaty stipulations, and the difficulties that have recently taken place concerning the government of said islands and the due administration of the law thereunder; and also such other correspondence as may have been had with European governments, and particularly with the Empire of Germany, respecting the government of those islands; and that the President inform the House what measures, if any, have been taken to protect the rights and property of American citizens located at said islands.

UNITED STATES COURTS, FLORIDA.

Mr. DAVIDSON, of Florida, introduced a bill (H. R. 8025) to amend an act entitled "An act to extend the jurisdiction of the circuit and district courts of the United States for the southern district of Florida," approved February 3, 1879; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

CAPRON COLLECTION OF JAPANESE ART WORKS.

Mr. DAVIDSON, of Florida, also introduced a bill (H. R. 8026) providing for the purchase of the Capron collection of Japanese art works; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Library, and ordered to be printed.

NATIONAL ART COMMISSION.

Mr. DAVIDSON, of Florida, also introduced a bill (H. R. 8027) to establish a national art commission; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Library, and ordered to be printed.

SUITS BY ILLINOIS AGAINST THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Illinois, introduced a bill (H. R. 8028) to authorize the State of Illinois to commence and prosecute suits against the United States in the Supreme Court of the United States; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

CHICAGO, BURLINGTON AND QUINCY RAILROAD STRIKE.

Mr. WHITE, of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I ask consent to submit at this time a resolution and have it read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has a right to have it read when presented for reference under this call.

Mr. WHITE, of Indiana. I ask to have it read and desire to be heard for a few moments upon it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas there has been inaugurated a great strike on the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy Railroad, which, if not speedily checked, will end in widespread destitution and suffering, not only to those immediately engaged in it but to thousands of others who, though not directly connected therewith, yet nevertheless are greatly affected by the continuance and prolongation of said strike: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That a special committee of five of the House of Representatives be appointed by the Speaker to proceed at once to Chicago and there investigate the condition of affairs in relation to said strike, and that they be empowered and requested to act as mediators between the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy Railroad and Chief Arthur, of the locomotive engineers, and bring about a settlement of the pending troubles and grievances which will be amicable and agreeable to both parties, so that the strike will terminate; and that said committee may employ a stenographer, administer oaths, examine witnesses, and compel the attendance of persons and the production of books and papers; and the expense of such investigation shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This resolution will be referred to the Committee on Rules.

Mr. WHITE, of Indiana. Will it be in order to be heard on this resolution?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Not under this call.

Mr. DUNHAM. Does not that properly belong to the Committee on Commerce? It is a matter investigating a strike on a railroad that passes from one State into another.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. But it provides for the appointment of a special committee, and hence belongs to the Committee on Rules.

Mr. DUNHAM. So did the proposition to investigate the Reading matter, but it was sent to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. WHITE, of Indiana. The question is not only to investigate but to terminate that strike.

Mr. DUNHAM. I move the reference of the resolution to the Committee on Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WHITE, of Indiana. The only objection I have is that it will delay the matter.

AMENDMENT TO THE RULES.

Mr. CHEADLE submitted the following resolution; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Rules:

Resolved, That after the reading of the Journal and the reference of business on the Speaker's table each day, there shall be one-half hour allowed for the consideration of measures on the Calendars by unanimous consent; and in recognizing members to ask unanimous consent for the consideration of business the Speaker shall proceed as follows: He shall call five names, beginning at the first name on the roll, and when they shall have been called he shall then call five names, beginning at the last name on the roll, alternating in this manner until every member shall have been called: Provided, That no member who has once been called shall be again recognized until every name shall have been called: And provided further, That the Speaker shall not entertain any motion for unanimous consent to consider any measure except during the half hour above provided.

TRANSFER OF FUNDS IN UNITED STATES TREASURY.

Mr. THOMAS, of Illinois (by request), introduced a bill (H. R. 8029) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to transfer certain funds in the United States Treasury, and making the same subject to the requisition of the Secretary of the Navy; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered so be printed.

PENSIONS.

Mr. FULLER presented a resolution of the Twenty-second General Assembly of Iowa, asking the immediate repeal of that part of the law of March 3, 1879, known as the arrears limit; also asking the passage of a law granting to all honorably discharged soldiers and sailors of the late war a service pension, and also asking the passage of the prisoners-of-war pension bill; which was referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Mr. HOLMES presented a joint resolution passed by the Legislature of the State of Iowa, requesting its Senators and Representatives in Congress to favor the repeal of that part of the pension law known as the arrears limit; also requesting the enactment of a law giving to all honorably discharged soldiers and sailors a service pension; also for the immediate adoption of the prisoners-of-war pension bill; which was referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Mr. HOLMES. I ask that the joint resolution be printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair can not entertain a request for unanimous consent during this call.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT CRESTON, IOWA.

RECORDS OF THE REBELLION.

Mr. GROSVENOR submitted the following resolution; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs:

Whereas the House of Representatives did, on the 12th day of January, 1888, request the Secretary of War to inform the House whether, among other things, there had been any departure in the compilation of the Records of the War of the Rebellion as now carried on from the plan adopted when the work of compilation was in charge of the late Lieut. Col. R. N. Scott, "either in the arrangement or the subject-matter to be published;" to which, on February 14, 1888, the Secretary of War replied, upon the authority of the compiler, Lieut. Col. H. M.

Lazelle, that there had been no change, but that in both the arrangement and the subject-matter to be published the former "instructions and requirements have been rigidly observed;" and

Whereas there is now good reason for the belief that unofficial matter, which contradicts the real official history of the transaction to which it relates, has been adopted as official and inserted in volume 20, part 2, of the Records of the War of the Rebellion: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs be, and it is hereby, instructed to ascertain whether unofficial matter has been introduced into the said volume of the War Records; and if so introduced, under what circumstances and by whose authority it was done, and to report all the facts in the case to the House of Representatives.

Mr. GIFFORD introduced a bill (H. R. 8066) to divide the Bismarck land district, in Dakota, and create an additional land district therein; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Territories, and ordered to be printed.

CASH SALES OF PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. LANDES introduced a bill (H. R. 8067) granting to the State of Illinois 2 per cent. of the net proceeds of the cash sales of public lands in said State; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

PAYMENT OF INTEREST ON BONDED DEBT, ETC.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas, introduced a bill (H. R. 8068) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to anticipate the payment of interest on the bonded debt of the United States, and to provide for special deposits of the public money; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDING, HUNTSVILLE, ALA.

Mr. WHEELER introduced a bill (H. R. 8069) to increase the limit of cost for the public building about to be erected at Huntsville, Ala.; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

RAILWAY MAIL SERVICE.

Mr. BLOUNT introduced a bill (H. R. 8070) relating to the railway mail service, and to authorize certain printing therefor; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

REDEMPTION OF GOVERNMENT BONDS.

Mr. HOGG introduced a bill (H. R. 8071) revising the law relating to the purchase and redemption of Government bonds, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

IMPROVEMENT OF KENTUCKY RIVER BY THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. McCREARY presented the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD:

Resolution in relation to the improvement of the Kentucky River by the United States.

Whereas the State of Kentucky, by act of January 24, 1880, transferred and ceded to the United States the five locks and dams constructed by the State on the Kentucky River, together with all the grounds and appurtenances belonging to the same, which cost the State more than $1,000,000, for the purpose of enabling the United States to continue the slack-water navigation of said river to the inexhaustible supplies of coal, iron, and timber found on the upper waters of said river; and

Whereas the State of Kentucky has contributed to the Treasury of the United States, under the existing internal-revenue laws, more than $150,000,000, and as yet the General Government has only rebuilt the five original dams so ceded to it by the State, and the great purpose intended to be accomplished by the cession of said improvements remains unfulfilled: Therefore,

Be it resolved by the General Assembly of the Commonwealth of Kentucky, That our Senators in the Congress of the United States be instructed and our Representatives be requested to urge upon that body the propriety of making such appropriations for the continuation of the slack-water navigation of said river as will most speedily carry out the purpose of this State in making the cession aforesaid, and thereby secure to the people of Kentucky, and to the people of the Ohio and Mississippi Valleys generally, the benefits resulting from the extension of said navigation to the regions aforesaid.

Resolved, That the governor of this State be requested to forward to each of the Senators and Representatives of this State in the Congress of the United States a copy of this preamble and resolution.

BEN. JOHNSON,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.
J. W. BRYAN,
Speaker of the Senate.

Approved February 6, 1888.

S. B. BUCKNER.

By the Governor:

GEO. M. ADAMS, Secretary of State.

CLASSIFICATION OF ALBUMENIZED PAPER, ETC.

Mr. BAKER, of New York, introduced a joint resolution (H. Res. 128) to regulate the classification of albumenized or sensitized paper, used for photographic printing; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

HARBOR OF CHARLOTTE, N. Y.

Mr. BAKER, of New York, presented the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD:

Whereas it appears by the report of the Chief of Engineers in regard to river and harbor improvements for 1887, and by the report of the local engineer in charge (Captain Palfrey), that the harbor at Charlotte, in the State of New York, and the piers thereof are in need of much repair, and that portions of the pier or breakwater on both the easterly and westerly sides of the river and harbor have been broken and swept away; and

Whereas it appears from said reports that there are needed for necessary repairs during the coming year the sum of $30,000, and for the removal of old guide-piles along the channel face of the piers, which have become a serious damage and danger to shipping, the sum of $1,500; and

Whereas it further appears from the said reports that the sum of $25,000 is necessary for doing certain dredging imperatively demanded in the interest of commerce; and

Whereas it further appears that the sum of $11,300 is necessary for contingencies in and about the prosecuted repairs and improvements of such harbor; making a total of $67,800; and

Whereas it appears from the report of the Chief of Engineers that the amount necessary to be expended for the completion of the existing project for the improvement of Charlotte Harbor and of deepening the channel to the full depth of 15 feet is $72,750; and

Whereas the Chief of Engineers recommends that the sum of $25,000 only be appropriated for continuing the work of said improvements under and according to the existing project during the coming season, and omits to recommend in regard to the necessary repairs, etc., as above stated any definite sum; and

Whereas it is alleged by sailors and masters of vessels frequenting said harbor that the entrance thereto is so shallow that vessels drawing fourteen feet of water get aground in mid-channel, entering and leaving the harbor, and that in heavy weather it is very hazardous for vessels to enter or leave the harbor, in consequence of the shoals and of the neglect or inability to maintain the necessary repairs to and prosecute the projected improvements to said harbor: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That the Secretary of War, by the Chief of Engineers aforesaid, be, and he is hereby, requested, if consistent with the public welfare, to report to this House immediately—

First. Whether the amount recommended by him is intended to embrace and cover the necessary dredging, repairs to piers, and the removal of the obstructions aforesaid, in full; and

Second. Whether, in case the amount recommended by the engineer in charge, namely, $67,800, if appropriated, may not be profitably expended during the coming season in promoting the efficiency and the commercial welfare of said harbor, and in facilitating the use thereof by the commerce of the lakes; and

Third. Whether in the opinion of the Chief of Engineers the improvements recommended by the engineer in charge at that locality may not be made during the coming season, and whether the same should not be completed with the least possible delay; and

Fourth. Whether the $25,000 recommended in the Engineer's Report for 1887 to be appropriated to Charlotte Harbor by Congress at this session includes in part, and, if so, what part of the $30,000 recommended for necessary repairs, and whether the same includes in part, and, if so, how much of the $25,000 recommended for dredging, and whether it includes any part of the $11,300 recommended for contingencies, and, if so, how much thereof, and whether it includes any part of $1,500 recommended for the removal of guide piles, and, if so, how much thereof; and Fifth. The amounts which the Chief of Engineers deems necessary to be appropriated for Charlotte Harbor, New York, for the improvement thereof by way of completing the present project, and also the amount for necessary repairs and for removals of old piers, and the repairs of breaches made therein by the storms of 1886-'87, and also for the removal of the guide piles aforesaid, and for necessary dredging, stating the same separately, and how much may be profitably expended for such purposes during the next fiscal year, and whether the same may be fully completed within said fiscal year.

COMMERCIAL UNION WITH CANADA.

Mr. HITT introduced a joint resolution (H. Res. 129) to promote commercial union with Canada; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. CRISP. I now call up for present consideration the contested-election case of McDuffie vs. Davidson, from the Fourth Congressional district of the State of Alabama.

Mr. CRAIN. Mr. Speaker, I was to be recognized this morning to move to suspend the rules for the purpose of taking up House resolution No. 120, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ADAMS] was to be recognized for the purpose of demanding a second. I now propose, sir, to antagonize the motion of the gentleman from Georgia with a motion to suspend the rules and take up for present consideration the resolution to which I have referred.

Mr. CRISP. The only way the gentleman can do that is, of course, to vote down the motion to proceed to the consideration of the election case.

Mr. PERKINS. I would like permission of the gentleman from Georgia and the House to make a report from the Committee on Indian Affairs. To-morrow is set apart for the consideration of business from that committee, as well as the next day, and I desire simply to get the bill on the Calendar.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I wish to make the same request for the same reason.

Mr. CRISP. I have no objection, under these circumstances.

UNITED PEORIAS AND MIAMIES.

Mr. PERKINS, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported, as a substitute for House bill 1402, a bill (H. R. 8074) to provide for allotment of land in severalty to the United Peorias and Miamies in Indian Territory; which was read a first and second time, referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

The bill H. R. No. 1402 was ordered to lie on the table.

CHEROKEE FREEDMEN AND OTHERS.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 5066) to secure to the Cherokee freedmen and others their proportions of certain proceeds of land under the act of March 3, 1883; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. CRISP. I now call up the contested-election case of McDuffie vs. Davidson.

Mr. CRAIN. Mr. Speaker, I will not insist upon antagonizing the motion of the gentleman from Georgia provided I can get unanimous consent on the part of the House to consider House joint resolution No. 120 on next Saturday, immediately after the morning hour, giving one hour to each side for discussion, and then to take a vote.

Mr. NELSON. What is that?

Mr. CRISP. I should be very glad, Mr. Speaker, if that order could be made.

Mr. BURROWS. Can we be advised as to what this request is?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to consider House joint resolution 120 on Saturday next.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. I object.

Mr. CRAIN. This is a resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution changing the term of members of Congress and altering the date of the inauguration of the President.

Mr. BLAND. I think the Constitution is very well as it is. I object.

Mr. CRAIN. Then I raise the question of consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is, Will the House now proceed to consider the election case?

The question was taken; and the House determined to consider the election case.

Mr. CRISP. Before proceeding with the consideration of this case I would like to have some understanding with gentlemen upon the other side as to the time to be occupied in debate. We have had some talk and an informal agreement, but I am exceedingly anxious, in view of the business upon the Calendars, and in view of the fact that to-morrow and the day after, as well as several other days, have been assigned to the consideration of other business, to shorten as much as possible the debate on this case. I therefore appeal to my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], representing the minority of the committee, to see if we can not reduce the time we informally agreed upon.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. Speaker, I do not see how we can, in fairness, reduce the time any further. I assented to the very shortest time I thought could possibly be allowed in this case, in view of the demands for time on the part of the minority and on this side of the House for an opportunity to be heard upon the question.

Mr. CRISP. That being so, I would ask unanimous consent that the debate on this case be limited to seven hours, three and a half on each side, and four hours to be consumed to-day.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that the rules provide that debate shall close on any question by the operation of the previous question. The gentleman can demand the previous question, or give notice of his intention to demand the previous question at a certain time, or the House might agree to consider that the previous question should be considered as ordered at a certain time.

Mr. CRISP. I take it for granted when the minority and the majority of the committee have agreed upon that order that the House will acquiesce and carry it out.

Mr. McCOMAS. I shall object to all unanimous consent if it is to be understood that four hours are to be consumed to-day. That means the debate will take place before empty benches, and that we shall be called upon to vote without having heard or seen anything of the case.

Mr. CRISP. I shall appeal to the House to carry out the agreement arrived at between the majority and minority of the committee, and limit the debate in the manner I have suggested.

Mr. McCOMAS. Let the time be equally divided. That is to say, use a portion of the time to-day and the remainder of it to-morrow.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would state to the gentleman from Georgia that he can give notice of his intention to demand the previous question at a certain hour.

Mr. CRISP. There is no reason why the House should not sit to-day until a quarter of 6. We have made an agreement with the minority of the committee, which I shall ask the House to carry out, that there shall be four hours of debate to-day and three to-morrow.

Mr. LODGE. When that agreement was made it was thought the election case would have been taken up earlier to-day. I think it would be better to take the four hours to-morrow, when we shall have plenty of time, because we can begin immediately after the reading of the Journal.

Mr. CRISP. We are interfering with the assignment of time to the Committee on Indian Affairs. We are forced to take some of their time away, and I trust the members of the House will put up with a little inconvenience of sitting here for three-quarters of an hour after 5 o'clock so as to facilitate the public business.

Mr. NELSON. In view of the fact that to-morrow has been assigned to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and inasmuch as the election case is likely to occupy that time, I ask unanimous consent that Saturday be substituted and given to the Committee on Indian Affairs in lieu of to-morrow.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the proposition of the gentleman from Minnesota?

Mr. PAYSON. Is not Saturday assigned to the Committee on the Judiciary?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There is no special order for Saturday. The Chair hears no objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. CRISP. I desire to say now, before the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MAISH] begins, that it is the purpose of the Committee on Elections to ask the House to consider this case until its conclusion, resuming it to-morrow morning immediately after the reading of the Journal. I yield one hour to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MAISH].

THE LATE GENERAL JOSÉ ANTONIO PAEZ.

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America:

I transmit herewith, for the information and consideration of Congress, a report of the Secretary of State, with accompanying correspondence, touching the action of the Government of Venezuela in conveying to that country for interment the remains of the distinguished Venezuelan soldier and statesman, General José Antonio Paez, and take pleasure in expressing my concurrence in the suggestion therein referred to, that the employment of a national vessel of war for the transportation of General Paez's remains from New York to La Guayra be authorized and provided for by Congress.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, Washington, March 5, 1888.

INTERNATIONAL EXHIBITION IN BAVARIA.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a report from the Secretary of State relative to an invitation which the royal Bavarian Government has extended to this Government to participate in the Third International Exhibition of the Fine Arts, which is to be held at Munich, Bavaria, during the present year.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, Washington, March 5, 1888.

THE FISHERIES QUESTION.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I herewith transmit a letter from the Secretary of State, accompanied by documents and correspondence in relation to the recent negotiations with Great Britain concerning American fishing interests in British North American waters.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, Washington, March 5, 1888.

NOTE.—The documents and correspondence accompanying this message have been sent to the Senate with a similar message.

CONTESTED ELECTION—M'DUFFIE VS. DAVIDSON.

The House proceeded to consider the contested-election case of McDuffie vs. Davidson, Fourth district of Alabama.

Mr. MAISH. Mr. Speaker, I suppose it will not be deemed a violent presumption to assume that the members of this House have read both the majority and minority reports of the committee, although it is perhaps extravagant to suppose that they have read the evidence. I intend, in order to elucidate as much as possible this case, to explain the points of difference between the minority and majority reports.

The report of the minority of the committee, Mr. Speaker, in my judgment, starts out with a huge fallacy. We are told that this case involves no legal question. I beg to say that I at least have imagined that it involved a great many legal questions; and I would have been obliged to the gentlemen of the minority of the committee if they had advised me earlier that this case was devoid of such questions; for it would have saved me many days and nights of laborious study. I nevertheless think the case does involve important legal questions.

At the threshold of the case the minority of the committee propounds the extraordinary proposition that in matter of elections Congress has plenary and absolute power.

I suppose by "Congress" is here meant the House of Representatives, for Congress as such has nothing to do with the question. It may be noticed that we are reminded of this plenary power of the House of Representatives whenever it is proposed to overthrow the accepted and ordinary rules of evidence. On all such occasions we are told that it is only necessary to invoke this extraordinary power of the House in order to dispose of every question of evidence that may arise in the case. Now, I totally deny that this House possesses the arbitrary power that is claimed for it by the minority of the committee. In order that the House may understand the extraordinary propositions of law that are presented by the minority report, I will read a few paragraphs from it. We are here told that—

The powers of Congress in regard to the election of its members are plenary and absolute.

There is no limit whatever—

The minority say—to the power of Congress in regard to the evidence by which it may seek to determine the vote of a Congressional district.

That a majority of the House of Representatives may assume such power I do not deny, but that they can lawfully exercise such power in determining the rights of members to seats in this House in defiance of the established rules of evidence I do deny. The Constitution of the United States provides that the House shall judge of the election, returns and qualification of its members—shall judge, Mr. Speaker.

What does the word "judge" there mean, if it does not mean that they shall judicially determine the question of the election of members? To assume any other position upon this provision of the Constitution is to say that the House of Representatives can substitute an election here in this body for an election in the district. A famous civilian once said that "right consists in the moral power of the individual." The power to do a thing does not imply the right to do it.

Louis XVI when he heaped a long succession of wrongs and cruelties upon the French people did so under an assumption of right, but his unfortunate claim plunged that country into the horrors of the French revolution. Charles I when he demanded the ship money did so under a claim of right, but he lost his head for his folly, to the enormous advantage of the English people. George III claimed that he had a right to tax America, and in his attempt to enforce that supposed right he lost the fairest jewel in his diadem, but by that loss the glorious Republic of America was gained.

Now, Mr. Speaker, there is some limit to the power of this House when it is asked to adjudicate the question of the election of one of its members. I maintain, sir, that the ordinary rules of evidence, which have been for ages found indispensable to the investigation of truth, are binding upon the members of this House when they come to investigate an election case. I have deemed it necessary, Mr. Speaker, thus to comment upon this assumption of despotic power on the part of the minority of the committee, because, as will be seen later on, they ask this House to seat the contestant upon these principles. But, after this extraordinary parade of despotic power, we are complacently told by the minority that—

There is, however, no need to resort to the plenary power of Congress in this case. The testimony is all regular and legal, and would be admitted anywhere to rebut and impeach the official documents, for which purpose it is entirely competent.

Why, then, appeal to the alleged extraordinary power of Congress if it is not necessary? Why remind the House of this despotic power that is claimed for it if that power is not applicable to this case? But, sir, I deny, totally deny, that the evidence is, as alleged here, "regular and legal and would be admitted anywhere to rebut and impeach the official documents, for which purpose it is entirely competent." I allege that it is not legal, that it is not proper, that it would not be admitted in any decent court of justice for the purposes for which it was introduced in this case.

Here, then, is the issue fairly made. Now, let us examine for a few moments what the evidence is, and that the House may better understand what it proposes to establish, let us first refer to the provisions of law that are made in the State of Alabama for the ascertainment of the result of elections and the detection of frauds when perpetrated. These provisions are as admirably adapted for the purpose for which they are designed as any code of laws that ever came under my observation. They provide that five election officers shall be appointed, one returning officer, three inspectors and two clerks, and that among the inspectors the minority shall be represented by at least one. In receiving the ballots one inspector is required to take the ballot from the voter; it is then in turn handed to both the other inspectors, the last one depositing it in the box. The inspector receiving the ballot from the voter is required to call out audibly and distinctly the name of the voter, and each of the two clerks is required to write down the name on separate lists, called poll-lists. Immediately after the polls are closed the ballots are required to be counted.

The returning officer is required to take from the ballot-box the ballots one by one, at the same time reading aloud the name of the person thereon and the office for which such person is voted for, and after the result is ascertained the officers are required to make a statement, signed by them, which statement is to be returned to the returning officer of the county, together with one of the poll-lists certified by them, in a sealed box furnished for the purpose, within forty-eight hours after the election. The ballots are also required to be folded, sealed, and labeled, so as to indicate what they are; then they are to be returned into the ballot-box, which is also to be closed, sealed, marked to indicate its contents, and then the box, with a poll-list and the ballots, is to be given into the custody of one of the inspectors, who is required to retain possession of it for the period of sixty days, when, on being required to deliver it for purposes of contest, he surrenders it. Now, Mr. Speaker, it is a marvelous circumstance in this case that none of these records of the election were produced in evidence, excepting the statements for one county, and one or two poll-lists. The ballots in no instance were produced in evidence. They are to-day, as they were placed, in the ballot-box, sealed and labeled, in the custody of the inspector to whom they were intrusted on the day of the election or the day after.

Now, we maintain that law and precedent establish the position that the best evidence in this case are the poll-lists, the statements and the ballots thus preserved under the laws of the State of Alabama. The contestant in this case, however, has not seen fit to produce any of these records of the election. In 33 of the specifications of contest he alleges distinctly that ballots which were deposited for him were falsely and fraudulently counted for the contestee. To give an example of the specifications I will read specification 13:

13. That at election held in voting beat or precinct commonly called Richmond, in the county of Dallas, in said district, on the day and year before stated, there were cast for me as candidate for Congress to the Fiftieth Congress of the United States, 187 ballots by legal and qualified electors of said beat. At the same time and place and election there were cast for you 35 ballots by legal and qualified electors of said beat; yet your partisans who were holding the election in your interest failed or refused to count any votes for me, but with intent to defraud me counted tickets with my name on them as votes for you, thereby depriving me of 187 ballots honestly voted for me. I shall in this contest insist on righting this wrong and having the 187 ballots cast for me at said election counted for me.
